CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 3, 1913.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, that down deep in the hearts of men is an earnest, insistent desire for all that is best physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually; that the trend of humanity is upward, not downward; forward, not backward; toward the ideals of life; that faith is stronger than doubt, hope than despair, peace than war, love than hate, justice than injustice, mercy than revenge; which promises victory to every man under the divine leadership of the Son of God, the captain of our salvation. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by former Senator Chauncey M. Depew, of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right already.

Mr. MANN. This is a little different proposition, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is it? The Chair supposed it was an ordinary extension of a tariff speech.

Mr. POWERS. I want to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by ex-Senator Depew at a dinner given in New York and recently published.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] objects.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the first paragraph of the wool schedule was read last night. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that I want to offer as a substitute a complete wool schedule. I would like to move to strike out the paragraphs in relation to wool in the old schedule and leave this as a substitute, as it will appear more logical, although not strictly in accordance with the rules in that way. Otherwise I shall move to strike out this paragraph and submit a substitute for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the time comes there will be no objection to the gentleman from New York making his proposition. I have no desire not to allow the gentleman to present his amendment in the way he desires.

Mr. PAYNE. And it will not make any difference in the result, I may say. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. MANN. Let us see if we can arrange an understanding about the amendment and the debate. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will offer an amendment covering the entire wool schedule, an amendment which is the same as the bill introduced in the last Congress on this side, and substantially the same which was offered in the motion to recommit, I believe, when the last wool bill passed Congress. Whether any other gentleman desires to offer any other amendment I do not know, but perhaps we can ascertain now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will be glad if the gentleman can ascertain.

Mr. MURDOCK. I know of none.

Mr. SINNOTT. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. To what paragraph?

Mr. SINNOTT. To paragraph 300.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it wise to offer any amendments, but I would like to have some time.

Mr. MANN. We will try to arrange that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I undersand that one gentleman on that side desires to offer a separate amendment to paragraph 300, and outside of that the only amendment your side desires to offer is Mr. PAYNE's substitute.

Mr. MANN. If we can get an agreement as to time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can get an agreement as to time I would suggest, as part of that agreement, that we read the bill through now, in order that the committee may perfect the schedule with one or two technical amendments that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] wants to suggest at the end of that time.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to a paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is it about?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is on the subject of the duty on raw wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That makes two amendments.

I suggest that after the bill is read through we go back and allow the two gentlemen who desire to offer individual amendments to dispose of them with 10 minutes' debate on each amendment, and then if we can reach an agreement about time at the close of general debate we will have a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think that is satisfactory, but I think we want two hours on this side for general debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. MANN. That is cutting it to the quick.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will take an hour and a half, I will limit this side to one hour.

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman give us two hours? This is our live subject, and we will not take up so much time in that way as we would to read the schedule through in the ordinary way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will agree to this if for the balance of the day we can cut out political debate. I know the gentleman can not control Members on his side and I can not on this, but if for the balance of the day we can cut out political speeches and discuss the schedule I will agree to two hours if the gentleman will aid me in endeavoring to keep his side from indulging in purely political debate. We have reached the point in the bill where we have discussed the whole political aspect of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is going to decide whether the debate is political or not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This House can always be depended upon, if it makes an agreement, to live up to the spirit of it. A man who does not live up to the spirit of an agreement is condemned by his fellow Members.

Mr. MURDOCK. If this agreement carries, I suppose the gentleman from Illinois will see that I have some time.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman wants two hours, I will ask for an hour and a half on this side. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the schedule may be read through by paragraphs immediately without debate; that when the two paragraphs are reached where gentlemen desire to offer amendments they may offer the amendments and that debate on the amendments be limited to 10 minutes, 5 on that side and 5 on this. At the conclusion of the reading of the schedule the gentleman from New York shall offer his substitute for the entire schedule, and on that there shall be three hours and a half general debate, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and an hour and a half by myself. At the conclusion of the general debate, whenever it may occur, because I may not use the entire hour and a half, there shall be a vote on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that Schedule K be now read through entirely without debate, except that when Paragraph 295 is read and Paragraph 300 the gentleman from South Dakota shall have opportunity to offer an amendment to Paragraph 295, and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] shall have an opportunity to offer an amendment to Paragraph 300; that there shall be 10 minutes' debate on each paragraph and amendments thereto, to be divided equally between the two sides of the House; that at the end of the reading of the schedule the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] shall be permitted to offer a substitute for the entire schedule; that debate upon that shall continue for three and a half hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and an hour and a half by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and at the end of that debate a vote shall be taken on the substitute and the schedule concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the arrangement as proposed is extremely fair from my point of view, but it leaves the disposition of the time on this side of the House in the hands of those who are entirely in favor of the substitute. As one of the representatives of a city in which woolen manufacture is the most important industry, I would like to understand if I shall have some time in general debate?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman need not worry about that.

Mr. MANN. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I shall be as fair as I was when I nominated the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go on the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MOORE. I should like to have at least 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Paragraph 295 has already been read, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. During the reading of the bill at some time I shall offer as a separate paragraph an amendment placing a duty upon raw wool; but I will do so during the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

296. Yarns made wholly or in chief value of wool, 20 per cent ad valorem.

297. Cloths, knit fabrics, felts not woven, and all manufactures of every description made, by any process, wholly or in chief value of wool, not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem.

298. Blankets and flannels, composed wholly or in chief value of wool, 25 per cent ad valorem; flannels composed wholly or in chief value of wool, valued at above 50 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem.

299. Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, and goods of similar description and character, composed wholly or in chief value of wool, and not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem.

300. Clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, and not specially provided for in this section, composed wholly or in chief value of wool, 35 per cent ad valorem.

301. Webbings, suspenders, braces, bandings, belting, bindings, cords, cords and tassels, and ribbons; any of the foregoing made of wool or of which wool or wool and india rubber are the component materials of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

302. Aubusson, Axminister, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 35 per cent ad valorem.

303. Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 30 per cent ad valorem.

304. Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 25 per cent ad valorem.

305. Velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 30 per cent ad valorem.

306. Tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, 20 per cent ad valorem.

307. Treble ingrain, 3-ply, and all-chain Venetian carpets, 20 per cent ad valorem.

308. Wool Dutch and 2-ply ingrain carpets, 20 per cent ad valorem.

309. Carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms, and Oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs, 50 per cent ad valorem.

310. Druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, 20 per cent ad valorem.

311. Carpets and carpeting of wool, flax, or cotton, or composed in part of any of them, not specially provided for in this section, and on mats, matting, and rugs of cotton, 20 per cent ad valorem.

312. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bed sides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting, made wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

313. Whenever in this section the word "wool" is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, or other like animals, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

314. Hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all hair on the skin of such animals, 20 per cent ad valorem.

315. Tops made from the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 25 per cent ad valorem.

316. Yarns made of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 30 per cent ad valorem.

317. Cloth and all manufactures of every description made of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

318. Plushes, velvets, and all other pile fabrics, cut or uncut, woven or knit, whether or not the pile covers the entire surface, made wholly or partly of the hair of the Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and articles made wholly or in chief value of such plushes or velvets, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the other amendments come in first, but I am not particular. I suppose the original text should be perfected first, but I will offer my amendment and have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] has advised the Chair that he does not care to offer the amendment that he indicated he would offer, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized to offer his amendment if he desires.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to offer it and have it pending a little later. This proceeding was arranged so speedily that I have not had quite time to finish the preparation of it.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to offering mine and having it pending.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it does not delay the procedure.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It will not delay the procedure at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the gentleman from South Dakota will be permitted to offer his amendment later. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] offers an amendment by way of a substitute for the schedule which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Striking out all of the paragraphs of Schedule K of section 1 of said act, from 360 to 395, inclusive of both, and also paragraphs 653 and 654 on page 129, and inserting in place thereof the following:

"1. All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the two following classes:

"2. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, and Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class two, and also the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

"3. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

"4. The standard samples of all wools, which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they may be needed.

"5. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood, from their present character, as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

"6. If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act, invoiced or entered as of class 2, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of class 2, shall contain any wool or hair subject to the rate of duty of class 1, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the rate of duty chargeable on wool of class 1; and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

"7. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1, if imported in the grease, shall be laid upon the basis of its clean content. The clean content shall be determined by scouring tests which shall be made according to regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1 imported in the grease shall be 18 cents per pound on the clean content, as defined above. If imported scoured, the duty shall be 19 cents per pound.

"8. The duty on all wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, imported in their natural condition, shall be 7 cents per pound. If scoured, 19 cents per pound: Provided, That on consumption of wools of class 2, including camel's hair, in the manufacture of carpets, druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and portions of carpets or carpeting hereafter manufactured or produced in the United States in whole or in part from wools of class 2, including camel's hair, upon which duties have been paid, there shall be allowed to the manufacturer or producer of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid less 1 per cent of such duties on the amount of the wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, contained therein; such drawback shall be paid under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"9. The duty on wools on the skin shall be 2 cents less per pound than is imposed upon the clean content as provided for wools of class 1, and 1 cent less per pound than is imposed upon wools of class 2 imported in their natural condition, the quantity to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"10. Top waste and slubbing waste, 18 cents per pound.

"11. Roving waste and ring waste, 14 cents per pound.

"12. Noils, carbonized, 14 cents per pound.

"13. Noils, not carbonized, 11 cents per pound.

"14. Garnetted waste, 11 cents per pound.

"15. Thread waste, yarn waste, and wool wastes not specified, 9½ cents per pound.

"16. Shoddy, mungo, and wool extract, 8 cents per pound.

"17. Woolen rags and flocks, 2 cents per pound.

"18. Combed wool or tops, made wholly or in part of wool, or camel's hair, 20 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem.

"19. Wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, but less advanced than yarn, not specially provided for in this section, 20 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem.

"20. On yarns, made wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty shall be 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 30 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 15 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 50 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 20 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 80 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem.

"21. On cloths, knit fabrics, flannels, felts, and all fabrics of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 60 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 60 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 40 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 45 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than $1 and not more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"22. On blankets and flannels for underwear composed wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 20 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound, 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 50 cents per pound, 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem.

"Provided, That on blankets over 3 yards in length the same duties shall be paid as on cloths.

"23. On ready-made clothing and articles of wearing apparel, knitted or woven, of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part and composed wholly or in part of wool, the rate of duty shall be as follows:

"If valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 60 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 40 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 60 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 45 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than $1 and not more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 60 per cent ad valorem.

"24. On all manufactures of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That if the component material of chief value in such manufactures is wood, paper, rubber, or any of the baser metals, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem, and if the component material of chief value in such manufactures is silk, fur, precious or semiprecious stones, or gold, silver, or platinum, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"25. On handmade Aubusson, Axminster, oriental, and similar carpets and rugs, made wholly or in part of wool, the rate of duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem; on all other carpets of every description, druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and portions of carpets or carpeting, made wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

"26. Whenever, in any schedule of this act, the word 'wool' is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other animal, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement there would be the privilege of offering two amendments from this side. I ask unanimous consent to modify the agreement so that the only amendment to be offered shall be the one offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as a substitute, and that the 10 minutes that were allowed be added to my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And the same on this side.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the agreement heretofore made be so modified that there shall be but one amendment, that offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as a substitute for the schedule, and that 10 minutes additional time be granted either side.

Mr. MANN. With no time on amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. With no time on amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to receive, without any very great wrenching of conscience, the vote of every gentleman in this Chamber who was a Member of the last Congress, on that side of the House. You have a record of voting first for a 20 per cent duty on wool. You carried that bill in this House and sent it to the Senate. It came back here, I believe, by the nearly unanimous vote of the Senate with a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem, which is just about the equivalent of the duties in my amendment.

That amendment was rejected in the House, went to a committee of conference, and the bill came back here by an agreement of the majority conferees carrying a duty of 29 per cent upon all wools. That conference report was agreed to by the affirmative vote, I think, of every gentleman on that side of the Chamber—substantially all of them. So that, unless your principles are changed overnight on this question, there should not be any serious objection on your side of the Chamber to adopting a rational duty on wool at about the figure that you voted only a year ago. The history of this amendment is, briefly, this: When we were considering the tariff question on wool four years ago it occurred to me that the sensible solution of the question was the pound duty on the actual wool content, whether it was wool in the grease, scoured wool, or wool in the cloth, and I took means to ascertain and get the evidence that this could be determined in whatever form the wool appeared by an analysis, and that it could be ascertained within 1 per cent, which, of course, would make no material difference. When the Tariff Board went to work upon this question I addressed them an open letter, calling attention to this suggestion of mine before the committee, and asked them to make an examination of that subject and report upon it. They did make the examination and they did report upon it, and the report showed a method of ascertaining exactly, as near as mathematics and science can ascertain anything, the quantity of wool not only in the grease but in scoured wool, and the amount of wool it took—clean content—to produce the scoured wool—that is, a pound of it—something of waste being lost in the operation, and so on to yarn and cloths and tops and manufactured articles of clothing, making a careful investigation and study and showing clearly in their report the facts on which these could be determined. Of course, in making tops there is a slight waste, and we took into consideration the amount of the waste and the value of the waste in comparison with a pound of wool, and so on all through the operation. In making clothing the waste of the manufactured cloth and the value of that waste, when resolved again into wool as it could be done, was considered. So there was the basis for a mathematical demonstration of the duty compensatory, after you had fixed the basic duty on the wool content in the grease—the duty compensatory rendered necessary because of the duty on the wool.

The great criticism made of Schedule K is that because in the arbitrary rates of compensatory duties that have been introduced into the tariff from time to time the duty on the wool in the cloth is much higher than it ought to be in order to compensate for the duty on the wool in the grease. These are not equally distributed, and so the schedule is inequitable, and there has grown up to be what has been called a concealed rate for the manufacturer, a concealed additional protection to the manufacturer when you come to put two, three, three and a half, and four times the rate for wool in the grease on the weight of the manufactured article, getting up to clothing as the final analysis. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does away with all these inequalities and puts a pound rate upon the wool in any form in which it appears. Then the question came as to what should be the rate on the wool, and, by the way, when we were making the McKinley bill we introduced the skirting clause, because it appeared before that committee that there was in various countries a custom of cutting off the tag, so to speak, and the wool on the leg and on the neck and on the head—trimming the fleece, skirting it, as it was called. In doing so they saved the freight rate on a great deal of dirt. These trimmings were afterwards scoured and brought into Great Britain in that shape. They saved money.

The skirting clause had the result of reducing the rate of duties on some wools and keeping it up on others, and so this inequality and this complaint arose about the skirting clause. Of course, the importers improved on the skirting business. Hence it came to pass that there was a lower protective duty on wool in the grease than the 11 cents a pound on first-class wools. This schedule will remove that difficulty and open up the wool markets of the world to the importers of wool in the United States and at the same time afford an equitable protective tariff, an equitable competitive rate, on the wools introduced into the United States. The board having reported this, in collaboration with my friend, Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, I went to work with the Tariff Board and had some sessions with them in order to determine several questions, some of which were questions of difference between the gentleman and myself. The gentleman from Connecticut, as is very well known, has been in favor of an ad valorem rate on wool, if there was any. I was in favor of a protective duty. I was as much opposed to an ad valorem rate on wool, which could be determined accurately by the pound in specific duty, as I was to all ad valorem rates wherever a specific duty was practicable, and we had to fight that out. The gentleman from Connecticut thought that 15 cents a pound would be a sufficient protective duty on wool content all through the schedule, making proper allowances for the wool wasted in manufacture.

After a careful study of the Tariff Board report I came to the conclusion that 18 cents a pound on the wool schedule would be not only a fair measure of protection, but would be just the measure of protection, as near as we could calculate it, necessary on the wool content in order to make up the difference in the cost of production here and in the countries abroad. I am not saying that made up the exact difference in every case, no; but made up the difference in the very great proportion of the wool imported into the United States, and was a fair and equitable adjustment of the rate. Well, in the forming of the bill I got my way on this proposition both as to the duty on the wool content specific at 18 cents a pound instead of 15 cents a pound. The matter of figuring out the difference in the pound rate on wool, tops, wool in the cloth, and wool in the garment was a matter of figuring from the facts found in the Tariff Board's report. Those figures we asked the Tariff Board experts to sit down with their calculating machines and figure out, and after that had been done, even while it was being done, the gentleman from Connecticut, who works more hours in a day than I do—I need six or seven hours a day sleep every day, not like the President, who says he needs nine—I can get along very well with six or seven, and sometimes I thought the gentleman from Connecticut never slept; if he did, he must have slept with the experts of the Tariff Board—and he figured on all these propositions with them. We went over the figures very carefully after they were made, and I think that the figures in this proposed amendment are as nearly accurate on all of these different forms in which wool appears as they can be made. Now, in putting the duty on wool content there is one thing that stood out prominently in the present tariff on wool. The present tariff makes no difference whether the garment is made with 25 per cent of wool and 75 per cent of cotton or whether it is all wool and a yard wide. The rate of duty per pound of cloth is the same, and that is carried up into the garment and that creates a great inequality and a greater rate of protection on this class of goods, and that fact is responsible for the enormous equivalent ad valorem rate that we find in the Government report that you have been so free in exploiting to the people about the poor man's garment or the poor woman's garment. This proposed schedule strikes out all that protection on cotton found in the garment and leaves only the protection on the clean wool that is found in the manufactured article. I found it was a very easy process to burn out by acids any vegetable fiber that appeared, carbonizing the vegetable content and easily getting at the amount of clean wool content and the weight of it. That was easily found. When I found the proper weight for the proper duty per pound on the 18-cent basis, why, the problem was solved, and so easily—not easily, there was a good deal of work—we arranged the rate according to the Tariff Board's report, and we found ample warrant in the report of the Tariff Board to make up this schedule of duty on wool content in everything that should be covered by the protection of a tariff duty on the articles in Schedule K.

Having done that the question then was, What duty was necessary to make up the difference in the cost of conversion of wool into the manufactured article all along the line? There was no more question then of an inequitable rate on wool; it was a question of what duty was necessary on the manufacturing of wool to make up the difference in the cost here and abroad, and that was most carefully figured on the statements found in the report of the Tariff Board, and they are represented here in this amendment. Now, I want to say—because some of you gentlemen may not discover it—that in the original schedule as introduced two years ago the duty on tops was 20 cents a pound for the wool used in making tops, as there was a waste of 10 per cent that was to be accounted for. Twenty cents a pound on tops and 5 per cent for the conversion cost. I thought that was sufficient at that time. I have changed my mind 5 per cent from an examination of the subject. I find that the 5 per cent would be sufficient for tops at 70 cents per pound. I find it would not be sufficient for tops at 40 cents a pound.

The differential of 5 per cent was not enough. It does not make up the difference in the cost of the conversion on the lower price of tops, and so it is changed in this bill, and instead of 5 per cent it is 10 per cent, which does make up the difference in the cost of conversion. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] put a higher duty on tops, and, of course, making wool free, there is no necessity of any compensatory duty and that is left out. But the duty on conversion of wool into tops he fixed at 15 per cent instead of 10, 50 per cent higher than in this amendment offered by me. I believe, and I have studied the subject of tops a good deal since my attention was called to it, that the 10 per cent duty is a fair, equitable provision for making up the difference in the cost of making tops.

The next change, and the only other change made in the bill since it was presented two years or a year ago, is that in paragraph 19, as it is numbered in the amendment—of course, we will change these numbers when you put this schedule into the bill—is that the duty on yarn of that class is 8 per cent. We raised it to 10 per cent to make it correspond to the duty on wool tops, or combed wool. Otherwise the amendment is exactly as it was when I offered it in the House before. Now, if you go through these various items in this bill you will find that the duties for the conversion of articles vary from the Underwood bill. On yarns made wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty is 21½ cents per pound, the exact duty on the contents required in making the pound of yarn compensatory, and then 10 per cent——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not unless I can be allowed more time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like the gentleman to state what tax he has put on washed wool? I do not find any tax in his bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York five minutes more.

Mr. PAYNE. Class 2, in washed wool——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The same pound tax is on wool in the grease. I do not find it in the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. All wool, until you get up to scoured wool, is wool in the grease, and bears 18 cents per pound.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill does not read that way.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is mistaken. I can not devote my five minutes to something that the gentleman will find when he reads the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell you about it when I come to that.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course you will make mistakes in regard to it and repeat some that you have been making.

In this amendment the conversion duty on yarn in the lower numbers is 10 per cent on those not over 30 cents a pound against his 20 per cent; is 15 per cent on those between 30 and 50 cents in value against his 20; 20 per cent on those from 50 to 80, the same as in the Underwood bill; and there is an increase in my amendment from 20 to 25 per cent on higher-priced yarns. And all along through this schedule you will find we have taken care of the poor people's yarn, the poor people's clothing, by reducing the duties. We need not have done it. We might have gone through with a small basket duty on the whole business, as did the chairman, but we were trying to separate and deal carefully with the cheaper goods, whether they were bought by poor or rich anywhere in the United States. But when they go up in the higher-priced cloths or higher-priced clothing, our duty on the cost of conversion was greater than offered in the bill of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. And so it runs all the way through.

Why, we make as fine cloths in this country as they do anywhere in the world, and we make as fine clothing in this country as they do anywhere in the world. Whatever condemnation may have been meted out to Schedule K in its present form, and I have indulged in my share of it, this can be said of it, that under it the wool industry, notwithstanding the conditions have changed so much, has been keeping on a footing in this country, and the woolen manufacturing industry has gone forward with rapid strides, until we are making as good goods as they do anywhere in the civilized world. Clothing we make a little better.

Now, I have not the time to go into these details, which other gentlemen, perhaps, want to state. My simple object was to explain the bill. But there is another item to which I must refer. There has been a duty on wool that is made into carpets. We prescribe a duty of 7 cents a pound, which was the old rate. It was put there because some of these carpet wools were combed. Some of them were used in making the coarser grades, and they had, to put on a duty so as to preserve the duty on other forms and classes of wool.

We have relieved that situation, and provided that whenever any manufacturer of carpets has proven to the Treasury Department that he has used the third class of wool he has imported in the manufacture of carpets he can get a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty he has paid. In other words, under this substitute schedule carpet wools are free of duty to the carpet manufacturers of the United States.

I have not the time to go into it fully in the limited allotment given to me, but if you will take time, gentlemen, to compare the difference in rates in the manufacture of carpets all through this substitute bill, you will find that the rates in this bill are only equal to the Underwood rates on the very highest grades of carpets, while on the other grades they are as low as those of the Underwood bill or many of them lower.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. For a question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield to me time for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] state whether this substitute of his for Schedule K has been prepared in conformity with the Tariff Board's report?

Mr. PAYNE. Absolutely, as near as human brains can do it, under the condition that the brains belong to the gentleman from Connecticut and myself; absolutely, as near as we could get it. If I had more time I could go into that more fully.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is extended three minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the ad valorems on carpets, on the cheaper grades, run in this substitute from 15 to 20 per cent. In the Underwood bill they are 30 per cent. On the cheaper grades of blankets our duty is 20 per cent as against his 25 per cent. On the less expensive garments we propose a duty of 25 per cent instead of a duty of 30 per cent.

Now, I want to say, in conclusion, that in my judgment the principles of this substitute bill will yet be written into a tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.] A sensible, reasonable duty on wool, on the wool content, will be a feature of the next protective bill that is made up and put on the statute books. It is so reasonable and so sensible that if you gentlemen on that side ever again revise the tariff and come to the rescue of the sheep as well as the goats of the country [laughter], you will put it there. You will, instead of giving 20 per cent on goat hair—which is wool—give a duty of 18 cents a pound upon goat hair, as is provided for in this substitute.

Why, gentlemen, extend your horizon so that it will take in something besides 3,000,000 goats, so that it will include 50,000,000 sheep in this country, and then, instead of a duty of 20 per cent, put a duty of 18 cents a pound on it, and when you go to bed and sleep over it you will pat yourselves on the back because of the fact that, notwithstanding the idea originated on this side of the House, you have solved the question of a wool tariff in this country and have got the proper basis, which, carried out, gives no more duty on wool content per pound in the wool in the manufactured article than it does on wool in the grease.

Confident that this will go into a tariff bill in the near future, I am reconciled to whatever you do in the Underwood bill on any subject. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

[Mr. GARNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose to have offered an amendment directed to the question of raw wool, providing for a duty upon wool in conformity with the provisions of that item in the new Payne wool bill which is to be offered as a substitute for Schedule K in the Underwood bill. I desired to do that to bring into sharp issue the proposition that direct protection should be given to the producer in the field and on the farm as well as to all other producers of the country. I am, however, more than satisfied to bring that question in issue in connection with the support of Schedule K as now prepared and introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], with which I am in full accord. That represents the first concrete example of a revision of the tariff upon scientific principles based upon an impartial gathering of the facts involved in the schedule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has uttered in what to me is prophetic vision the statement that the future tariffs of this country will be made in accordance with the adoption of that principle. Indeed, so firmly do I believe in that statement that I would be willing to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that if he will change this bill upon the sugar schedule so as to provide that the free provision shall not take effect until four years from the adoption of the measure instead of three I am willing to stake my political future upon the assertion that sugar would not be put upon the free list.

There are certain conditions in our industrial situation which all thoughtful and patriotic citizens regret. We have an era of very great and universal prosperity, high prices, and good times, but the real difficulty is in an inequitable division of the profits of industry, whether it be the industry of the farm or of the factory, whether it be the industry that brings forth the product of the brain or of labor. What this country most needs, in my humble judgment, is a revision of the middleman downward. There are too many hangers-on, too many leeches upon industry, too great overhead charges, too much watered stock, purely fictitious capitalization, upon which dividends are exacted.

The actual producer is not receiving too much for his products. This schedule that we are now considering affords one of the very best possible illustrations of this great truth. It is complained that prices are high upon food products. Prices are high upon the other necessaries of life. What proportion of what the consumer pays for food products ever filters through to the original producer of those products? Not over 50 per cent of every dollar that is paid for the products of the farm by the consumer ever reaches to the original producer, the farmer.

And not to exceed 20 per cent of the 50 per cent, or 10 per cent of the whole, is profit to the farmer. Our Democratic friends would cure the high cost of the farmers' products to the consumer by taking off this 10 per cent that the industrious farmer now gets as profit. Take this wool schedule, K. How much that a man pays for an average suit of clothes goes to the producer of those clothes? Among the other valuable facts which our Tariff Board collected they cited the average or representative suit of clothes to be retailed at $23. How much profit is there in that production, and where did it go? The cost to grow the wool was shown to be $1.55. The farmer was paid therefor $2.23, or a profit to the farmer of 68 cents. The profit to the man who made the cloth, without going into the items entering into it, is 23 cents. The profit to the manufacturer of the garments is $1.07. Or, in other words, the total profit that goes to the men who really produce the wool and the cloth and the garment is $1.98, less than $2. You follow it along, and the wholesaler gets $1.11 and the retailer $6.50, making up the $23 in connection with the items of labor entering into the various stages of production. We should all concede, if we study this question, that the producer, whether he be the farmer who grows the wool and makes the profit of 68 cents, or whether it be the man who makes the cloth, who has a profit of 23 cents, or the man who manufactures the cloth, with a profit of $1.07, is not unreasonably paid for his important services. The middleman comes in between and absorbs all the rest of the profit.

Now, the remedy of our Democratic brethren for the unequal distribution of the profits of industry is to cut down prices. That is the whole argument; that is the whole basis for this revision—cut down prices. What are prices? Why, prices are synonymous with profits, or they go parallel with profits. You can not cut down the prices a man receives for his labor or for his article of production without cutting down his profit. The Democratic proposition is to cut down the profit, while the Republican proposition is to maintain the profit and undertake in a statesmanlike way the solution of the great problems of how to enforce an equitable division of profits, how to do away with the overhead charges, which are unreasonable; how to prevent watered stocks and paying dividends upon them. In this era of marvelous prosperity—and it is the greatest we have ever had, and I do not speak in purely political language—we produced last year upon the farms and in the factories the greatest production ever in the history of the country. We exported our greatest export trade in 1912. We had a liberal exchange with other countries, and imported the largest imports ever in the history of the country. But the balance of our foreign trade was upon the right side—$551,000,000 to our advantage—and being in our favor, we have been able to maintain our gold balances in our business relations with other nations. As a result we have reached a high-water mark of gold accumulations in the Treasury. The gold deposits in the United States Treasury at the present moment—I inquired a few days ago—is $1,255,000,000; and the balance of this trade with foreign countries in our favor is one element which makes certain we can maintain this large gold reserve in our favor.

For a condition of unfair division of the profits of industry, there being trouble over a proper division of the golden eggs, the Democratic remedy is to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. If there are no profits to divide, we will have no dispute over the division of profits.

I concede that it is a difficult task to apportion tariff duties even when you are guided by sound principles. Protective duties are designed primarily for infant industries, but as industries become strong the avarice and selfishness of men constrain them to contend for higher, if not for prohibitive, rates. They invent ingenious distinctions as a basis for favoring their particular industry at the expense of others. The manufacturer's stock argument is that he must have his raw material free. This argument is raw enough to entitle it to go on the free list. The truth is that raw material is purely a relative term. There is no such thing in the abstract as raw material, except material in its natural form, untouched by the hand of man. The moment you apply to it American labor, that moment it enters into some form of industry, and under our protective system is entitled to consideration in connection with a protective-tariff measure. That which is the finished product of one producer becomes the raw material of the next. Hay, corn, the steer, meat, the hide, leather, shoes, saddles, and harness each in turn is the raw material and the finished product of the farmer, the packer, the tanner, and the manufacturer of leather goods. No one is more entitled to direct protective consideration than the other.

The New England manufacturer has worked this artificial distinction between finished products and raw materials into an exact science. Apparently, raw material is whatever New England has to buy and finished product whatever New England has to sell. When the raw-material argument is not persuasive it is suggested that the desired materials are by-products, and for that reason should have no share of protection. When the Payne Act was being framed it was claimed by boot and shoe manufacturers that hides were a by-product of steers and for that reason should go on the free list. It costs American labor and capital to produce the hide as well as the meat of a steer. It does not appear why one should be favored and the other disfavored. The tariff hog has developed as a by-product of the protective system. He has done more harm to the cause of rational protection than all its enemies.

Under a scientific revision of the tariff American products should be protected to the extent of the difference in cost of production here and in foreign countries, and this measure of protection must be apportioned to all American industries with an absolutely even hand. The Payne Act, with the exception of two or three schedules, was a substantial downward revision of rates and is a much better tariff act than the majority of the people have yet discovered.

Now, in conclusion, I want again to say that, in my humble judgment, the people of this country—and it is a protective country, and always will be—will not be satisfied with this present crazy-quilt revision, made upon no principle, perfectly blind as to the cost of production at home or abroad, or any difference between them, measuring a little sop to an industry here and to another there, shutting off the farmer on his product of wool but placing a protection upon the farmer who produces Angora goats. Why, this sort of a revision is a farce, and all with the avowed purpose of cutting down profits upon industry. Low prices have always been synonymous with hard times; high prices have always been associated with good times. You can not cut down prices and profits without destroying the very basis of our industries.

And so we are quite content in this schedule to put forth in concrete form our belief as to what is the proper way to revise the tariff, with a proper regard for the difference in the cost of production here and elsewhere, and measuring out to every industry, whether it is on the farm or whether it is in the factory, a direct protection against the cheap labor and cheaper producing conditions in other countries, maintaining a higher market for Americans, maintaining a profit for all men who labor with their hands and brain to produce greater wealth for the entire country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, whatever reported differences there may be between the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and myself with regard to the amendment that he has offered were fully discussed in the Republican conference, and, like my distinguished friend, the political soldier from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I will be as good a man in the ranks as he is and not discuss the matter here for the benefit of our Democratic friends.

I am pleased that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has opened up the question of the difference in cost between the producer and the consumer. He has also told us something about the middleman. That gives me an opportunity to say one thing that is very seldom said in this debate, and is never understood apparently, on the other side in the discusion of the tariff question. It relates to the price of clothing. Some time ago I secured the raw material for a suit of clothes, the cost of which in cloth was $7.87½. The cloth was made in the United States in a woolen mill in Rhode Island. All the tariff for which the Payne bill was responsible was in that $7.87½. The woolgrower had received the benefit of 33 cents per pound on the scoured wool, and the sorter of the wool had been protected by a compensatory rate against the cheaper sorter wages in foreign countries. The man who scoured the wool had been protected against the cheap scouring wages abroad, and the man who carded the wool, and who combed the wool, and who changed the wool into yarn, and who dyed it and wove the cloth, and every one of the particular stages in the process of turning the wool into cloth, had been protected under the Payne bill by what are here denounced as compensatory duties. That is to say, in each stage of the development of the raw wool up to the cloth stage the separate occupations had been provided for, and there had been a measure of protection afforded to the workmen in the United States, or even to the manufacturers, if you please, against the cheaper foreign competition. Now, all that under the Payne bill had been provided for, covered, and put behind in the cost of the cloth, which was $7.87½.

I took that cloth to a merchant tailor, who told me it was too good to have been made in the United States, and who insisted that it must have been an imported article. I disabused his mind of that and told him to make that piece of cloth into a suit and send me the bill. His bill for making up that $7.87½ worth of cloth was $30, and when I asked him to analyze the bill he gave me these details: The wages paid to pieceworkers on coat, vest, and trousers was $12.50. This first labor cost therefore was more than the original cost of the cloth, which covered every one of the "iniquitous features" of the Payne tariff law. The wages paid to weekly and yearly workers was $6.50—all beyond the duties of the Payne tariff law. Paid for material, trimmings, and so forth, $4.50. There may have been some little duty upon those trimmings, which, of course, were separate from the 3½ yards of cloth. The gross profit to the merchant tailor was $6.50—a total of $30 for making up $7.87½ worth of cloth. All "the crime" of the Payne bill was in the $7.87½ and the middlemen, from the woolgrower, who is covered in the $7.87½, to Mr. Moore, who bought that suit of clothes and paid for it, was absorbed by the labor cost employed in the making of that suit—seamstresses and cutters and others—and the profit to the merchant tailor was $6.50, and I assume that a large proportion of the $6.50 of profit had gone into rent of store, had gone into advertising in the newspapers, had gone into delivery service, and light, and furnishings, and the other incidentals of conducting a merchant-tailoring establishment. I have described the processes not understood or considered by those who tirade against the so-called compensatory duties, and I have chided my distinguished friend from Texas for protecting "the special interests" in his State, the Angora goat, because whether he now speaks in the interests of the great public or whether he still speaks in behalf of "the special interests," it does appear in the Underwood bill that these "offensive" Payne methods, from production to consumption, have been followed literally and absolutely by him.

"Hair of the Angora goat," and so forth, is made dutiable at 20 per cent ad valorem. First, let us consider the hair of the Angora goat in the raw, as it comes from the farm. The first step is to protect the raisers of the Angora goat to the extent of 20 per cent ad valorem.

The second step in this compensatory process in the Underwood tariff bill is 25 per cent ad valorem on "tops made from the hair of the Angora goat." Put 20 per cent ad valorem with 25 per cent ad valorem, and you have got 45 per cent ad valorem up to the stage of the tops that come from the hair of the Angora goat.

"Yarns made of the hair of the Angora goat," 30 per cent ad valorem. That is the third stage. Add that to the 45 per cent ad valorem, and you have got 75 per cent ad valorem as you proceed in your stages of production and manufacture.

"Cloth and all manufactures of every description made of the hair of the Angora goat," fourth stage. Take your 40 per cent protection compensatory on "Cloth and all manufactures of every description made of the hair of the Angora goat," and add that to the 75 per cent ad valorem, and you have got 115 per cent protection thus far to the Angora goat.

And, lastly, on "Plushes, velvets, and all other pile fabrics * * * made wholly or partly of the hair of the Angora goat," 50 per cent ad valorem is the duty imposed by the Underwood bill. Add that to the 115 per cent already indicated, and you have got 165 per cent protection in all to the Angora goat of Texas, while you take off all protection from the wool of sheep and other products of the great industries of the North. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, no schedule in this bill has been so unjustly and so cruelly and so brutally treated as this Schedule K. No schedule has been so misrepresented or used as a vehicle of abuse and opposition as has this schedule. I do not care whether we may differ slightly on this side among ourselves—whether we conform literally to the Tariff Board or not—I still believe that we have a right to insist that we have full information as to what we are doing before we plunge one billion and a half of capital into a condition of chaos, before we turn out of employment half a million operatives engaged in the woolen mills of this country.

President Taft himself, who made a speech at Winona, Minn.—and that was a sweet morsel in the mouths of third-party Representatives and Democratic Representatives alike—was led to say, in the veto message sending back the Underwood-La Follette bill, that it was too dangerous a proposition to overthhrow the vast industries and unsettle conditions, as it would.

I realize how futile it would be to undertake to amend the schedule as brought in by the Committee on Ways and Means. I have been in consultation with some of the practical men in the business, who know something about the business. I have asked them whether it would be wise to undertake to amend this bill. I have spoken with some of them who are in consultation with their colleagues, who are greatly concerned throughout this whole country over the question, and their answer has been, "No; it would be useless to attempt to amend that bill. To amend a single paragraph would be ineffectual."

"No single amendment to the wool schedule would avert disaster and conserve the industry," says one of the best informed men on this question, one of the men who knows best what he is talking about. And the only suggestion he and his friends make is that it would help the industry, with the stock it now has on hand, if the fatal day for the passage of the bill, or at least the making of it effective, would be postponed until December 1.

Gentlemen think sometimes it is a horribly unfair proposition for one to stand on this floor representing the man who has the industry and the courage to start great enterprises. When he does that he becomes the spokesman of the "special interests." I have in my hand now a letter which comes from my city——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE. I have in my hand a letter from a gentleman of my city who came up from Virginia not long ago, ambitious to start in an enterprise. He did start a woolen mill, which is now fairly under way. He writes:

SHEPPERD MANUFACTURING CO.,
Philadelphia, Pa., April 30, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I should be most pleased if you would send us a copy of section "K" of the pending tariff bill. My understanding of the matter is that this tariff bill will take effect from its passage. The bill in itself is bad enough, but to have the bill take effect immediately will put the American manufacturers in a most awkward position.

We have bought raw material at the existing prices, and, as you are aware, the demands for labor have increased 10 to 15 per cent in the last six months. We are forced to sell our goods on the basis of present prices, and when the tariff bill takes effect, reducing the prices of merchandise, we will be forced to sacrifice the merchandise, as the tariff bill will not give us an opportunity to dispose of the merchandise on hand. If the date for this bill to become effective should be postponed until such time as would enable the American manufacturer to dispose of the merchandise he has on hand, he could at least make an effort to adjust matters to meet the future conditions. To show you the ill effect of the bill now pending, we are in receipt of a letter from a large customer, to whom we sold 3,000 yards of dress goods, in which he demands that unless we will guarantee to protect him against any reduction in the cost of merchandise by reason of the passage of the tariff bill that we could cancel his order. These goods are all made and are in the stockroom ready to be shipped June 15. The cancellation of a large number of orders on hand will put the American manufacturers in a very bad position financially.

The small manufacturer, like ourselves, having a total output of only one-half a million yards a year, will find himself up against a desperate proposition. I am sorry to add to your already heavy burden by writing you as above.

With sincere thanks for your efforts in behalf of the American manufacturer, and with very best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

SHEPPERD MANUFACTURING CO.,
GWYNN T. SHEPPERD, President.

I have a letter here from an importer. Ordinarily I look upon letters from importers with a slight degree of suspicion. They may be regarded as the middle men, concerning whom complaint is made. But here is one who tells me that this morning he received a telegram from one of his Turkish correspondents in which he quotes a standard grade of wool for 27 cents. This is 3¾ cents per pound advance, or more than one-half of the duty. I read:

PHILADELPHIA, April 25, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: It may interest you to know how free wool is being received by the foreigner.

This morning we received a cablegram from one of our Turkish correspondents in which he quotes for a certain standard grade of wool 27 cents. The price we paid him last year at this time was 23¼ cents. This is 3¾ cents per pound advance, or more than one-half of the duty.

Yesterday we received advices from another correspondent, and the minimum price he named for the new season's wool is 15 per cent higher than last year, or 4 cents per pound advance.

You will see already who is going to get the benefit of the abolition of the duty. These are only two instances; there are many others that could be given.

Recently Mr. Wilson is reported to have said that the prices of American wools and foreign wools were already on a level. Of course they are. The foreigner is going to grab at least one-half, if not two-thirds, of the duty, and the American woolgrower is going to lose the rest, if not more. But we do not see how this tends to diminish the cost of living.

Yours, faithfully,

TATTERSFIELD CO.,
B. TATTERSFIELD, President.

This importer sees where the duty will go. It will go to the foreign raiser of wool, and the American raiser of wool will be the loser.

Last night my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], in answer to my question, would not declare that there was a trust in the cotton trade. When I asked him about the wool trade he said he had not made the declaration that there was a trust in the wool trade, but he had heard of a wool trust. I am no spokesman for any wool trust nor for any special interest in the woolen industry, but I have in my hand a statement which illustrates just how far our friends on the other side are accurate as to their information. It is said there is a woolen trust; that it is known as the American Woolen Co. The total number of woolen and worsted mills in the United States, by the census of 1909, is 913. Of these only 36 are controlled by the American Woolen Co.

The total capitalization employed in the industry is $415,465,000, while the capitalization of the American Woolen Co. is $60,000,000. The annual value of the products of the mills of the United States is $419,826,000, and the total annual value of the products of the American Woolen Co. is $51,000,000. This incubus, this octopus, this American Woolen Co., therefore controls only one-eighth part of the wool industry of the United States. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] could not answer last night except affirmatively that there is such competition in the wool trade in the United States, and there is such competition in the cotton trade, that the prices are kept down, and that they are to-day as low to the consumer as they will ever be.

Mr. Chairman, just one word about this report. Schedule K is perhaps the greatest piece of guesswork in the Underwood bill. It is patchwork from beginning to end, unscientific, unpatriotic, calculated to destroy a great industry.

As to raw wool, I have some statistics here which I think are of great value in the consideration of this question. Raw wool is the farmers' proposition. It is not the manufacturers' proposition. I assume it would not hurt the manufacturer if raw wool were made free; but I have been consistent for a duty on raw wool, because I want a duty on finished articles, and I want to provide true protection all along the line, and have voted so to do, even to the extent that I did not vote for the reciprocity bill, and thus differed from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], in that I differed with my President. Take the record as it is set forth in the schedules and as it appears in the Democratic tariff handbook. Do they propose to raise revenue by reducing duties? Let us see. Let us understand their process of reasoning.

Under the Payne bill the imports of raw wool in 1910 were $47,687,293; in 1911, $29,572,259, a fluctuation of nearly one-half. Yet we are changing from specific to ad valorem duties and still expect to raise a specific amount of income. In 1912 the importations of raw wool were $33,141,408, a vast difference from 1910, showing the difficulty of estimating revenue on the ad valorem basis. But under ad valorem rates we are going to get what we are going to get. Now, how does the committee adjust this in its report?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MOORE. The original Underwood bill had a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem on raw wool. It estimated imports of the value of $66,991,000 upon which to collect the duty. The bill that was vetoed by the President—the so-called Underwood-La Follette bill—increased the duty to 29 per cent ad valorem; but still the committee expected to bring in $60,000,000 worth of goods. In your original committee bill—the one that was rejected by President Wilson—the committee proposed, as a sop to the farmers, to give them 15 per cent, a vast reduction from the two former bills, but it was still estimated that imports would amount to $60,000,000. A variety of duties but no change in imports. And when the committee came to give to the common people the "great boon" of free wool, regardless of the rights, interest, and welfare of the farmer and of the producers of the country, when they brought in the last bill—the one we are now discussing—then, with free wool, by some process of scientific or mental reasoning which I can not comprehend, with this great inducement to the foreigners to bring in their wool free of duty, they reduced the value of expected imports from $66,000,000, which they estimated under the 20 per cent ad valorem basis, to $33,000,000 free. How they are going to accomplish this the Lord only knows. I leave it to some of their statisticians to divine. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I append these interesting facts in tabular form so that those who wish to solve the riddle may do so:

Raw wool imports and effect of the various Democratic rates on imported raw wool.

Raw wool.	Rate of duty.	Value of imports.
Actual imports, years ending June 30:	Per ct.

NOTE.—The above estimates are obtained from the Democratic reports and Tariff Handbook of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to be notified when I have consumed 15 minutes. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, Schedule K has been the storm center of tariff revision. The people of our country are aware to-day that the schedule of wool and woolens contains the most extraordinary multiplication of duties of any one of the schedules of the existing law. They are aware that Schedule K imposes a greater hardship upon the consuming public of our country than any one of the 14 schedules of the tariff. Schedule K has been the Jonah of the Republican Party. If they had been able to cast it overboard four years ago it is just possible that their ship of state might be still afloat riding right side up, but they failed to revise Schedule K and that duty was immediately intrusted by the people of the United States to the Democratic Party.

Now, our bill has taken all duty off raw wool and has reduced the duty on woolen goods from an average ad valorem of 94 per cent which, in effect, really was often from 150 to 200 per cent, down to a reasonable basis of 35 per cent ad valorem.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the distinguished former chairman of the committee, has twitted us with the fact that in the last Congress our revision of Schedule K carried a 20 per cent duty upon raw wool, and that our bill to-day places raw wool on the free list. But I maintain that there is no inconsistency in this, and that the record of the Democratic Party upon the subject of a tax upon raw wool is absolutely consistent and clear for decades in the past. For example, the Mills bill of 1888 placed raw wool on the free list. The Springer bill of 1892 did likewise. The Wilson law of 1894 placed raw wool on the free list, and when we came to the Underwood bill in the last Congress we were confronted by a totally different situation. Then we were proceeding to revise the tariff schedule by schedule, and our friends over on the other side of the aisle here were just waiting for us to bring in a schedule showing a grave loss of revenue in order to charge us with incapacity to manage the affairs of the Government. So when we reported our bill in the last Congress to the caucus, carrying 20 per cent on raw wool, that bill was adopted by the caucus after an ardent debate, but concurrently with the adoption of the bill came the adoption of a resolution by the caucus stating that Republican extravagance in the management of the Government required us to raise revenue even on the necessaries of life like raw wool, and so our 20 per cent rate on that commodity at that time was no abandonment of Democratic principles. [Applause on the Democrtaic side.]

So my friends will see that our record is absolutely straight and consistent from beginning to end in relation to raw wool.

Now, I consider that the placing of raw wool on the free list as the greatest achievement of this Democratic revision of the tariff. I do so for two reasons—one economic, and the other political.

As to the economic necessity for free raw wool, every other civilized country of the world, except Russia and our own, admits wool free of duty. To anybody who has studied the intricacies of the wool and woolen duties in the Payne law it will at once become clear that a tax laid on the raw material at 45 per cent ad valorem, as it is in the present law, may be twice the original amount of 45 per cent ad valorem when that tax reaches back to the consumer. That is so because in the processes of manufacture of raw wool into tops and tops into yarn and yarn into cloth and cloth into woolen clothing, each successive manufacturer makes an addition to the amount originally paid in duties on the raw wool to represent his profit and his rate of interest upon his increased capital. So that when the tax falls upon the back of the unhappy consumer it is out of all proportion greater than the tax which was originally laid on the raw wool itself.

As to the sheep-raising industry, of course I come from a city district and my opponents may maintain that I am not qualified to speak about the farmer's end of this argument. But I have given several years' study to the question of wool duties and their supposed effect on the sheep-raising industry, and I have come to the conclusion that no amount of tariff protection is ever going to save sheep farming for wool as an industry in the United States.

A century ago the green hills of Massachusetts were covered with sheep, and the pleasant valleys in my own State of New York had great flocks of sheep; but little by little sheep raising has been crowded away from the more thickly settled States until it has mostly taken refuge in the semiarid lands of the Rocky Mountains. Higher forms of agriculture are everywhere making the land more valuable and making it impossible to raise sheep at a profit. The consequence is that this frontier industry, in order to maintain its existence in our country during any considerable period of time, will have to erect around the grazing lands where the sheep are fed, a wall to keep out all settlers and all improvements and all advances in agriculture.

It so happens to-day as a matter of practical interest, when the farmers are complaining that we are going to hurt them by reducing the duties upon the wool, that there is a great shortage in wool all over the European countries, and there has been such a competition in the purchase of wool in those countries that wool is selling for as high a price abroad as it is in the United States at the present moment. A curious result of that is that within the last few weeks we have actually exported some 150 bales of Ohio wool to Bradford, England, to be used in the woolen mills there. Of course, supposed protection to wool has created a demand for that protection among the farmers, and if gentlemen upon this floor who represent States in which wool is produced desire to go back and scare the farmers in those States by inducing them to believe that sheep raising will be unprofitable when wool goes on the free list, it may create some temporary depression of the wool market. In that way they may succeed in frightening some unthinking farmers; but the farmers—wool producers—who have studied the question to-day realize what I think all of us in this Chamber must realize, that the sheep raising of the future in our country is going to be and is to-day increasingly profitable for the mutton end of the business, and that woolgrowing is to become increasingly profitable only as a by-product of sheep raising in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Just a few words, Mr. Chairman, about the political aspects of this matter. I regard the doctrine of free wool as the trumpet call in the battle against protection. Those who have ever studied our tariff history are aware that the greatest force for keeping a protective tariff on the statute books has been the alliance between the woolgrowers and the woolen manufacturers. This alliance, established 40 years ago, has, with one brief interval, to this very day kept upon our statute books rates of duty running up to 150 and even 200 per cent upon woolen clothing. The way they were able to do that was because the woolen manufacturing States of the East by allying themselves in Congress with the woolgrowing States of the West were able to secure from the gentlemen representing the sheep-growing districts votes enough to establish and maintain upon our statute books the sky-high rates upon woolens. That is the alliance with which we have been doing battle. That is the alliance which, according to the statement of the last President of the United States, was too strong for the Republican Party. President Taft himself was in favor of revising downward Schedule K, and I have no doubt that my esteemed and distinguished colleague, the former chairman of this committee [Mr. PAYNE] was also in favor of a downward revision of Schedule K, just as I believe a number of gentlemen on that side of the House were. But it was of no avail. The President in his Winona speech admitted the iniquities of Schedule K, and solemnly said that this historical alliance between the woolgrowers and the woolen makers was too strong for the Republican Party and was able to prevent them from revising downward Schedule K. This alliance exists to-day. It is not powerful in Democratic councils, because our bill shows what we think of it. They have sent their lobbyists down here to Congress week in and week out, and they have gone home convinced at last that the representatives of the people, instead of the representatives of the interests were now writing a tariff bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The woolen manufacturers, who would unquestionably be benefited by free wool, have not asked us to give them free wool. There is not a single one of them in the record of the hearings before the committee who came and asked us for that which no doubt they most ardently desired. The reason why they did not was because this alliance still exists to-day, and it is the duty of the Democratic Party to break that alliance, and to do that we must put wool on the free list.

Mr. Chairman, just a few words, in conclusion, about the benefit of free wool to the consumer. Our friends on the other side like to make fun of the amount of duties upon wool that is transmuted into cloth. I have already endeavored to show them that the amount which the man who buys the cloth has to pay by reason of the wool duties is far in excess of the nominal amount of those duties. Of course with free wool a man who buys a custom-made suit of clothes for $45 or $50 is not going to get his clothes appreciably cheaper, because tailoring is one of the chief expenses in that style of garment. He may get better clothes, he may get Scotch or Saxony cloths, which are now sometimes beyond his reach; but the man who buys the cheap suit of clothes, where the amount paid for the raw wool is proportionately more important, is going to get his suit under our 35 per cent duty appreciably cheaper. He not only is going to get his suit of clothes cheaper, but he is going to get a suit made out of real wool instead of a suit made out of shoddy or cotton substitute. He is going to feel the difference by the beneficial effect of placing raw wool upon the free list.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I can not. After this when a man buys an $8 or a $10 suit of clothes in our country he will be sure that that suit has real wool in it and that the first time he goes out in the rain the suit will not wilt and later stiffen up like a piece of old stovepipe. The people of our country have been absolutely excluded from the use of cheap real woolen clothes, from the use of cheap real woolen blankets, from the use of good cheap woolen fabrics and cheap women's dress goods by the law that is now on the statute books, and absolute relief from that situation is what the placing upon the free list of raw wool means to the consuming public of the United States. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened with considerable interest to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] has said about wool. In reply to him as to the rate of duty being excessive and the consumer paying that excessive duty in this country, and so on—that is the substance of his argument—I want to refer to the Tariff Board report. I rely upon that as being correct, or practically so. The Tariff Board, after an exhaustive report upon the cost of the production of wool in this country and abroad, says that in South America the cost of the production of wool is from 4 to 5 cents per pound, after crediting up to the flock all the moneys received from the sale of lambs, for mutton, and otherwise, so that when South American wool comes on the market of the United States it comes here at a cost to the South American woolgrower of from 4 to 5 cents per pound for production.

Adding to that the freight, the cost of freight is about a cent a pound from South America to the New England States. That report shows when going to Australia, where an exhaustive report was made, that the average wool coming from Australia, the wool coming from the most favorably situated ranches in Australia, after crediting up to the flock moneys received from the sale of sheep and lambs, there is no cost against the wool at all, except from some of the most remote ranches in Australia there is a cost against the wool, but after an exhaustive investigation in the United States, where the experts called upon 12,000 farmers situated in 173 counties in 19 States of the Union, they show there is a cost levied against wool of the first class of 12 cents a pound after crediting up to the flock the moneys received from the sale of sheep and lambs for mutton; and on all wool from the whole United States, wools of the first class and of the second class and third class, 9½ cents per pound and as high as 19 cents a pound for Ohio wool. Now, by placing wool upon the free list when the western farmer from the mountain States comes on the market to the woolen mills of this country (the only market he has in the world for his wool), he goes there with a charge of 12 cents a pound, against no cost at all from the Australian wool, where the heft of our importations of wool to this country come from. The Tariff Board report has pointed out the fact that the freight on wool from the mountain States is 1½ to 2 cents a pound to the woolen mills of this country.

So that when the Australian and the western farmer go with their wool to the markets of the United States, the farmer of the United States goes there with the charge of 14 cents, including freight, with only 2 cents against Australian wool. The duty on that class of wool to-day is 11 cents per pound. Explain to me, then, how you are not going to injure a legitimate industry, if the growing of wool in this country is a legitimate industry, by removing all their protection, this 11 cents per pound.

Let me refer to the clothing report for a minute. The Tariff Board purchased in England 16 samples of cloth, the duty on which was $76 and some cents; they paid $41 and some cents for those 16 samples in England, so that when those goods were brought to this country, duty paid, they cost $118 and some cents. They looked around to find whether or not those goods were being made in this country. That rate of duty, $76 on the $41 of foreign value, is 183 per cent ad valorem, so the board reports. But what is the consumer paying in this country, they ask? Because of that excessively high rate of duty on those grades of goods, that industry has been stimulated in the United States, and we are not only producing all that class of goods here, but we are making some for export to nonmanufacturing countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would ask the gentleman to give me a few minutes more.

And the board shows also the report that the conversion cost abroad is not more than one-half of what the conversion cost is in this country. In other words, it costs us 100 to 150 per cent more to produce those goods in this country than abroad. What is the consumer paying for the goods of which they brought here samples of? Instead of $118, they say $69.75, not the difference between the foreign cost and 100 per cent in cost of conversion, but much less. And the ad valorem is the difference between the foreign cost and the price that the consumers pay in this country, which is 74 per cent and not 183 per cent. I wish I only had the time to go all along down the line. But here is another most interesting industry, and that is mohair.

There is a firm located over here at Greystone, R. I.—Joseph Benn & Sons Co. (Inc.)—and a member of that firm, I believe, is in the city of Washington right now, and perhaps in the gallery, Mr. Harrison Benn. That firm has a factory in Bradford, England, and this is what Mr. Benn tells me with his own mouth. They have from one to two million dollars invested in their plant at Greystone, R. I., but because of the duty maintained on raw mohair, which is an article they consume, and the low rates of duty on the finished product, they are obliged to close their factory in the United States and go back to Bradford, England, and supply the United States market from there. I got those words from the lips of the gentleman this morning. Here is the difference in wages paid in his factory in Bradford, England, and his factory in Greystone: With 10 per cent of his employees, in wool sorting the wages in Bradford, England, are $5.40 a week, at Greystone, R. I., $11.63 a week; for drawing-room employees, $3.31 in Bradford, $7.83 in Greystone; spinning, $2.74 a week in Bradford, England, $6.94 at Greystone, R. I.; for pickers, 73 cents a day at Bradford, an average of $2.25 at Greystone. And on the larger portion of that class—28 per cent of his employees—the wages are 98 cents a day in England, $3.01 at Greystone, R. I.—an average per week of $6.12 as against $13.77. And the total average of all the employees in the factory, as I have figured it up here, is in Bradford, England, $4.39 a week as against $10.73 a week at Greystone, R. I.

You, in your great desire to protect the Angora goat, from which the finished product of this firm is made, have made it impossible, so this gentleman says, to continue his industry in Greystone, R. I. Is that a thing that you want? Do you want to transfer the industry to Bradford, England, now by keeping a duty on the raw material and fixing the duty on the finished product so low that American labor can not compete with English labor?

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FORDNEY. If you will be brief.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will. If they close that mill, will it not help the business of the importers of New York City?

Mr. FORDNEY. Why, the importers of New York City came before the committee in great numbers appealing for lower rates of duty, or free trade, and no other soul on God's green earth did come asking for free trade.

Mr. AUSTIN. Have you heard of an importer that complains of this bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; but I have heard a great many favorable comments from them.

Let me say, gentlemen, there is no other market in the world for the wool of all grades grown in this country but the woolen mills of the United States. Away back in 1894 or 1895 there was a gentleman whose name is Osborne, who was a candidate for the office of governor of Wyoming; a great Democrat, and in favor of free wool. He told in a joking way afterwards, "I came within 3 cents a pound of getting it—free wool," because that was all he could get for his wool. [Laughter.] He was a very extensive woolgrower in Wyoming, and just at that time there appeared a higher price abroad for wool than was paid in the United States. He accordingly shipped his wool to London, England, and before his wool had arrived there the price went down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Just one minute more, if the Chair please. He kept his wool in a warehouse over there and paid the rent and storage upon it in England until the Republican Party once more got back into power and put wool on the protected list, and then he brought that wool back to the United States and sold it here.

That is what the Democrats helped you to do at that time. That is what a Democrat will get this time, gentlemen. I saw sheep sold in the State in which I live, in my home town, dressed carcasses, brought into town in the winter of 1895 and 1896 in sleighloads and hayracks, with signs on them offering to sell them throughout the town, "Your choice for 75 cents a carcass." I saw 100 lambs 8 months old sold in October last year in a little town near my home; they brought the farmer $5.86 a head. A gentleman stepped up and said, "My friend Matthews, I brought year-old wethers to this town in 1895, 21 in number, and took home to my father's house for them $21."

Gentlemen, that is the difference between free trade in wool and protection to the wool industry. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I append the following as a part of my remarks:

Comparative list of wages paid by us in Bradford, England, and United States of America on March 1, 1913.

GREYSTONE, R. I., April 23, 1913.

JOSEPH BENN & SONS (INC.),
By HARRISON BENN.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, the night before last I submitted to the House a petition, containing 409 letters from citizens of California, protesting against the reduction of the rate on sugar. It was not my intention to have those letters printed in the RECORD. Through a mistake the petition was handed to the RECORD clerk instead of being dropped into the petition basket.

Previously I had filed a similar petition containing 1,941 names, and they covered only 10 lines in the RECORD. I have a facsimile of the petition that I filed with these 409 letters. I intended to take up in the RECORD only the same number of lines and not to have printed the 409 letters in full.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not want to burden the RECORD of this House with letters that are not necessary to facilitate the business pending before the House. I do not want to prove burdensome, and I do not want to prove expensive. And when the time comes I want to ask permission of the House to have the mistake corrected and all these letters stricken out of the permanent RECORD of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Chairman, the woolen industry, now under consideration, has forcefully demonstrated the insufficiency and injustice of a protective tariff. The manufactured woolen goods are now protected by a high tariff, averaging about 90 per cent ad valorem. The prices of woolen goods are high, yet the employees of the woolen manufacturers are among the lowest paid workmen in all the industries in this country.

The Tariff Board of 1911 investigated the wages of 30,454 workmen, other than weavers, in woolen mills in the United States and reported that of these wage earners 3,482, or 11.4 per cent of the total number, were paid less than 10 cents an hour; 6,153, or 20.2 per cent, were paid from 10 to 11.99 cents an hour; and 6,007, or 19.7 per cent, were paid from 12 to 13 cents an hour, showing that more than one-half of that total number of workmen were paid not more than 13 cents an hour, while many of them received less than 10 cents an hour. The board also reported that in the investigation of the wages of 3,182 weavers weaving woolen and worsted goods in the United States it was found that these weavers were paid from 10 to 35 cents an hour. Of that total number of weavers only 42 were paid more than 30 cents an hour, and more than one-half of them were paid from 10 to 20 cents an hour. The same board's report as to the country of birth of the employees working in woolen and worsted mills in this country states that—

In the establishments investigated, 12,799, or 36.5 per cent of the total number of persons employed, were born in the United States and 22,230, or 63.5 per cent, were foreign born. Of the 22,230 foreign born, 12,297 persons, or 35.1 per cent of all of the employees in the mills, were natives of Italy and the countries of eastern and southeastern Europe.

The testimony given before the committee of the House of Representatives in March, 1912, at the investigation of the strike at the mills of the American Woolen Co., at Lawrence, Mass., disclosed a shocking condition of the laborers in that highly protected industry. It was shown that that company paid $6 to $10 a week to its weavers; paid on an average only about $6 a week to more than 20,000 laborers; and paid as low as $3 to $4 a week to children employees 15 and 16 years of age and charged them for the water which they drank at the mills.

Miss Margaret Sanger, a trained nurse, testified before the committee that during the strike in February, 1912, she took some of the children of the families of the strikers to New York to be cared for there, 119 one day and 92 a week later. She said:

The condition of those children was the most horrible that I have ever seen.

Out of the 119 children 4 of them had underwear on, and it was the most bitter weather; we had to run all the way from the hall to the station in order to keep warm—and only 4 had underwear.

Mr. Foster asked her—

How about the outer clothing?

Miss Sanger replied:

It was about in rags; their coats were eaten off as though they were simply worn to shreds.

She also said:

They were very much emaciated; every child there showed the effects of malnutrition.

The report of the investigating committee that shows this pauperized condition of the wage earners of the American Woolen Co. also shows that that company made a profit of 12 per cent on a capital of $1,744,169,234 in 1905.

Certainly no man will contend that these employees of the American Woolen Co. received a share of the protection which was given that company on the goods manufactured by it. No one can gainsay that that company has kept down wages by employing foreign-born laborers. It appears that 65 per cent of all its employees were foreign born.

Much has been said in the debates here during the last few days about protection for the benefit of the laborers of this country. Some gentlemen on the other side of this House still seem to contend that protective-tariff laws insure prosperity to our wage earners. The investigations which I have mentioned, as well as other investigations, have fully shown the fallacy of such argument.

A protective tariff protects the favored manufacturer, but does not protect the laborer who toils in the factory. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The laborer is left to sell his labor in the open market and meet the competition of the laborers of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By a protective-tariff law the Government empowers and permits the manufacturers to collect large sums of money from the consumers to augment the private fortunes of such manufacturers and trusts them to be generous and just to the laborers they employ. Under such laws the manufacturers obtain for themselves all they can get and pay to their laborers as little as conditions will permit. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When these beneficiaries are asking for a continuation of a high protective tariff upon their product they display great concern about maintaining a high standard of wages for American wage earners, but when they employ their workmen they almost invariably employ them at the lowest wages for which they can get them regardless of whether they be Americans or foreigners.

I speak of foreigners not disparagingly, but to show that the manufacturers employ them because they can get them more cheaply than American laborers. And why? The foreigners come here often with but little money, and they must take the first employment that they can get.

Further, I do not want to be understood as being opposed to the foreigners. To a foreigner who is an agreeable person I say, welcome to our shores; but I do object to the manufacturers of this country obtaining protection for the benefit of labor and then not giving the full benefit or share to the laborers of this country, but encourage foreigners to come here to work at a low rate of wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The employees of the cotton mills of this country also receive very low wages. The census of manufactures for 1905 shows that 310,458 cotton-mill operatives earned $94,377,696, an average of $304 a year, or less than $6 a week for each person.

The wage earners in these and other highly protected industries receive lower wages than are paid to the wage earners in the unprotected industries of this country.

The Senate committee on wages and prices gives the wages per hour paid in 1910 in building trades in the principal cities of the United States and in other unprotected industries, as follows:

	Highest.	Lowest.
	Cents.	Cents.
Bricklayers	87½	60
Stonemasons	87½	45
Structural-iron setters	65	35
Ornamental-iron setters	62½	40
Plasterers	87½	50
Tile setters	69	50
Plumbers	81¼	43¾
Steam fitters	81¼	37½
Carpenters	62½	42½
Painters	60	37½
Sheet-metal workers	68¾	37½
Electricians	68¾	37½

The Department of Commerce and Labor gives the following wages per hour in the United States, in 1907, for males:

PRINTING NEWSPAPERS.
Compositors	$0.5206
Linotype operators	.5791
Pressmen	.4558
Stereotypers	.4905

Blacksmiths	.3063
Boiler makers	.2956
Calkers, wood	.3656
Fitters	.2814
Riveters	.3072

The labor organizations have done more to maintain and increase the wages of the American workingmen and to improve their conditions than have the protective-tariff laws.

Mr. Taft, when he was a candidate for President in 1908, in a speech at East Liverpool, Ohio, said:

I sympathize with the men that by manual labor are building up this country, and to say that I am opposed to their organizations and trades-unions is to say what is utterly false, for I have studied the question. I have had to study it as a judge. I have had to study it as an executive officer discharging duties affecting labor and labor organizations, and I am strongly in favor of them. I believe they have done a great service to labor in elevating its wages, in enabling them to meet capital on a level and secure justice for them, in enabling them to apply to Congress and State legislatures and secure legislation in their behalf, and I think it would be a sorry day for this country if labor organizations were not encouraged.

The protective-tariff laws not only fail to insure good wages for the wage earners, but impose unjust burdens upon the consuming masses. Such laws are unjust because they discriminate between different classes of citizens. Many are required to pay a tariff tax without receiving any benefits whatever under the tariff laws.

Under the laws now in force the farmers of my State are required to pay a tariff tax on nearly everything they purchase and sell their produce at prices fixed in the open markets of the world, without receiving any benefit from the tariff. These farmers must pay a tariff tax on their clothing, their household goods, the lumber for their houses, the wire for their fences, their carriages, wagons, and all their farming implements. When they market their crops of wheat and corn they must sell them for prices fixed in the open market, because millions of bushels of wheat and corn are exported yearly from this country.

The bill now pending before the House, if enacted, will reduce the tariff taxes to a just revenue basis, and relieve the farmers and other consumers of the tax burden which has been placed upon them by the existing laws.

This bill places on the free list agricultural implements—plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, wagons, and carts, and all other agricultural implements, and raw wool; and reduces yarn, from 79.44 per cent to 20 per cent; blankets, from 72.69 per cent to 25 per cent; flannels, from 93.29 per cent to 25 and 35 per cent, according to value; dress goods, from 99.70 per cent to 35 per cent; clothing, from 79.56 per cent to 35 per cent; webbings, and so forth, from 82.07 per cent to 35 per cent; and carpets from rates ranging from 50 per cent to 88 per cent to rates ranging from 20 per cent to 50 per cent, and makes material reductions on other necessaries of life.

I fully approve the principle of the Democratic Party that the Government has no right to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purposes of revenue to pay the necessary expenses of the Government. I agree that much of the revenue needed by the Government should be collected by tariff duties upon imports.

It is surprising to hear gentlemen on the other side of this House speak of the pending bill as a free-trade measure, when the bill provides for an average duty of 29 per cent ad valorem. The Democratic Party does not favor free trade, but stands for a low tariff, properly adjusted upon a revenue basis. This country prospered under low-tariff laws before the Civil War. The duties were raised and lowered at different times, but at no time did the Democratic Party or any other party attempt to put the country on a free-trade basis.

The Walker tariff of 1846, with an average duty of about 24½ per cent ad valorem, continued in force to the satisfaction of the people for a period of 11 years, a longer period than any other tariff law has remained in force without agitation for a change.

Hon. James G. Blaine, in his book Twenty Years of Congress, said:

The principles embodied in the tariff of 1846 seemed for the time to be so entirely vindicated and approved that resistance to it ceased, not only among the people but among the protective economists, and even among the manufacturers to a large extent. So general was this acquiescence that in 1856 a protective tariff was not suggested or even hinted by any one of the three parties which presented presidential candidates.

The needs for revenue during the Civil War caused the duties on imports to be raised. Since then various changes have been made in our tariff laws, but the duties have been kept high. For several years the people have been demanding a reduction in the tariff. The Republicans failed to comply with that demand. Last fall the people elected the Democrats to reduce the tariff and make other reforms. By the enactment of the pending bill the tariff will be properly reduced, the consuming masses will be relieved of the unjust tax burden now imposed upon them, and business will be placed upon a natural and permanent basis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, it is a most important and significant fact that in the course of this long debate no man has appeared here to represent the interests of the wool manufacturer or the great American Woolen Co. They say they oppose tariff reduction because it will injure the laboring man. The plea of defending others is a subterfuge as old as history, used to divert attention from that which can not be openly defended. Every man who has enslaved another man has enslaved him under the claim that it was for the benefit of the enslaved. Every nation that has conquered and subjugated a defenseless people has conquered them under the claim that it was to better the condition of the subjugated. Every burden that has been heaped upon the masses of the people for the benefit of the few has been heaped upon them under the claim that it was for the benefit of the many. This plea of defending labor is only a repetition in history—the defense of monopoly, extortion, and the invasion of human rights.

Mr. Chairman, there is and can be no justification for the policy of high protection, especially so far as the same affects the vital necessaries of life. There is and can be no justification for increasing the cost of necessaries, and rendering them more difficult for the people to obtain, for private benefit. There is and can be no justification for taxing the necessaries of life consumed by one man for the special benefit of another man. There is and can be no justification for taxing the vital necessaries of life to make a so-called reasonable profit, or to make any profit, other than the fair and reasonable cost of their production, because necessaries are a part of the earth which man takes along with the right of habitation, and you have no more right to restrict their use to the people than you have to set a limit upon the right of man to live. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There was a time when the individual man was more independent for the necessaries of life than he is to-day. There was a time when every man produced with his own hand, or under his own roof, or within his own control a supply of all or the greater part of his needs. But the increasing population of the earth and industrial change have compelled him to specialize, to cease general production for himself, and either to produce along one single line and depend upon others for a part of his necessaries, or to work for wages and depend upon others for all of his necessaries. This absolute dependency of one man upon another man for the vital necessaries of life has brought a new problem before society, and has enjoined a new duty upon government—the duty of protecting necessaries from private monopoly and of holding them free from increasing cost for the use of all the people. The right to live is not more vital than the right to enjoy the necessaries of life. The fruits and products of the earth are as essential to man as the right of existence itself. To suffer the hands of private monopoly upon necessaries, under the shelter of a high protective tariff, to increase their cost and render them more difficult for the people to obtain is not only a restraint upon human welfare, but it is a restriction upon the very right to live.

The common articles of food, and clothing and fuel, and materials for shelter are among such necessaries. They are the natural inheritance of man, and the people are entitled to enjoy their use and comforts free from the burdens of private monopoly, and at the least cost consistent with production.

I deny the principle of high protection, as the same affects the vital necessaries of life. I deny the right to increase the cost of necessaries and render them more difficult to obtain for private benefit. I deny the right to tax the necessaries consumed by one man for the special benefit of another man. [Applause.] I deny the right to tax the vital necessaries of life to make so-called reasonable profits for the benefit of any individual or any private interest; I deny that governments are instituted among men to extort profits from the necessaries required for human existence. I deny the right to maintain a system of tariff taxation under which the cost of the vital necessaries of life have been raised so high to the laboring man that he can no longer with his own hands and his labor support a family, but must drive his children out of the cradle into the factories and into the sweatshops to earn their own living and burden society with the curse of child labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON].

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in the category of some other Democratic Members of this Congress who worked and voted in the Democratic caucus for a tariff on wool. I represent a large woolgrowing State, and I have labored for a tariff on wool for two reasons.

In the first place, the revenue necessary to run this Government, which must be raised by the Democrats now that they are charged with the duty of carrying on the Government, is very large, something like one thousand million dollars a year, and this vast sum will never be less, but will increase year by year, and it must be raised mainly by a tariff on imports, according to the traditional Democratic policy. Wool has always been a large revenue producer and always will be, as it is a world commodity and universally in demand. In the second place, I believe that the tariff for revenue should be equitably adjusted with reference to all revenue-producing commodities, and also with reference to all sections of our country, so that any incidental benefit that may flow from such revenue tariff may be fairly distributed. New Mexico, being a large producer of wool, and many of my constituents fearing that the placing of wool on the free list may injure this industry of our State, I know it is my duty to represent their interests in this matter. But, notwithstanding my belief that in this first reduction of the tariff it would have been better for the industry in my State and more in accordance with the wishes of my constituents to leave a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem on wool, I am going to vote for this bill, which places wool on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The reasons which compel me to so vote I shall now briefly state.

The tariff is being revised this year, not as last year by a separate bill for each schedule, but by a single bill, including all schedules or subjects in one bill, and therefore to vote against the bill would be to vote against the cherished political principles of a lifetime. It would be to vote against the graduated income-tax measure in this bill, the fairest and most just tax ever invented, by which the heaviest burden of taxation shall be borne by the greatest beneficiaries of our heretofore partial Government, under which enormous fortunes have been accumulated in private hands, and which great fortunes will be protected by our Government for the future, no matter how unjustly acquired, under the unquestioned constitutional provision that sacredly guards the rights of property as well as of person. Those without wealth have borne the burden of taxation heretofore; hereafter let those who have escaped taxation, who have even got the lion's share of taxes extorted from the poor, ostensibly for revenue purposes, pay the taxes in proportion to the wealth they hold but have not earned. Further, to vote against this tariff bill is to vote to continue in force the infamous Payne-Aldrich tariff, which Democrats and Progressives alike are pledged to wipe off the statute books; for the repeal of which the Democrats and Progressives cast, in round numbers, 7,000,000 out of a total of 10,000,000 votes in the last election.

To vote against this bill is to vote to continue the rule of this country by private monopoly—by those "malefactors of great wealth" who have by the insidious power of wealth, of wealth unpatriotic, insatiable, and cruel, perverted our beneficent system of representative government into a government representative only of their private interests and desires.

To vote against this bill is to vote against the interests of my own State in this: It is to vote to continue undestroyed, even unimpeded in the exercise of its selfish power, the wool monopoly, which has destroyed the effect of the existing tariff of 11 cents per pound on raw wool. This is proven by the undisputed fact that since the tariff of 11 cents per pound on wool was enacted wool has sold at about the same price in the London market, in free-trade England, as in protected United States. This pregnant, most instructive fact can be accounted for in no other way than that the Wool Trust (and remember that there is no other object in forming a trust than to create a monopoly) has the power, since it is the sole purchaser of wool in this country, to beat down the price of its raw material for its own advantage; and since it is the only seller of manufactured woolen goods in this country, protected by a high tariff, it also has the power to demand extortionate prices for its woolen goods. This artificial system has destroyed the effectiveness of the tariff of 11 cents on raw wool, and every woolgrower is interested in destroying the Wool Trust.

I have the hope, almost amounting to absolute belief, that free wool will be better for my State and for woolgrowers everywhere in our country than present conditions under the sway of the private monopoly in wool. Remember the case of hides. The cattle industry was alarmed some years ago when the tariff on hides was removed. But since hides were placed on the free list they have sold at a higher price than when they were "protected." Hides and leather are a world commodity, subject to the world demand, because they are a world-wide necessity. Wool is also a world commodity and a necessity to all of mankind, and in universal and constantly growing demand. It is at least probable that wool, like hides, unshackled from the artificial manipulation of the wool monopoly, itself shielded by an outrageous tariff wall, will sell even higher than it has heretofore sold under artificial restrictions. The conditions can be no worse for the wool-raising industry than they now are under conditions which have caused it to be selling no higher here than in free-trade England. Stripped of extraneous causes, if the theory of protection is sound, wool should now be selling for 11 cents per pound more than in England. Free wool can not be any worse than that, whatever the cause. Furthermore, I am in accord with this bill because all of my life I have been fighting by the side of those Democrats who believe it is wrong to maintain by law special privileges in this free Government. Under the sway of the trusts we have seen such anomalies as this: While Mr. Carnegie was making his $500,000,000 in a short lifetime, we have seen his workingmen almost shot down in strikes in an effort to get a part of the loot of protection. We have seen in a later day the inhumanity that caused the strike at Lawrence. I attended the hearings about that strike. Here in free America, a trust magnate in charge of those mills at Lawrence, reputed, I have heard some say, to be worth $100,000,000—nobody denying that he is worth tens of millions of dollars, the head of the Wool Trust—we have seen little boys and girls working in those mills because the father, with five or six children, gets such meager wages that he is compelled to take his 10 or 12 year old son or daughter out of school and put them to work. They conducted that strike under awful conditions. They said to this magnate that the price of their meat and bread and necessary clothing had doubled under the sway of the special interests. They went humbly and asked for a raise of wages and they were denied, and the strike came.

Mr. CAMPBELL rose.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. I do not want to be discourteous, but I have something to say and only a short time. The whole movement that has united the Democratic Party all over this country, which has split the Republican Party in half—and from my standpoint the best half of it is now disputing with the Democrats for a stand on the platform for the people—compels me to vote for this bill. Not to vote for it I should have to deny all of the teachings of my youth and my whole study of public questions since I became a man and all that I have been trying to do in a humble way since I have been in public life. I shall therefore vote for this bill not, as it is flippantly charged on the other side, because I am gagged by a caucus. I shall not vote for it for that reason. I vote for it as a free man, untrammeled, because I believe it will be no worse under free wool for the growers of wool in my State than it is when the benefit of 11 cents a pound on wool is denied them through the power and domination of a monopoly. I vote for it, also, upon the broad ground that the great movement of the people, the great rebellion in this country, using that term in a political sense, against the cruel domination of special interests is such that I would belie every impulse of my nature if I did not do so. Being in accord with this new Democratic administration, which represents not only the Democratic Party, but also half of the Republican Party, and, to my mind, the patriotic half of it, I would be recreant to every sense of right if I did not vote for the bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have agreed to yield five minutes to a gentleman who is not now in the Chamber. If he comes in I will yield to him, but if he does not there will be but one other speech upon this side of the House.

Mr. MANN. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I am receiving a great number of protests from manufacturers of my district and State against the passage of this bill. They fear its results, and, in my opinion, there is just cause for this fear. In my home city of Camden, N. J., we have several manufacturers of worsted and woolen yarns, and I am in receipt of a letter from one of the largest of these concerns advising me of the activities of English manufacturers who are watching the progress of this tariff bill, and inclosing a letter which they have received from a firm of brokers in Bradford, England. My correspondent says this letters speaks for itself, and that it is very clear as to the effect the Underwood bill will have upon the sale of merchandise by American manufacturers. I wish to place in the RECORD the contents of this English firm's letter in full:

BRADFORD, April 22, 1913.

Messrs. B. F. BOYER & Co., Camden, N. J.

GENTLEMEN: In view of impending modifications of the present American tariff for wools, etc., we take the liberty of submitting to you samples of a few of our regular makes of noils, etc., which we recommend to your kind consideration.

Naturally, we are aware that the revised tariff is not yet an accomplished fact, but we wish to be prepared for any eventuality, and in the event of our anticipation being realized we trust to be favored with your esteemed commands.

Meanwhile we should be glad if you would carefully keep our offers before you, as we propose to keep you regularly posted with revised price lists.

Our yarn department would be pleased to attend to any yarn inquiries.

We are, gentlemen,
Yours, very respectfully, JOHNSTON & FARIE.

Accompanying this letter is the following price list:

	Pence per pound.
3752. Brown (code word) botany noils, regular make	17¼
3753. Bean (code word) botany noils, regular make	17½
3754. Bold (code word) botany noils, regular make	17¾
3755. Bowl (code word) botany noils, regular make	18⅛
3756. Bright (code word) botany noils, regular make	19
3757. Build (code word) carbonized burrs, regular make	14½
3758. Brake (code word) camel hair noils, regular make	29½
3759. Britch (code word) camel hair noils, regular make	29½

F. o. b. Liverpool. 1¼ per cent discount 30 days date of bill of lading. In presspacked bales, about 5/600 pounds per bale. Weights as per conditioning-house certificate.

Mr. Chairman, I desire also to call the attention of the House to a statement made to me about one year ago, when the wool schedule was being considered. Mr. Boyer said, "Mr. BROWNING, I wish you people would pass whatever tariff bill is to be passed, so that we may adjust our business thereto;" he added, "and we can adjust our business to any tariff you may make." I asked him how this could be done, and his reply was, "If you reduce the tariff on wool and wool products and we are compelled to compete with the foreign manufacturer, our employees will have to accept the foreign wage or else we shall be compelled to close our mill." He then added, "Why, Mr. BROWNING, do you know that we made more money during the Cleveland hard times than we ever made in our lives?" I was much surprised at this statement, as I knew their mill was closed during that period, and I asked him how he made the money, and he said, "Why, we bought the finished product from abroad and sold it here." He said further, "Our mill was closed and I did not have between four and five hundred working for me, as I have at the present time."

I also hold in my hand a letter from Eavenson & Levering, a firm of wool scourers, carbonizers, and combers, of Camden, N. J., and as this communication is quite lengthy I shall not attempt to publish all of it in the RECORD, but will quote two paragraphs:

We have carefully considered the portion of the bill relating to our industry, and look upon its passage with very great fear.

We carbonize a considerable proportion of all the noils produced in this country, and while we find the Underwood bill recognizes the comber, the spinner, the weaver, and so on, it distinctly discriminates against the carbonizer by placing carbonized wool and noils on the free list. On this basis we are surely in for it.

Mr. Chairman, I think further comments are unnecessary. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I do not see the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], my esteemed friend, in the House, for I feel that I would like to shake hands with him cordially upon his proposition that the sheep is as good as the goat—concerning which the provisions of the schedule raise a doubt—and that while a Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee formulating the bill he was individually consistent in that he favored an equivalent duty on wool to that accorded to goat hair. It was the committee as a whole that so discriminated. But I do contend that the benefits of protection should be equally distributed, equitably divided between our productions. Certainly the sheep should not be displaced by the goat. I favor both. I do not gainsay the consistency or the propriety of the gentleman in standing up for the industries of his own district. If a Member will not look out for the interests of the district which he has the honor to represent who will or should do so?

Mr. Chairman, on the wool schedule, which has been ably discussed, I desire to say I am not an expert. I appreciate it is one of the most intricate of any of the schedules contained in the bill, and I have not risen for the express purpose of expressing myself in regard to the schedule. Speaking generally or broadsides with reference to the whole Underwood revision, I am for what emanates from the side of protection rather than from the Democratic side, because I favor the policy of protection. I believe firmly in its virtues, and that is one reason that I am here to represent my district.

I favor Republican revision, Mr. Chairman, rather than Democratic revision, because Republican revision is intended to conserve the beneficence of the policy of protection. Democratic revision does not pretend to conserve the policy of protection, but it is avowedly against and antagonistic to it. How can you expect the enemies to the policy of protection to conserve the policy? Protectionists seek to regulate rates, adjust rates in accordance with the changes in conditions which are constantly going on, while conserving the policy of protection. Now, I grant that the Democratic Party is perfectly consistent and logical in opposing a tariff board. For what use or utility is a tariff board without tariff? There can be no necessity for a tariff board when free trade is the goal.

Mr. Chairman, I do not contend that this bill as a whole provides for free trade. We all know it is very much of a mixture; but the policy and purpose evinced by its provisions, considered in connection with party declarations, show free trade to be the ultimate.

Mr. Chairman, what of the new proposition of the majority party for competitive tariff? Competition, fair and legitimate, is what protectionists seek, and it is what the policy of protection scientifically regulated secures. It was protection adopted by our young Republic that produced defensive competition in our home markets against monopolistic prices placed on foreign manufactures. With further development it successfully resisted the "dumping policy" of British manufacturers intended to destroy our home industries. With yet further development it has secured domestic competition.

Mr. Chairman, what sort of competition does free trade bring? It strikes me the Democratic Party in its legislative aspirations has become too big for our home country. It would seem that the party has become very altruistic and aspires to extend the benefits of its legislation to foreign countries upon equal or better terms than are to be enjoyed by our home producers in our home market.

Who of its advocates pretends that free trade is for the benefit of the home producer? Not one will so contend. On the contrary, it is avowedly against the prices of home products, claimed to be too high. The admitted purpose of free trade is to permit unrestricted competition of foreign products in our own markets, to the end that prices to consumers be reduced, to the benefit of foreign production, with a corresponding loss to home producers.

Mr. Chairman, protectionists stand for the home producer as well as for the consumer; the policy favors the people who do things as well as the consuming public. I am frank to say, however, that I regard a distinct classification of producers and consumers as wholly impracticable. My judgment is that in our industrious country it is only a small percentage of adults that are not producers.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the competition brought by unrestricted trade of foreigners in our home market is one-sided and illegitimate. It is perfectly clear that to permit the productions of foreign countries to come into free competition in our home market with home productions gives to foreign countries the advantage; it gives the foreign producer the advantage because of the much smaller cost of production in his than in our country. Therefore American producers, with free trade, are not allowed to participate in their own home markets on equal terms with the foreign producer.

Mr. Chairman, it essentially follows that the Democratic Party regards the difference of the cost in production abroad and at home as an immaterial consideration. Instead of making advantages equal merely, they would make them unequal by abolishing tariff, the equalizer, and thus give the productions of cheap-labor countries the advantage in our home market. Protectionists would by rates of duties imposed make up the difference in the cost of production and thereby secure equal advantage, at least to the home producer, and thus preserve the higher standards of wages and living at home than abroad. Free trade, on the other hand, would reduce our standards of wages and living to the impoverishing low level prevalent with some of our foreign competitors.

Mr. Chairman, I make no apology for advocating, if it may be so called, "artificial" means, by the imposition of duties on foreign products for the preservation of our higher standards of wages and living. I regard this as the province of constructive and patriotic statesmanship. And what is free trade? It is a mere negative. It is not a constructive device. It is against constructiveness. As applied by this bill, its effect, in some instances, must be to wholly destroy domestic competition in the home market with foreign productions, resulting in monopoly for the foreign producer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it would seem the Democratic Party has forsaken the fireside adage, "Charity should begin at home." I avow my belief in the doctrine of the Scripture that "He who does not provide for his own household is worse than an infidel," and I would have this apply to the Nation the same as to the family. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, the Members on this side are admonished by the gentleman from New York after the passage of this bill not to go back to their home districts and attempt to scare the farmer. I desire to assure him that no one on this side of the House has any such intention, and I am satisfied that if my Democratic colleagues from the wool districts of the State of Ohio should vote for this bill that they will soon afterwards become so scared and afraid that they will not want to go back to Ohio. [Applause on the Republican side.] I did not rise to engage in the discussion of the woolen schedule except as to one feature. The discussion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania during the general debate and his detailed explanation of the working of that protective piece of legislation known as the dumping clause left within me the hope that when I went back home after this bill was passed that the shoe manufacturers of my district would at least have some protection and that the woolgrowers of my district would have some protection. But, subsequently, I have had an interpretation of this dumping clause given from a good Democrat upon the other side, the able gentleman from the State of Georgia, who, in order to avoid the force and the great weight of the argument of the gentleman from Michigan to show that taking the duty off sugar would not make it any cheaper to the consumers, said this day before yesterday. This is from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]:

> The antidumping clause will have no effect whatever on the sugar situation, for the simple reason that if the gentleman will read the dumping clause carefully he will find that it applies only to a commodity upon which a duty is established, and it applies to no commodity that is on the free list, and so far as free sugar is concerned it could have no effect.

That is the sticking point, gentlemen. Why have you undertaken to add further protection to these unconstitutional and tax-sustained industries? Many of these industries could not operate except for the tax you have in this bill, and now you propose to aid them further by this additional protection, but the shoe industry in my district, boots and shoes are put on the free list. Where does the woolgrower come in if this is the correct interpretation of the law? When I first looked at the act I did not think it warranted such a construction, but the more I read it the more I am satisfied that the gentleman from Georgia is right. Now, it seems to me that if you want to treat these people right, in all fairness you ought to have prepared another dumping clause which would cover the shoe industry, the woolen industry, the potato industry, and the products of the agriculturists of this country. Wool, potatoes, and shoes are on the free list, and according to the construction placed on the "dumping-clause" section by the gentleman from Georgia, they are not afforded any protection thereunder.

Why, just take it in the case of the woolen industry. You have taken from the woolgrower of my district the protection on his wool, and you have given it to the manufacturer of the East, affording him that additional protection, and now you propose to aid him further with this dumping clause. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You further protect the cotton factories of North Carolina, but you afford no protection to the shoe factory in my district, because shoes are on the free list.

You further protect rice by this "dumping clause," because rice is a tax-sustained industry; but wool, which will be made a legitimate industry by the pending measure, if enacted into law, by being left untaxed, will have no protection.

The "dumping clause" of your act only protects articles on the dutiable list, and, according to Democratic interpretation, it affords no relief to the makers of shoes and growers of wool and many other agricultural products carried on the free list. It matters not to the framers of the pending measure how many million bushels of potatoes may be dumped into the American markets from Nova Scotia or Germany, at a price much lower than that in the market of the country from which they are exported, and in this unfair way rob our potato raisers of their home market.

It matters not to these gentlemen how much wool or how many shoes may be dumped into our country at a price below that prevailing in the country from which they are exported, but when it comes to cotton fabrics and woolen goods and the larger part of the products of the factory, many of which are already protected by the duties carried in the dutiable list, we find them additionally protected by this "dumping clause" which prevents the foreigner unloading large quantities of these articles onto us at a price lower than the prevailing price in the country from which they come. I do not believe this is fair to our shoe manufacturers, our woolgrowers, and farmers, and at the proper time I will offer an amendment providing a "dumping clause" for the protection of their industries.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] five minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, in the amendment which I had prepared I inserted a clause requiring all woolen manufactures to be put on the free list. My object in doing that was to accentuate the comparative favoritism shown to the woolen manufacturers in the Underwood bill; not that I am willing to strike down in retaliation the woolen manufacturer because the wool raiser is put upon the free list, but in order to focus the attention of the Nation and the people of my district upon the fact that the woolen manufacturer in the Underwood bill is favored to the disadvantage of the wool raiser.

Mr. Chairman, representatives of the woolen manufacturers appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means urging free wool. On the other hand, they claim that they will be satisfied with the 50 per cent ad valorem duty upon the manufactured article. You have given them by this bill within 15 per cent of what they demanded. Yet you have absolutely rejected the claims of wool raisers for protection. You have inferentially said that the woolen manufacturer is only 15 per cent illegitimate and the wool raiser is 100 per cent illegitimate.

Mr. Chairman, the State which I represent, the State of Oregon, has been generous with the Democratic Party under the Oregon system. I would like to have time to say something about that system and the fidelity of the Republicans in my State to their pledges on statement No. 1—that they would vote for the popular choice for United States Senator. Because these Republicans kept their pledges you now have two Democrats in the United States Senate from the State of Oregon, an overwhelming Republican State. [Applause.]

These two gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, in the last campaign canvassed the great sheep-raising districts of eastern Oregon. They placated and allayed the fears and the apprehensions of the wool raiser with iteration and reiteration of that plank in your platform that no legitimate industry would be injured. Oh, what a sweet-sounding phrase that then was on the great sheep ranges of eastern Oregon! And now what has it become? It was then plain and unambiguous, but now it is so abstruse, so recondite, a veritable Delphic oracle of double meaning when interpreted and expounded in the light of the Punic faith of the philologists of the Ways and Means Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. May I have just another minute?

Mr. MANN. I yield one more minute.

Mr. SINNOTT. If you gentlemen desire to return these gentlemen from Oregon to the other side of the Capitol, do not send them back to Oregon with that subterfuge, that excuse, "that the great sheep industry of the State of Oregon is not a legitimate industry." Do not force them to tell the people of Oregon that the caucus has compelled you to strike down the sheep industry. Mr. Chairman, a dispensation coming from the casuists of the caucus will absolve no one from breaking party pledges under the Oregon system. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We hear something about the soldiers in this caucus, about what a gallant, heroic fight those gentlemen put up for their interests. Their story reminds me of old Jack Falstaff telling the story of the battle at Gads Hill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, not only in the State of the gentleman who has spoken but throughout the country our Democratic friends in the last campaign held out hope to the people that legitimate industries need not fear any result of the election of a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President.

The signing of a note carries with it the implication that some time the note must be paid. The making of an obligation by an individual or by a party carries with it a suggestion that some time the party must be called upon to say whether or not it will meet the obligation in the terms in which it was made. You are now confronted with meeting the obligation that you assumed only a few months ago, when you urged upon the people of this country that no legitimate industry need fear the result of your action upon the tariff question.

Already, to-day, some of our Democratic friends are apologizing for the action which they know they must take, under the mandate of the Democratic caucus, within a few days. Others, with more candor and with more frankness, appear to admit that the wool industry—and I take it that that includes all the industries that are correlated with it—is an industry that is not legitimate, and therefore ought to suffer at the hands of the party that is now in control.

You have already heard presented to you this afternoon some comparisons touching the cost of labor in the manufacturing industries in this country and abroad, as they will be affected by the wool schedule. I want very briefly to call attention to some of the comparisons that may be made on the part of those who are engaged in the growing of wool in this country as contrasted with those who grow wool in foreign countries.

Take my own State as an illustration—a State that ranks third in the production of wool in the United States. There the wages paid by the growers of wool are something like from $35 to $5 and more per month to the individual sheep herders. Not only that, but an expense for maintenance of something like $12.50 to $16 per month must be added. Compare that, if you please, with the wages paid for similar lines of work in other countries.

In Great Britain, near to the great mills there, the wages that are received by those who care for the sheep are something like from $5.25 to $5.50 per week, and they are required to "keep" themselves.

In Australia the wages that are paid to the tenders or drivers, as they are called in Australia, instead of being from $35 to $50 per month, as in my State, range from something like $5 per week to $7.50 and $10 for the more experienced, or not much more than 50 per cent of the wages paid in the State of Idaho.

In South America the difference is even worse than in Australia. The wages paid in South America represent something like one-third of the wages paid for the same service in the United States.

Go, then, if you please, to continental Europe. Go to that section of Europe which is to-day in the throes of war, where the people are trying to throw off a bondage that is worse than slavery, and you will find people, competing with the American woolgrower, receiving from 25 cents to 50 cents per week in addition to their keep, who, upon the passage of this bill, will be put into competition with the laborers working for the American producer of wool.

Now, that is not all. The conditions which our people have to meet in the West are different from the conditions in foreign countries in other respects. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] seemed to eliminate from consideration the production of wool by the farmers of Ohio and the other Eastern States, taking it for granted in his remarks that the sections of country that have the wide expanse of desert lands will be the only sections within the United States that can or ought to produce wool. Therefore, if the conditions are hard and will be intolerable in those States, how much more intolerable, according to his own argument, must they be in sections of the country where sheep are produced upon lands that are incapable of intensive cultivation.

But I do not intend to dwell upon comparison in cost of production within the various States within our own country.

If the producer of the West has some advangtage over the producers of States like Michigan and Ohio from the standpoint of range, the producer of these older States has an advantage possible from the quality of the wool that he may be able to sell. These advantages or disadvantages must necessarily be taken care of by the ordinary laws of competition in the markets of our country.

I said, however, that there were disadvantages with which the producer in our own country is compelled to contend that are not met with by the producers of wool in some of the chief competing foreign countries.

Take, for instance, the number of sheep that may be handled by a sheep herder within our own country and compare the conditions with the conditions surrounding those who care for the sheep in South America or in Australia.

In our western country a band of sheep is made up of less than 2,000 head, or something like 1,700 sheep. In Australia a rider, as the tender is called in that country, will take charge, not of 1,700 or 2,000 head of sheep, but of several thousand head, and, as I said a little while ago, he receives something like one-half the compensation that he receives for doing a similar kind of work within the United States.

Much of the lands of the West that are now available as pasture lands are included within vast reservations belonging to the Government and are leased to the growers of sheep at from 7 cents to 9 cents per acre, which by comparison is about 400 per cent as much as is charged in Australia for the leasing of land by the Government for grazing of sheep.

We should also consider the question of freight rate. It costs, of course, something to the man who has wool to sell in Australia or South America to get his wool clip from the place of production to the port from which it may be shipped to the markets of the world.

It also costs something to the woolgrower of the West to haul his wool clip to the station from which shipment may be made to our eastern markets. In all probability this comparison would be in favor of the American producer, but compare with that the cost of shipping the wool either from Australia or South America to Boston with the cost of shipping wool from the stations in Idaho to such wool markets as Philadelphia, New York, or Boston.

It costs the woolgrower of Australia something like from 1¼ to 1½ cents per pound to ship his wool by steamer from Sydney to Boston, and if he were willing to take a little longer time and use a sailing vessel instead, he may ship it for something like one-eighth of a cent per pound cheaper still.

On the other hand, it costs the woolgrower of Idaho from 1¾ to 2½ cents per pound to ship his wool to the same markets.

The comparison made with respect to the cost of shipping wool from Australia is no more unfavorable than when compared with the cost of shipping wool from South America to the wool centers and the cost of shipping wool from our own sections of production to these same centers.

Hence I say here is a practical illustration of the necessity of this Government maintaining a duty to protect the producers of our own land from the competition of lands where wool can be produced at so much cheaper a price than it can be produced at home.

The woolgrower is not the only one benefited by the maintenance of the industry. There are something like three-quarters of a million producers throughout the United States engaged in the production of wool. This does not represent, however, the vast body of people who are dependent almost directly upon the wool industry.

In Australia and South America the seasons are so open that little feeding is needed during the winter months. In many of our States that produce wool it is necessary to buy forage for the use of the flocks during the winter season, and this entails not only a cost upon the sheep raiser but also constitutes an industry in which thousands of people engage who do not own sheep themselves.

We are at this time engaged in reclaiming large areas of hitherto desert land in our great West. It takes years of time to bring land of this character into a productive state if orcharding alone is depended upon. Distance from markets renders the land less valuable for the production of still other crops.

The maintenance of the sheep business in or near the regions that are reclaimed furnishes a market at once for one of the easiest crops that can be produced after lands have been reclaimed from their desert condition. We raise thousands of tons of alfalfa upon these desert lands, and this constitutes a commodity that in the nature of things should find a ready market at home, for it has such bulk that it can not be shipped any considerable distance else the freight charges will consume the profit.

To strike down the wool industry, to strike down the sheep business, means as well to strike a blow at this industry, which has been one of the most productive of ready money to the thousands of people throughout the West engaged in the development of our arid lands.

Finally, then, this whole question again emphasizes the importance of tariff modification upon the basis of an intelligent report of a tariff commission. The Tariff Board reported upon the woolen schedule about one year ago. We have facts touching production in foreign countries and at home that are practically up to date.

The wise thing, the patriotic thing for us to do at this time is to accept an amendment similar to that which has been proposed by the gentleman from New York, which constitutes a schedule based upon the reports of the Tariff Commission, a schedule that would do equity and justice at once to the producer upon the one hand and to the masses of consumers upon the other.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, every given commodity that is offered for sale is worth just what it will fetch, no more and no less. In making the price the cost of the labor that is involved in making the commodity is all important.

It has been stated during this debate that it will take between 9 and 10 pounds of wool to make a suit of clothes; that the cost of the wool in the raw is anywhere from $2 to $2.50; and yet a fine worsted suit of clothes will cost anywhere from $30 to $60.

Now, that is due almost entirely to the cost of the labor that has gone into that suit of clothes. The great wool-manufacturing section of England, which country would increase, in my judgment, its export of woolen goods to the United States enormously if the Underwood bill goes through, is Yorkshire.

I have in my hand a copy of the Yorkshire Observer of Monday, December 30, 1912, which contains a résumé of the activities in the industries of that county for the preceding 12 months. In an article headed "Wool and Wool Textiles in America," the writer says:

> The weakness of the American Woolen Co., broadly speaking, lies in its manufacture of the finer woolen fabrics where, with the high labor cost, protection is badly needed. The tariff question ultimately comes down to this labor-cost item, for as this wage cost percentage rises, so does the need of protection and the danger from crude reductions through unscientific tariff legislation.

That states the case in a nutshell. What is the difference in the labor cost in the production of manufactured woolen cloths in Yorkshire as compared to the cost in this country? The Providence Journal, which is one of the leading free-trade newspapers in this country, on April 18, 1913, published an interview with Mr. Harrison Benn, a leading wool manufacturer of the State of Rhode Island, whose company also owns a mill in Bradford, Yorkshire. In that interview the gentleman states clearly what he has to pay in his mill in the United States and in the mill which he also owns in Bradford, England. He says:

> In the Bradford plant we pay a weaver 48 cents for weaving a cut of cloth, and for the same thing here we pay $1.49; for goods that cost us 78 cents there we pay $2.41 here; and for goods that cost 98 cents there we pay $3.01 here. In the spinning room the prices range from $2.23 to $2.88 per week there, and here for the same kind of work on the same machines we pay from $5.35 to $7.50 per week. Another difference is in the pay which we have to give our apprentices. They are obliged to serve four years, and in the Bradford plant they receive for those four years $1.92, $2.40 $2.88, and $3.36 per week. In the Graystone plant they receive for the four years $6.50, $7.50, $9, and $10.50.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Small wonder, therefore, that the Yorkshire Observer, in its article on the "Huddersfield fine worsted trade," makes this comment:

> The United States trade, although still comparatively small, has improved during the year, and the proposed revision of the tariff, which is looked forward to with some confidence, is expected to result in a considerable accession of business.

Of course the English manufacturers of fine worsteds look forward to a large increase of business when the Wilson-Underwood bill is enacted into law. They have learned by past experience that so soon as our own factories close down, by reason of their inability to compete with the cheaper labor of England, the business of the English manufacturer increases considerably. But you on that side of the aisle are properly designated Bourbons. You learn nothing from past experiences. It is almost idle to discuss the provisions of this bill with you. You are deaf to all arguments.

You have the votes to put your bill through without any amendments whatever so long as you have control of Congress. I am glad that you have majorities in the Senate and the House that will enable you to assume full responsibility for this measure. You will not be able to charge any of its shortcomings to the Republican Party, and you will have to take all the consequences of the injuries you will have inflicted on legitimate business in this country as a result of this legislation. I feel confident that the near future will once again demonstrate your inability to frame constructive legislation.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this article from the New York Sun of May 2, 1913, which clearly explains the attitude of the American manufacturer in his opposition to this bill:

OUR MANUFACTURED EXPORTS—SECRETARY REDFIELD'S FIGURES UPSET BY HIS OWN DEPARTMENT'S STATISTICS.

To the EDITOR OF THE SUN.

SIR: On April 21 you published an interview with Secretary of Commerce Redfield under the head "Redfield sees big boom ahead." I, in common with all other good citizens, would like to believe the Secretary is correct in his prophecy.

His statements, however, regarding the tariff and business seem to be based upon hope rather than facts. At the outset, he is quoted as saying: "American manufactured goods are going abroad all over the world, and in many different lines of production, to the annual extent of something like $1,500,000,000, or, say, at the rate of $5,000,000 a day for the ordinary working year." This sounds good, but it isn't the fact. The only authority upon the subject of exports is the Department of Commerce, over which Mr. Redfield presides. In the Annual Review of the Foreign Commerce of the United States for the year ended June 30, 1912, in Table VI, pages 66 and 67, it is stated that in the fiscal year 1912 we exported of "manufactures for further use in manufacturing" $348,149,524 and of "manufactures ready for consumption" $672,268,163, or a total of all kinds of partly and completely manufactured articles of $1,020,417,687. This total is nearly $500,000,000 less than the Secretary stated it to be, and to get even this total we must include all partly manufactured articles. If Secretary Redfield makes such a startling error in his figures, it is apparent at once that he has not investigated the matter very carefully, and yet he is said to be "the acknowledged tariff expert in the Cabinet."

Secretary Redfield says the manufacturers must develop greater efficiency. We are all striving for that. In all the industries the competition among the domestic manufacturers has been so severe that each manufacturer has been compelled to maintain his plant at the highest efficiency. This has led to a marvelous development in machine tools and special machinery of high speed. Our factories are now the best equipped in the world, and it is simply ridiculous for anyone to say that we are behind in efficiency. It can not be proved. No one even attempts to prove it. Such a statement is mere words. As rapidly as we develop efficiency our methods are copied in European factories.

The real difficulty our domestic manufacturers have in meeting foreign competition is in the great difference in labor cost. Here we pay our skilled mechanics an average of 37 cents an hour, against the average in Europe for the same class of labor of 17 cents an hour. This is the handicap of our manufacturers, who do not need a tariff to protect their profits, but do need a sufficient rate of duty to cover this wide difference in wages. This is not an academic statement. It is a question of pay rolls which must be met each week. The first move our manufacturers must make to meet the foreign competition is to reduce the rate of wages paid. This will be very difficult and the country does not desire it. But desire alone can not prevent the inevitable.

Here is the whole problem in a nutshell: A and B have similar factories manufacturing the same machine, the factory cost of which is one-half labor and one-half material. The material costs the same to both A and B, but A pays twice the wages that B pays. Who will get the business? Of course B will get it unless A can reduce his wage rate to meet B's.

The sure result of the proposed tariff bill will be to reduce the wages of the American mechanic to the level of his European brothers, and a plain statement of facts is:

Our shops are modern in every particular; so are those of Europe.

Our men can not produce more work than can the European workmen.

Our wages run from 25 cents to 55 cents an hour for skilled mechanics; their wages run from 10 cents to 17 cents an hour for the same class of labor on the same work.

Our costs can not be reduced unless we can reduce wages, and knowing our condition here as to unions you are aware that this can not be done without a great industrial war.

Secretary Redfield and his followers are determined to give their theories a test even at the expense of the whole manufacturing interests of this country, but inasmuch as the figures which they quote are so far from correct, I am led to believe that their theories will prove equally wrong and misleading.

J. E. B.

NEW YORK, May 1.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there are approximately 57,000,000 sheep in the United States, and these beautiful spring days, when this Democratic House is coolly proposing to sacrifice them on the altar of the cruel god of free trade, they, returning good for evil, are enlivening the ranges and the pastures of all the Nation with the cheerful bleating of millions of newborn lambs. [Applause on the Republican side.] These spring days they are yielding their golden fleeces by the million for the comfort of the Nation and the profit of our people. They are enriching the pastures, adding to the contentment and contributing largely to the incomes of over a million American farms and ranches. They are consuming herbage which otherwise largely would go to waste, adding but slightly to the farm labors, and on the western ranges providing an industry the place of which none other can fully occupy. They afford us on the hillsides, in the meadows, and by the still waters the most perfect of all pictures of peace and plenty. They furnish us with the juiciest, the sweetest, and the cheapest of all meats, and their golden fleeces assure us in peace, comfort; in war, an element of defense as essential to the maintenance of the national honor as steel-belted fortresses afloat or shotted guns ashore. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have read and studied this Democratic tariff bill carefully and prayerfully, because my people own four and a half or five million sheep; and I have attentively listened to this debate, thinking that at some time I might hear or discover some logical reason from any viewpoint for the placing of wool on the free list. I have waited and read in vain. You can find no such reason in your party history, for the financial disaster that followed the placing of wool on the free list in the Wilson bill brought you a political disaster that kept you wandering in the wilderness, unfed of manna, unguided by pillar of cloud by day or fire by night, for 16 long and weary years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You can not justify free wool from the standpoint of free trade. You separate the sheep from the goats, and reversing the scriptural parable you say to the goats, "Come, ye blessed, to the green pastures of protection established since the foundation of the Government," and to the sheep, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the everlasting fires of Democratic free trade prepared for those industries we doom to destruction." [Applause on the Republican side.] While you deprive the flockmaster and the farmer of the benefits of protection, you do protect the great Woolen Trust, a creature of your discovery, and in this bill the beneficiary of your abundant favor. You can not defend what you have done from the standpoint of a revenue tariff, for wool has been one of our greatest revenue producers, yielding from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 of revenue annually. You can not claim that you have applied the principles of the Underwood copyrighted competitive tariff to wool, for there has been vast import and intense competition.

You will not be allowed to plead as offset to the losses free wool will bring a claim of benefits conferred, for from the oil and lampblack which marks the newborn lamb to the shears that clip the fleece, the string that ties, and the sack which receives it, all that contributes to the industry is taxed under this bill.

You surely can not exclude this ancient and honorable industry from the category of legitimate enterprise solemnly guaranteed from harm by presidential promise. You can not excuse this shameless abandonment on plea of recent pledge or promise, for less than a year ago you voted for a tariff rate of 29 per cent on wool.

You can not plead ignorance of the fact that free trade in wool will bring depression to all the industry and destruction to the most valuable part of it, for history will not excuse you; the uncontroverted facts developed through exhaustive investigation by the Tariff Board are before you, and your own admissions convict you of knowledge of the destructive character of this legislation.

You can not fool the people by giving as an excuse for your action the plea in confession and avoidance that you have sacrificed this great industry for the general good, for the people are intelligent enough to know that under no possible circumstances or conditions can the general good be served by the sacrifice of a nation-wide industry whose destruction or serious injury will leave us poorer in food and clothing in peace, and in war naked in the face of our enemies.

In the light of all this evidence, direct and circumstantial, can anyone escape the conclusion or avoid the conviction that the placing of wool on the free list is an act of cool calculating sacrifice of a great industry, essential to the very existence of the Nation, on the altar of political expediency?

The old condemned Democratic craft pumped out, patched up, painted over, setting out on the high seas of political responsibility, without propeller of principle or rudder of reliability, is found so overburdened with conflicting promises impossible of fulfillment, so hampered with rotten tackle of ancient error, so bulging with internal discord that in despair of ever reaching harbor thus laden her captains have deliberately agreed to throw overboard so much of the cargo she bears as they think can be jettisoned without danger of political bankruptcy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. Wool has walked the plank and sugar follows, together with a vast and varied assortment and variety of the people's industries, the extent and character of which only the labors of the wrecking crew will disclose. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Well, the captains are in control, the once turbulent crew is in the irons of discipline and being forcibly fed on the unpalatable pap of patronage promises. Under such conditions any act of piracy on your part is possible. But I warn you of the day when the American people, owners of the precious cargo of their industries and opportunities temporarily in your keeping, shall call you to an accounting for your stewardship. Beware of that day. It will come soon. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THACHER].

Mr. THACHER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to this discussion. It is hard for me to keep out of this fight, for I thoroughly believe in free wool. I was for 25 years engaged in the wool business. I shall talk to you upon the question of free wool, not as an orator but as a business man who knows whereof he speaks. I shall not, therefore, dwell upon "the golden fleece of the American people" and the "babbling brooks," which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has just described. I shall try and give some concrete facts rather than flowery figures of speech.

Now, what are the facts regarding the tariff on wool found in the first part of Schedule K, the very schedule of the Payne-Aldrich bill which President Taft, in his famous speech at Winona, pronounced indefensible? For half a century, with the exception of a brief interval, we have maintained this extreme duty. During all this time the advocates of this duty have claimed as they do now that to put wool on the free list would utterly annihilate the American sheep, and we should have to go out of business and import all our mutton from England and elsewhere, and our wool from the Argentine and Australia. Let us examine the facts.

I well remember that some 20 years ago two prominent advocates of a high duty upon wool, Judge Lawrence and Columbus Delano, both from the State of Ohio, were the leaders in this fight. These men, honest no doubt in their belief, were skillful politicians, and they used to head meetings and conventions of "woolgrowers," invariably asking the tariff legislators at Washington to maintain increased duties on wool, but they never asked the same legislators to "temper the wind to the shorn lamb," the consumer.

If I am not mistaken, one of those gentlemen took part in the famous conference at Syracuse between the manufacturers and woolgrowers just before the wool tariff of 1867 was enacted. This class of advocates of a high duty on wool claimed that if Congress would only maintain a duty on wool sufficiently high we might raise all the clothing wool consumed in this country. Furthermore, it was even predicted, if my memory is correct, that with a proper duty on carpet wool we might in time produce the bulk of the carpet wool used here.

In an article in the American Wool and Cotton Reporter of October 29, 1896, entitled: "An appeal to the woolgrowers," by Hon. William Lawrence, A. M., LL. D., president of the National Wool Growers' Association, Judge Lawrence states:

> At a meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers held at Chicago, January 21–23, 1896, Thomas Dolan, an eminent wool manufacturer, president of the association, said: "We are certain of our ability to feed ourselves and to procure at home all the primary substances from which fabrics are made."

Judge Lawrence, referring as to "What the full development of sheep husbandry would do for this country," stated:

> Ample protection for our wool industry would soon increase our flocks from less than 40,000,000 to 110,000,000.

Mark these words. At that time the Wilson bill with free wool was in force. Judge Lawrence predicted that "ample protection for our wool industry would soon increase our flocks from less than 40,000,000 to 110,000,000." Within nine months the Dingley bill, containing one of the highest wool tariffs which our country has ever seen, substantially the tariff in force today, was enacted. Did the prediction which Judge Lawrence made so confidently, that our sheep would increase 70,000,000 in numbers come true? Let us see. If we turn to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, we find that the highest number of sheep reported in this country in any one year since 1896 was in the year 1903, viz, 63,964,876; but on the other hand the number of sheep in this country in the year 1912 was only 52,362,000, showing a loss of over 11,000,000 sheep, and nearly 60,000,000 less in number than Judge Lawrence predicted, in spite of this high protection maintained ever since 1897.

It is somewhat remarkable that in the three States of California, Texas, and Ohio, which formerly produced wool in large quantities, that the census report shows a marked decrease in the number of sheep in the past 30 years. I quote figures from page 4130 of the tariff hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, 1913.

Number of sheep of shearable age.

California	5,727,000	1,456,000
Texas	3,652,000	1,440,000
Ohio	4,903,000	2,898,000

California had in 1910 but one-fourth of the sheep contained there in 1880; Texas, about 40 per cent, and Ohio a little over one-half. The reason for this decrease is because the land has become too valuable. The farmers find that they can make more money producing other crops, and our merino wool is now produced mainly in the Rocky Mountain section of our country.

Now, what is the case of carpet wool? This, as we all know, is the coarsest wool grown anywhere, and we have not raised a pound of carpet wool in this country since 25 or 30 years ago, when we used to get a little Navaho wool from Arizona and New Mexico. The fact is, we consume in this country between 500,000,000 and 550,000,000 pounds of wool per annum, of which something over 300,000,000 pounds is domestic wool, while the remainder is imported, of which something over 100,000,000 pounds is carpet wool coming from countries like Mongolia, East Indies, Turkey, Persia, and the steppes of Russia and other countries where the sheep have not been improved. The rest is clothing wool. Our own land is too valuable to raise carpet wool when we can raise other things to better advantage. In short, not only do we raise no carpet wool, but in spite of this high protection on wool the American sheep have not increased but diminished, and we are obliged to import about 45 per cent of our annual consumption.

Furthermore, it might appear to a man who had never studied this question, from the clamor which one hears about the wool clip and the protests against putting wool on the free list, that this is one of our principal agricultural products. Let us see how it compares with some other farm products. In 1909 the total value of the wool clip of the United States amounted to $65,472,328; the potato crop was worth $166,423,910; the egg product $306,688,960, the hay crop $824,004,077, and the corn crop $1,438,553,919, so that the wool clip is of small proportions compared with other farm products.

Mr. Chairman, there are many objections to a duty on wool. I will mention a few. My experience in business and study have taught me that—

(1) Under high protection our sheep have not increased, but have decreased in recent years.

(2) The tax is a hardship to the consumer.

(3) The manufacturer is handicapped by being unable to have free access to wool of all grades in the markets of the world. The present wool schedule has discriminated in favor of certain industries, prticularly the worsted mills. Many mills have gone out of business.

(4) Our sheep growers have given more attention to the raising of merino sheep than to mutton sheep.

(5) Both the methods used by our manufacturers and our wool growers, taken as a whole, have not been as modern and businesslike in all respects as those employed by their rivals abroad.

Before I take up these points specifically, I would say that the objections to a duty on wool have been well expressed in Taussig's Tariff History of the United States. Here the writer distinctly shows that the statement so often repeated that the number of pounds of wool required to make a suit of clothes is so small that the consumer pays very little increased cost on account of this tax on wool is entirely incorrect. The following statement is found on page 240 in the publication above referred to:

> Little can be said in favor of the duty on wool, and even on strictly protectionist grounds much can be said against it. Notwithstanding the cumbrous machinery of compensating duties, it undoubtedly has a hampering influence on the wool manufacture, and has been one factor, though perhaps not the most important, in confining this industry to the limited range that is so often complained of. As a tax on raw materials, it tends to bear with heavier weight than would be the case with the same duty on a finished product, since it is advanced again and again by the wool dealer, the manufacturer, the cloth dealer, the tailor, each of whom must have a greater profit in proportion to the greater amount of capital which the wool duty and the higher price of wool make it necessary for him to employ. So strong and so clear are the objections to duties of this kind that hardly another civilized country, whatever its general policy, attempts to protect wool.

Let us now consider the objections which I have named:

(1) I have already shown that under a high duty on wool, our domestic clip has failed to furnish us the supply needed.

(2) That the tax on wool is a burden upon the ultimate consumer has been shown in the article just quoted.

(3) While the average rate of duty paid on our importations in recent years is about 45 per cent, yet to get at the real extent of the present duty on wool one must consider the wools which are excluded by reason of the specific tax of 11 cents per pound upon wool in the grease, which shuts out all heavy shrinking wool of all kinds. The amount of Australian wool available for an American to buy under the present tariff is extremely limited. I am told by buyers of Australian wool that only about 10 per cent of the Australian clip is available, and that on the remainder the American buyer has his hands tied. On many wools the duty will run up to 200 per cent or even 300 per cent ad valorem. The duty to-day on Bagdad wool previously used here largely up to the Dingley tariff of 1897, which practically prohibited its entry, is 200 per cent to 300 per cent. I know this from experience. A buyer from America at the auctions in London, Antwerp, or Melbourne has only a limited selection on which he can bid. These wools, therefore, by reason of this competition, realize high prices, while the other grades are bought by German and English competitors at less prices, who thus have a great advantage over the American manufacturer.

The woolen manufacturers abroad are not handicapped like the American manufacturers. They can buy free of duty wools from any part of the world, to be made into goods sold in competition with the American manufacturers. They have free access to every wool market in the world, and pay no duty on their raw material. With the exception of Russia, no country in Europe levies a duty on wool. Raw wool, like raw cotton, is free of duty.

Taussig in his Tariff History of the United States, page 329, referring to the handicapped condition of the American manufacturers as compared with their foreign competitors, cites this testimony:

> Never until he had experience under free wool did the manufacturer realize the full extent of the disadvantages he suffers by reason of the wool duty, and the impossibility, by any compensating duty, of fully offsetting these disadvantages.

So much was said in a statement made before the Ways and Means Committee by the secretary of the Wool Manufacturers' Association. Bulletin of the Wool Manufacturers, March, 1897, page 84.

On the other hand, our mills, restricted by the tariff, have not in all cases been up to date in their methods. Furthermore, by the classification in the wool schedule in force since 1867, washed combing wools, used by the worsted mills, have paid but a single rate of duty—12 cents per pound—while there has been a double rate of duty—of 22 cents per pound—upon washed clothing wools used by the woolen mills.

This classification has worked in favor of the worsted mills and against the woolen mills. Moreover, when the fashion has changed from worsted to coarse woolen goods, such as cheviots, tweeds, and friezes, these same woolen mills have been prevented by a prohibitory tariff from importing cheviot and similar wool, used on account of their superior qualities by the manufacturers of Great Britain to make these same goods. For these and many other reasons the small woolen mills have, in my opinion, been very much handicapped.

We may hear before the date of the passage of this bill of certain manufacturers who say they are going to close down their mills or move their machinery abroad on account of the proposed tariff. I would like to ask how many woolen mills have gone out of business throughout this country from California to Maine and from Texas to New York since the famous Syracuse convention and the tariff of 1867? How many mills has this tariff literally put out of business? You will not find these figures in any speech made by the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle.

If we turn to page 741 of the Statistical Abstract of the United States, you will find that in the year 1870 there were 3,208 establishments engaged in the manufacture of wool in the United States; in 1880 there were 2,330; while in the year 1910 there were 1,124, a decrease of about 2,000 in 40 years. Of course it would not be fair to claim that the production of wool manufactures has not increased in the last 40 years, for it has more than doubled in value. What I do claim is that the present tariff on raw wool has been a handicap to the mills, particularly to the small woolen mills, and has worked in favor of the large worsted mills. While it is true that many of the woolen manufacturers have not asked for free wool recently, for many reasons, which I will not go into now, yet this has not always been the case. In 1889 there was presented to a Republican Congress a petition signed by over 500 woolen manufacturers and a long list of other persons in favor of free wool.

These signers represented every section of this country, and it is worthy of special attention at this time that many of these manufacturers represented the class of woolen mills of which I have spoken. Among the signers was the Nye & Wait Carpet Co., of Auburn, N. Y., a well-known concern located in the same town which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] represents. I am proud to say that the wool firm of which I was a member at that time, H. C. Thacher & Co., was represented by my father's signature. I take this petition, to be found in the appendix of this article, from pages 4241–4244 of the published hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, which petition was contained in a very interesting brief by Mr. Frank P. Bennett, editor of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, who appeared before this committee last January and advocated free wool.

(4) We now come to the consideration of the effect of the tariff upon the breed of sheep raised in this country. There is no doubt in my mind that the growers have given their main attention to the breeding of merino sheep, which produces fine wool but inferior mutton, and have neglected the growth of the crossbred sheep, which gives superior mutton but somewhat coarse wool. Now, you can not get choice mutton and choice wool from the same sheep. It is a law of nature that a merino sheep produces a large fleece of fine wool of heavy shrinkage, but yields an inferior quality of mutton. The crossbred sheep, such as the Southdown, Lincoln, and Shropshire, produce splendid mutton but a fleece of medium wool light in weight. England, for example, which produces the best mutton in the world, has no merino sheep whatever. One reason why the sheep growers have clung to merino sheep is because this sheep is the only breed which will herd closely together and can be grown in large numbers. The mutton sheep thrives best in small flocks. These crossbred sheep can be raised with profit, for choice mutton always commands good prices, and especially is this so with lambs. Mutton sheep can be grown with profit on high-priced land where merino sheep can not be grown advantageously. If we take England for example, we find that in the year 1910 Great Britain, with a total area less than New Mexico, considerably less than California, and less than one-half of the area of Texas, had 27,102,945 sheep, which yielded 141,940,000 pounds of wool. In other words, Great Britain contained in the year 1910 nearly 20 times as many sheep as either California or Texas. In spite of the fact that land in England is more valuable than in this country, the mutton-growing industry is very profitable, and English mutton is equal to any in the world. Free wool has not killed the sheep industry in England.

Mr. Thomas W. Page, a former member of the Tariff Board appointed by President Taft, has contributed a very interesting article on "Our Wool Duties" in the North American Review for April, 1913, from which I quote:

> Of all animals useful to man the merino sheep is best adapted to the waste places of the Temperate Zones. But except under unusual circumstances it is only to the waste places that it is adapted. For on land fertile enough to produce an average agricultural crop and situated so that the crop can be marketed to advantage, tillage is more profitable than pasturing merinos. The mutton from this variety of sheep is small in quantity and so inferior in quality, when uncrossed with other breeds or otherwise improved, as to make it a poor contributor to the meat supply. Except, therefore, where they are maintained for breeding purposes, the principal product sought from merions is their fleece. They yield a wool that for fineness of fiber and other qualities surpasses that of all other breeds. There is, however, a limited demand for such fabrics as require this particular wool, and this fact, of course, limits the price that can be got from it. For this reason sheep husbandry, to be profitable on land of much value, must yield mutton as well as wool.

I agree heartily with Mr. Page, and I believe that free wool, instead of destroying all the American sheep, would focus the attention of many of our farmers and woolgrowers on the growth of mutton sheep. It has only been in recent years that some of these men, finding that it was not profitable to raise wool on high-priced lands, have begun to turn their attention to mutton sheep. There are splendid opportunities in our country, not only to increase the supply of mutton where it is now grown, but also to raise mutton in other sections. Take the South for example. I believe that some day (when the question of the dogs, an enemy of the sheep, has been solved) that mutton sheep will be raised on the great range of mountains which extends from Pennsylvania to Georgia. The climate is comparatively mild, and the great markets are close at hand. Let us increase our supply of mutton in the United States. Good mutton from the right sheep is one of the best of all meats, and if we increase our supply of mutton, as I believe we can under free wool, we will thus help to reduce the high cost of living.

(5) We have now come to the consideration of the methods used by the growers in shipping their wool. It may be a surprise to you for me to say that I believe that the methods employed in the packing and shipment of our wools are, for the most part, behind those of other countries. We Americans are apt to pride ourselves on being up to date in our business methods, but our woolgrowers have certainly lagged behind in some respects as compared with their foreign competitors. For example, wools grown in Australia—which produces about 800,000,000 pounds per annum—in South America, in Africa, and even in such far-away countries as China, East India, and Persia, are, almost without exception, graded carefully and then shipped in compressed bales. In this way the wools can be readily shown when sold at auction or at private sale and can be shipped direct to the mills in compressed bales; and furthermore, the freight is much less than when shipped in loose and bulky bags not compressed, as in the case of domestic wool.

In this country the only two States, if I am not mistaken, which ship wools graded and packed in compressed bales are California and Oregon. The domestic fleece goes to the market for the most part ungraded and packed in bags, on which the freight is much heavier than if packed in compressed bales. What would be said of our cotton growers of the South should they persist in shipping all their cotton, not only to the northern mills, but also to Europe, in bags of the same kind as are used to ship wool in this country, while their competitors, the cotton growers of Egypt, were shipping their product in compressed bales, as at present? Yet this is just what our woolgrowers are doing.

When I was in the wool business with my father—and we began to do business with Texas in wool along with our business in raw cotton some 30 years ago—he at once discarded these old-fashioned methods, and all our wool which came from Texas was graded in Texas and then shipped in compressed bales to Boston. I believe that these modern methods which are employed in California and Oregon can be copied elsewhere in this country.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I would say that I began my remarks advocating free wool, and I shall keep to my text. I favor free wool because I believe it will help the American people. Free wool will benefit the manufacturer, the consumer, and will not destroy the sheep industry.

The Chatham Manufacturing Co., of Winston-Salem, N. C., filed a brief with the Ways and Means Committee, which may be found on page 4428 of the tariff hearings, in which the president, in a letter dated January 31, 1913, states:

> The present duty on wool and on blankets is entirely too high from my viewpoint as a Democrat standing on the platform and also as an American citizen. I think the country could stand free wool.

He further says:

> If nolls were made free, we could give the American people wool blankets at a price they are now paying for the best grades of cotton blankets. As I understand it, there are practically none imported now.

This manufacturer is right. Free wool means that the consumer will get better goods at a lower cost. He will buy for his wife and children better blankets and flannels, and clothing as well, which will contain more wool than those goods have to-day. There will not be so much cotton used in making clothing as at the present time. The consumer can secure for his wife and children warmer wool clothing than before, better adapted to withstand the cold winter weather. Thus clad the family will be, I believe, both healthier and happier.

Mr. Chairman, the Democrats have tried to keep faith with the people by reducing the duty upon some of the necessaries of life. They have reduced the ad valorem rate from 99.70 per cent upon women's and children's dress goods to 35 per cent; from 79.56 per cent upon ready-made woolen clothing and wearing apparel to 35 per cent; from 93.29 per cent upon flannels for underwear to 25 and 35 per cent; from 72.69 per cent upon wool blankets to 25 per cent, and so on all down the line.

In making these reductions the Democrats have kept their pledges. They have written this schedule with the purpose of removing some of the burdens from the shoulders of those who have not the money to clothe their families in linen and fine raiment, but who, out of their limited means, wish to buy good woolen fabrics at the lowest possible cost. These reductions and the other reductions made in the duties upon the necessaries of life to be found all through the bill will help to lighten the load resting on the shoulders of the consumer. Mr. Chairman, I give my most hearty support for free wool because it will benefit the great masses of the American people.

APPENDIX.

This petition, made to Congress in 1889, asking for free wool appears on pages 4241–4244 of the published hearings before the Ways and Means Committee held in January, 1913:

[Copied from the American Wool Reporter, p. 1161, issue of Dec. 19, 1889.]

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, being each and all of us engaged in growing, manufacturing, or dealing in wool, respectfully petition that the duties on raw wool may now be removed or greatly reduced for the benefit of our domestic woolgrowers and woolen manufacturers alike. At a recent meeting of woolen manufacturers in Boston it was correctly stated "that the wholesale introduction into the United States of foreign wools in the form of finished fabrics, thereby displacing American wool, which would otherwise be consumed in American mills, is due to the unjust and illogical arrangement of the tariff. While the imports of clothing and combing wools have not materially increased, and the American production is materially decreasing of late years, notwithstanding the rapid growth in our population and the increasing per capita consumption of wool by this increasing population, the quantity of foreign wool introduced into this country in the shape of goods and yarns has increased to the enormous total of 141,474,144 pounds in 1888, equaling 44 per cent of our total home production of wools of all descriptions. The wholesale market value of our annual importations of manufactured wool exceeds by nearly 50 per cent the value of our annual wool clip."

As the only civilized country in the world, so far as we are informed, which levies a duty on raw wool, we ask that American industry may be relieved of this unnatural burden, and that our domestic wool interests may now be put upon the same wholesome basis as the cotton manufacturing industry, with free raw material.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat amused at the speech of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman whose State has, I believe, 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 sheep; and, if I remember correctly, evidence has been submitted which shows that it cost 12 cents a pound to produce wool in Wyoming, while it cost less than one-twentieth of a cent per pound to produce it in the State of Washington. Does the gentleman believe that the American people ought to be taxed to continue the wool industry in Wyoming, when wool can be produced for one-twentieth of a cent a pound in Washington? What is done for the lawyer if he fails in the practice of law? He quits the practice; he goes to selling goods, teaches school, or he farms. What becomes of the blacksmith if he fails at the forge? He goes into some other business. What becomes of the banker if he fails? He must do something else. But what shall we say of the woolgrower in Wyoming, where it is said it costs 12 cents a pound to produce wool? Shall the American people be taxed, and heavily taxed, in order that the sheep may continue to graze along the babbling brooks of Wyoming? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Is that the doctrine of the Republican Party? It is, and has been all these years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas rose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have not the time to yield now, although I would be delighted to yield to my friend. The gentleman speaks of 57,000,000 sheep in the United States, and suggests that great injustice is about to be done these sheep.

I want to remind the gentleman that in this Republic of ours there are nearly 57,000,000 of human beings who do not own their homes. On which side are you; for your sheep that graze by the babbling brooks of Wyoming, or are you on the side of these homeless human beings that God has with His image blessed? [Applause on the Democratic side.] You stand here clamoring for protection for sheep and protection for various other things. It is dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I am sorry, but I can not yield. This side of the House pleads for human welfare; this side of the House pleads for the rights of the plain people; this side of the House has determined to cut the profits of your trust magnates and your tariff barons and to give the under man a chance in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] While you are begging for protection for your sheep we ask for protection to the American boy. We pit the American boy against your Wyoming sheep, and the Democratic Party is on the side of the boy. You may stand by your sheep. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, we are told that the sheep business is dwindling and we can not afford to profitably raise them; that the business has gone out of existence because the farms can more profitably raise other products than sheep. I would like to have the gentleman who thus speaks go into the State of Ohio that produced in 1910 almost 4,000,000 of sheep upon acres of ground that are certainly worth as much in the market as the acres upon the farms of the State in which the gentleman lives. I would like to have him go through the county in which I live, that has a premium for live-stock raising that was won at St. Louis, and yet going through these counties you will see sheep upon the various farms; instead of sheep being in opposition to modern methods of farming——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I only have five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Ohio produces a large amount of Democrats, too.

Mr. FESS (continuing). Instead of the sheep industry being in opposition to the fertility of the soil, I assert that the sheep industry helps to fertilize the soil. If that is not true, then how does it come that in Great Britain, with a soil but 4 inches deep, you have a more fertile soil in many respects than we do in our own country, stated to be due to the sheep business there in Great Britain? The Member from New York [Mr. HARRISON] said we should not continue the sheep-raising business in this country because we can buy the sheep from Australia and from South Africa and from South America. He stated in the same breath that the demand for sheep was so great in Europe that the price of sheep in Europe was almost equal to what it is here. Let me ask him this question: If the price of sheep in the foreign markets is equal to what it is here under a protective duty, then, in the name of God, what will it be when the American sheep-growing industry is destroyed and our country subject to the monopoly of a foreign market? That is the only thing that prevents the continued rise of the price of wool. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Here is a proposition, presumably in the interest of the consumer, that proposes to displace the American woolgrower for the sake of the woolgrowers of Australia, South Africa, South America, Europe, and Asia.

The pitiable 11 cents duty for the protection of this great American industry must be removed. This woolgrower must compete with the foreign woolgrower, whose labor cost is small in comparison. The woolgrower of Australia can market his wool as entire profit from his sheep, the actual cost being met from other sources, as meat, and so forth. From his wool he realizes $1.31 per head, while the American grower has a charge of from 11 to 19 cents per pound for his wool. If woolgrowing is not a legitimate industry because, as you say, we can not compete with the foreign grower, and ought therefore to cease raising wool and employ our farms in other products, then you can not deny that the purpose of this bill is to displace woolgrowing for some other product of the farm. That means the 300,000,000 pounds annual production of the United States, the 50,000,000 pounds from the 4,000,000 sheep of Ohio—the farmers' Shropshire, known the world over not only for its fleeces but for its meats—must be lost to the American grower in order that you may satisfy an un-American theory, namely, go to other lands for your wool, and this at a time when the prices of meat are still increasing to the consumer. It goes without saying, if you make woolgrowing unprofitable by a law in favor of the foreign grower, you will not only lose the home-grown wool but the meat on which the wool grows. You, in the interest of the consumer of meat, are here proposing to decrease the meat production.

This new theory, this Democratic theory, that estimates the wealth of our country by what we are compelled to buy rather than by what we produce—in other words, the theory that measures your wealth by what you do not have rather than by what you do have—proposes to lower the cost of living by reducing the production of the things upon which we live. And all this in the hope that free wool will mean free clothes and free sheep will mean free meat.

The small amount of wool in the make-up of any suit will make a very slight difference in the cost by virtue of the 11 cents duty. Who will get this reduction? Do you suppose for a moment the consumer will get it? You know that a suit that costs $25 now will not sell for $24.10 by virtue of 90 cents saved by the reduction of 11 cents duty on wool. In order to save the 90 cents to the consumer you are proposing to destroy this great industry.

But we are told it will not destroy it. My answer to all such statements is a simple reference to the free-wool provision of the Wilson tariff, when the price of sheep would not pay for the transportation rates from the city of Xenia to Buffalo. The woolgrowing industry has never yet recovered from the effects of that law.

Reports declare that the acreage for woolgrowing in foreign countries is not increasing, which, if true, means you will not by this measure cheapen the price of foreign wool, but, on the other hand, this bill will increase the price at the expense of the consumer. It would be wisdom for this Government to stand by the policy of encouraging sheep growing in this country, not only to clothe our people but to feed them as well. I know that an argument designed to encourage American enterprise has no place in this House in these days. This majority has in a hundred instances, both by speech and vote, declared that an appeal on behalf of the American producer for the sake of continuing the existence of the American consumer, the great laboring class of our population, is out of place here. Here in the National House of Representatives we are faced with this un-American policy that looks to the cash balances of the importer rather than to the condition of our producers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, hitherto I have succeeded in not yielding to the temptation to talk to this committee, but through all of these ramifications of talk I had hoped that there might come a lucid interval to the membership of this House on the left-hand side of this aisle in this discussion, and I want, if I can, to draw a parallel on this paragraph to a condition that has prevailed for a number of years in the State from which I come. Kentucky is the great producer, as you know, of tobacco. For over 25 years the tariff rates on imported tobacco that are carried in this bill have been in the bills that have been upon our statute books. The price in former years that the growers of tobacco were enabled to realize ranged from 3 to 6 and 7 cents a pound for their tobacco. The tariff tax on tobacco ranged from $2.45 a pound down to 25 cents a pound, and that tax rate in the law has been in the statute for 25 years, and during that time the price of tobacco has been as low as 3 cents. It now ranges as high as 15 cents a pound. If this 11-cents-a-pound tariff on wool helps the farmer one cent, answer me, some man on that side of the aisle, why it is that the farmers raising tobacco in Kentucky, with this tariff customs tax ranging from 25 cents a pound to $2.45 per pound, were only able to realize 3 cents a pound for their tobacco? Why did they not realize a price commensurate with the protective tariff rate on tobacco?

If your argument is a sound argument and an unanswerable one, that this 11 cents a pound finds it way into the pockets of the farmer, why was it that the farmers who raise tobacco could not realize some of the alleged benefits from the protective duty on tobacco? He does not and he did not do it. The tobacco raiser in Kentucky went down into the very shadow of the Valley of Death, because there was but one buyer—the Tobacco Trust. The Kentuckians went into that fight and won, as they usually do. They fought the trust, and to-day the price of that product, as I have said, ranges from 10 to 20 cents a pound. Your tariff tax on tobacco has been the same during the entire period—a fixed quantity. Through all that time not a cent of it found its way to the pockets of the tobacco raiser. Just so not a cent of the 11 cents finds its way into the pockets of the woolgrower. Why? Because of your Woolen Trust. We raise in my district the same type of wool that is raised in Ohio, and it commands the highest price, ranging from 15 to 32 cents in the last decade, more often under 20 cents than above it. But where is our enemy? Where is the enemy of the woolgrower? It is the Woolen Trust. Put this tax as high as the dome of this Capitol, if you please, and the farmer will never realize anything more for his wool than the trust is compelled to pay. He will simply pay the price at which it can be exported at a profit. The Woolen Trust gives the farmer the same kind of a deal on his wool that the Tobacco Trust gives the tobacco grower for his tobacco.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the theorists upon that side is illustrated by the remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken. I understood my friend from Kentucky to say that the farmer realizes nothing at all as the result of the tariff on wool, and I understood my friend from New York to say, openly and frankly, that if this bill went into effect he contemplated that the present woolgrowing and sheep-raising industry of the State of Ohio would practically be wiped out of existence. The best test, Mr. Chairman, of mere vapid theories is the statement of the facts. It has been said in this debate there was not any difference between the price of wool here and the price abroad. Let us see what the facts are. The actual facts are shown in the following table, setting forth the differences in prices between the London and Boston markets. The comparison is made on the basis of the price of wool in the grease and for the period from September, 1912, to February, 1913. Probably the difference would not be so great to-day, for the price of the farmers' wool has fallen very rapidly of late under the impending threat of free trade as exemplified by this bill. The table is as follows:

Grade.	Shrinkage.	London.	Boston.
	Pr. ct.	Cents.	Cents.
Fine staple	67	15¾	21½=5¾
Fine clothing	67	15¾	20 =4¼
One-half blood	60	18	22 =4
Three-eighths blood	58	16¾	23¾=7
One-fourth blood	52	16½	23½=7
Braid	47	17	25 =8

The facts are that in last February a fleece of Idaho wool, a fine staple wool, sold on the London market at grease prices, at 15¾ cents a pound, and that the same fleece sold in Boston at 20½ cents a pound, a difference of 5¾ cents per pound. And yet it is said that the tariff makes no difference in the price that the farmer gets. Half-blood wool sold on the London market at 18 cents a pound; it sold on the Boston market at 22 cents a pound, a difference of 4 cents. Three-eighths blood wool sold on the London market at 16¾ cents; on the Boston market at 23¾ cents a pound, a difference of 7 cents a pound. And so on with the different grades, making an average of between 6 and 7 cents a pound.

The same thing is shown by the following table explaining the difference in prices between London and Boston markets on the basis of the grease pound. A fleece of Ohio wool was cut in two, one half being sent to the London market, the other half to the Boston market. The same thing was done with fleeces of Oregon and Wyoming wool, respectively.

The results obtained are shown in the table.

	London price.	Boston price.	Difference.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
Ohio	19½	26¾	7
Oregon	14½	20	5½
Wyoming	15¾	21	5¼

There is not any question about it, Mr. Chairman, and when gentlemen are frank they admit it.

I compliment our friends on the other side of the aisle for having been frank at least occasionally. They said in their report, when the wool bill was up before, that it was estimated that eventually wool would be put on the free list. In their report on the wool bill of 1911 the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee said, page 26:

> It is maintained by a very large number of our best economists and statesmen that the economic situation involved in our rapid progress as a Nation requires that our ports should be thrown open to the importation of wool free of duty; and this view, based on the most profound consideration of the public welfare, has found expression in Democratic legislation. It is the constant intent of the Democratic Party to make the burden of tariff taxes as light as possible for the people, and to levy tariff taxes on a revenue basis as promptly as possible, for the party recognizes no justification whatever for tariff taxes except the necessity of revenue.

In some remarks that I made then I prophesied if the Democrats had control of the Government wool would be placed on the free list. On that occasion I said:

> In other words, it is perfectly clear that there is no intention to maintain any protective duty whatever on wool. I think I am perfectly fair in making that statement and am not misrepresenting anybody. So the woolgrowers of the country ought to understand that they are face to face with the proposition of free wool. We have torn the mask aside, and we know where our good friends, the enemy, are located on this proposition.

Various able, eloquent gentlemen on the Democratic side said: "No; that is not a doctrine of our party." Even so late as last October, the President of the United States said at Pittsburgh:

The Democratic Party does not propose free trade or anything approaching free trade.

And even when the Ways and Means Committee went into the discussion of this subject, as we learned this morning from the able and eloquent gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], the alert protector of the goat industry, the committee itself decided that there ought to be a duty on wool of 15 per cent ad valorem. Yet, though that was the judgment of the committee, when certain conferences were held, and when the pie counter was in sight with the viands distributed upon it in plain view of the hungry and assembled host, and when the brethren were given to understand that access thereto would not be easy to them and their friends unless there would be a change in this rate, these gentlemen said: "Our opinion amounts to nothing." They said: "We will abandon all we have recommended and put wool on the free list, but goat hair must still be protected 20 per cent ad valorem." The able gentleman from Alabama, who spoke a few moments ago, worries a good deal about the farmer's boy. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is not talking in favor of the farmer's boy. I am here to speak in favor of the farmer's boy of Ohio, and the gentleman from Alabama is talking in favor of the half-naked sheep herders of South Africa working for $2 per month, with whom he wants to bring our boys into competition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am speaking in favor of the small farmers of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything more upon this bill. I had already expressed at some length my views concerning it. But I did not feel that I could fulfill my duty to the people who sent me here if I should sit here silent in the face of the avowed proposition that a great industry of Ohio is to be stricken down, that the market which the American farmer has had for his product is to be taken from him, and sheep raising and woolgrowing are to be driven from the land, without any benefit to consumers or anyone else. This bill takes all the tariff off the farmers' wool, but the product of the Woolen Trust is protected. If we are to have free wool, why not free clothes? I did not feel that I could fulfill my duties if I said nothing at all, and so, Mr. Chairman, in the name of the small farmers, in the name of the farmers' boys of Ohio, in the name of American labor, in the name of 600,000 woolgrowers in the United States, I protest against the passage of this infamous, ill-considered, illogical, unfair free-trade bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if he intends to have any more speeches on that side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate we have heard a great deal from the Democratic side as to their keeping the pledges that they had made to the American people. Whenever some item has been discussed where they have admitted that their rates are an injustice to the producer, they have said that it was necessary because they had promised in their platform to reduce the cost of living to the American people.

And now I want to direct the attention of that side of the aisle for a moment to a consideration of this schedule and to ask whether they have kept the promises they made to the American people in the framing of it. I read from the Democratic platform of 1912:

Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products and articles of American manufacture which are sold abroad more cheaply than at home should be put upon the free list.

You promised that articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products would be put upon the free list the first time you had an opportunity to write a tariff law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is there a Woolen Trust in this country? I do not know whether there is or not; but if there is, you promised to put their products upon the free list. I would not vote to do so if I believed there was a trust, because I would not be willing to destroy the industry for the purpose of destroying the monopoly. You said you would. Is there a Woolen Trust?

Mr. Chairman, upon that question I want to call a most convincing witness to the Democratic side, a man whose word is absolute law to them, and it is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. On the 7th day of June, 1911, Mr. UNDERWOOD used this language:

There is nobody in this country who does not know that the American Woolen Co. to-day fixes the price of woolen goods; that is a monopoly; that is a trust.

Now, have you kept your promise? Or have you repudiated the gentleman from Alabama? If you have repudiated him, it is the first time that you have done so. His word has been absolute law unto you, and the gentleman from Alabama may well say, paraphrasing the epigram credited to Louis XIV, "The Democratic majority—I am the Democratic majority."

And, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct an inquiry to the Members of the Progressive Party in the House. There have not been many of them present during the debates upon this schedule—and I am not surprised at that, because two years ago their leader, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], when we were considering this very schedule, used this language:

Believing as I do that the duty carried on worsted for men's and women's wear in this bill is indefensible, that it is an outrage upon the entire population, I am firmly convinced that if the Members of this House should come to understand the facts in the case a majority of the Members could no more be induced to put a duty on worsteds than they could be to put it on coal oil.

A little later he said:

I can not see for the life of me how anyone in the American Congress can aid the Worsted Trust by putting a tariff on worsteds, either as a frankly avowed measure of protection or under the pretense of a tariff for revenue only.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] in this debate so far has been as silent as the grave. Neither has he offered the amendment that he offered two years ago to put tops and worsted goods upon the free list. I wonder why? Have the Progressives repudiated their leader upon this proposition, or as a condition of admission to the new party was he compelled to recant this heresy upon his part? [Applause on the Republican side.] I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the latter was the case.

I want to congratulate the Democratic side upon the fact that they have broken this promise that they made to the American people, even though there be a Woolen Trust, for I do not want to see the woolen industry destroyed. Destroy the monopoly, but save the industry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just a moment with reference to these two bills. The substitute bill offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is a protective measure and at the same time reduces every rate in the present Schedule K. It is consistent, and in accord with the report of the Tariff Board.

How is it with your bill? Like your cotton bill it is not consistent at any point in it. You put wool upon the free list, but so far as protection to the woolen manufacturer is concerned you have given him upon the coarse and cheap woolen cloths a greater amount of protection than this Republican bill gives to them. But how many times in the past have you upon the other side, in your well-deserved denunciation of Schedule K, said, "If you put us in the majority we will reduce the rates; we will cut the rates to the very bone upon these woolen cloths that the poorest people in the United States must buy and use." And yet in this very bill your rates upon the cheapest woolen cloths are 5 per cent higher than are the protection rates in the Republican bill.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is a high protectionist. He is honest; but I am glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] made the speech that he did, so long as he holds the views that he does with reference to Schedule K, in his defense of the present schedule. I have thought sometimes during this debate, from his much speaking and his high protective tariff views, that the country might be led to believe that a considerable number upon this side of the aisle were in accord with him. But honest as he is and industrious as he is, there are not a handful upon this side of the aisle who hold the views that he does, and in voting upon this woolen schedule we will have an opportunity of demonstrating to the country that the Republican Party is sincere in its advocacy of honest protection based upon the report of a tariff commission. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard upon that side of the aisle a great many times the cry that their purpose in all tariff legislation is to give equal rights to all and special privileges to none. And yet this very bill, and your method of framing tariff bills, is more open to favoritism and discrimination and special privilege than the Republican protective position can possibly be. You put wool on the free list, but a 20 per cent duty upon the hair of the Angora goat. You put flour upon the free list, but you keep a high duty upon rice. And so I could go on picking out items of necessity to the American people where you have arbitrarily said, "Free trade upon this article, but a high tariff on another article." Can there be any worse kind of favoritism than that? The Republican position of protection, equaling the difference in cost of production at home and abroad, if it be a special privilege at all, applies to all alike, protecting them only from unfair competition from abroad, and I say there can not be such a thing as special privilege when the vast majority of the people of the country have equal benefits from the privilege, whatever it may be. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Republicans made an appropriation under which President Taft appointed a Tariff Board, consisting of three Republicans and two Democrats, who brought in a unanimous report as to the facts involved in the production of wool and woolen goods, both in this and other countries.

We on this side of the House stand by our guns, stand by the report of the Tariff Board, and we present a woolen schedule, based upon the information ascertained by this Tariff Board. [Applause on the Republican side.]

For years the woolen schedule has been a point of controversy in the country, and for probably the first time in the history of tariff making in this country we now propose a scientific adjustment of Schedule K, and we will confidently appeal to the country in favor of tariffs based upon information rather than tariffs based upon guesswork. All through industrial life to-day people are learning the necessity of scientific information and scientific processes. Even in this legislative body we are learning it, although the learning so far has only permeated this side of the House, and has not penetrated to the Democratic majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I believe we will present a solid front, and I hope on this proposition we may have the support of those Republicans temporarily estranged from our party, soon to return, who now call themselves Progressives, as we call ourselves Republicans, because in the end Republicanism means progression. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], always candid and always a free trader, logically in the process of his reasoning, said that free wool meant the death knell of woolgrowing in the United States, which he declared ought to be because it was logical.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I am sure that my good friend does not wish to misrepresent——

Mr. MANN. Well, cut that part of it out; I never misrepresented anybody.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I said no such thing, but I tried to show just the contrary—that the tariff on wool does not now protect the woolgrowers.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York declared—and I know he will not change his remarks—that free wool meant the death knell of the woolgrowing industry in the United States for the purpose of growing wool. Only a few days ago the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] the former chairman of the special committee on sugar, declared that this bill meant the death knell of sugar growing in Louisiana and Texas. One by one they admit that they propose to kill the industries of the country. One kills the sugar industry to-day, another kills the woolgrowing industry to-morrow, another kills the wool manufacturing the next day. Do they think that as they kill these off one by one they are not killing them off altogether? The injury comes to the country all at once. We might do it if it was only wool; we might do it if it was only the cotton manufacture, or if it was only the woolen manufacture, or one kind of any other kind of manufacture; but when we propose at one time to do injury to the great mass of industries throughout the country, you and I will learn that that can not be done and retain the prosperity in the land, for God knows I hope prosperity will remain in spite of your legislation; and I know that in the long run the American people, with their common sense, will return to such economic policies as will make sure of the prosperity which God and nature entitle us to have. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, the distinguished leader of the Republican Party congratulates himself and his party on the fact that they are learning something. We are glad to join with them in these congratulations, but I would like to inquire which part of the Republican Party is learning something in view of the substitute you offer?

It is a well-known fact, and neither the gentleman from Illinois nor the proponent of the measure, the gentleman from New York, will deny the fact that the members of the Ways and Means Committee representing your side of the House are not united on this substitute. Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] this morning repudiated your bill, and there are other Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee besides the gentleman from Pennsylvania sitting before me now that you know repudiate your bill and spurn it as not Republican and not scientific.

I would like to know which of your representatives on the committee and on the floor are learning something, since they occupy two different positions in reference to the substitute the gentleman proposes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We are all learning on this side of the House [applause on the Democratic side], which can seldom be said of the other side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] There is much greater unanimity among the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee on the Payne substitute than there was among the majority members on the wool proposition when it was in committee. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is where the gentleman is mistaken. The Democratic Party never has levied a duty upon raw wool for protection. In 1911 and 1912 it brought a bill before this House taxing raw wool, and then I stated to the gentleman from Illinois in answer to his question that that tax was levied for revenue. When you levy a revenue tax it is within our principles that it should be levied at a revenue rate. It is not a matter of principle as to the article on which that revenue rate shall fall, it is a matter of economy and a matter of selection.

I will say to the gentleman that when this bill was reported to this House it left the Ways and Means Committee with a unanimous vote of the majority members of the committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just a question.

Mr. MANN. Is it not, or is it, a fact, as current rumor reports, that a majority of the present Ways and Means Committee, including the gentleman from Alabama, were in favor of a tariff on raw wool, and only changed their minds at the request of the President of the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that we were in favor of a tax on raw wool at one time, because we reported two bills to the last Congress containing a tax on raw wool.

Mr. MANN. My question related to this Ways and Means Committee at this session of Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman candidly——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have no desire to embarrass the gentleman and am willing to relieve him from responsibility.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is no secret. I will state it candidly. Yes; the bill when originally written had a tax of 15 per cent on raw wool. The difference between the gentleman's party and our party is that we can get together and you can not. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We got together for the benefit of the American people. The gentleman from Illinois says that that side is learning. Yes; it is learning something. It is learning that the sentiment of the American people is behind the principles of the Democratic Party, and it is learning to follow Democracy and is following it in this schedule. It was only four years ago when you reported a bill to this House and refused to revise or cut down the iniquitous tax that you had maintained on the clothes of the American people for 50 years, and it was not until we had been given control of this House that we taught you a lesson and taught you the way to go. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, you contend that you have written this substitute bill in conformity with the report of the Tariff Board. Mark you, these rates, when raw wool is eliminated from the equation, are substantially the same as those in our first bill, introduced before the Tariff Board made a report. Eliminating raw wool from the equation, they are on an equal basis. What do you do? You no longer maintain the prohibitive rates on tops and yarns and cloths and woolen goods. Of course, I recognize the fact that you were ashamed to copy exactly our rates, but you tried to do it, and approached it in an indirect way. We levy a tax of 15 per cent on tops from which the yarn is spun. You levy a rate of 18 cents a pound on scoured wool, and you carry into the top paragraph 20 cents a pound on the wool contents and 10 per cent ad valorem. In other words, on the tops you add 2 cents per pound more than you say is the rate that should be charged on scoured wool. I recognize the fact that the Tariff Board estimated that this was the necessary compensatory duty. Instead of putting this at an ad valorem rate in your 10 per cent, you carry it in your specific rate. Do you mean to say, as the gentleman from New York said, that on tops there is a difference between the substitute and our bill of 10 and 15 per cent? When you increase the charge on scoured wool, that goes into the 2 cents per pound?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but I desire to correct him. The duty on scoured wool is 19 cents a pound.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And on grease wool you have 18 cents and on scoured 19.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Nineteen cents. Of course, you can allow for the 1 cent per pound if you want to in a specific rate or in the ad valorem rate. We would allow for the compensatory duty in the ad valorem rate, while you allow for it in the specific rate, where you put it in as an equivalent for the duty on raw wool. That raise of 1 cent per pound on scoured wool approximates 2 per cent ad valorem.

And what is the result? In a comparison of the two bills on a free-wool basis the real result is that the duty amounts to about 12 per cent against our 15 per cent. Now, I say you were ashamed to come right up and accept our figures. Now, when you come down to yarns, instead of carrying 19 cents per pound on scoured wool in the yarn you increase this specific duty on yarns to 21½ cents per pound and then add an ad valorem rate varying from 10 to 25 per cent, according to value, increasing the duty for raw wool from 19 to 21½ cents per pound and again raising the ad valorem equivalent in the same way, following the old process that has marked the iniquities of the woolen schedule in the last 40 years. On cloth they do the same thing, except raising it higher and higher. They put on cloth valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 60 cents a pound 26 cents a pound on the wool content therein, although they say 19 cents is a fair tax on scoured wool, and then add 35 per cent. On cloth valued at more than 60 cents and not more than 80 cents they place 26 cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem, and on those above 80 cents and not more than $1, 26 cents per pound and 45 per cent, and so on, raising the schedule as they go; and yet the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], knowing that, actually stated to the House that our bill was higher than the rates in the present law. But, of course, I know what he meant.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman means this substitute.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman know that that merely takes care of the loss in the wool?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I do. If the gentleman had been listening for the last 15 minutes he would have heard me say that it takes care of the loss of wool, and that the Tariff Board estimated it——

Mr. LENROOT. But with free wool you do not have to do that and you would not if you had free wool——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. Of course, when you are comparing it on a free-wool basis, free wool loses as much in the manufacture as taxed wool. Does the gentleman think because wool comes in free at the customhouse that there is not as much waste as when it comes in taxed? Of course not. I can not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. There is no difference, except that you are trying to hide some protection in this bill that you do not want the American people to find. That is it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, you say that you have written this tax in conformity with the report of the Tariff Board. I admit that when you cut out your tax on raw wool that on tops and yarns there is very little difference in the bill. On the lower grade articles—woolen goods—you are about the same as we are, but when you go to the higher grade articles you go very much higher than we do, but you are approximating the basis that we made. You follow the way we showed you to go. But the real question involved is whether or not you should levy this tax on raw wool in conformity with the Tariff Board's report. Now, there is not a man on the floor of this House who ever read that Tariff Board report who does not know that the Tariff Board reached a Scotch verdict on raw wool. You know it and I know it. There is not one line in that report that says you should tax raw wool, or you should not, and it is an open secret that the board divided on that question as to whether or not raw wool should be taxed. Now, which side of this Tariff Board are you following? That is the question. You are writing this tariff bill, you say, in conformity with the report of the Tariff Board, a scientific Tariff Board report, but you can not say which side of it you are following.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not right now. I want to give you some information. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. I shall enjoy it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Thomas Walker Page, a distinguished member of that board, recently wrote an article in the North American Review, giving his position in reference to the question as to whether or not raw wool should be taxed. He was a member of the board, and he wrote this article as a review of his work. I will ask the Clerk to read the portion of this memorandum that I have marked.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the North American Review for April, 1913, Mr. Page says:

"To the average American sheep raiser the wool duties are only an incidental aid; to the genuine woolgrower they are of real assistance, but they are inadequate to prevent the gradual merging of this industry in that of the mutton producer. To neither, therefore, do they bring a benefit that economically justifies their retention. From the standpoint of the manufacturer these duties are undeniably an evil. They raise the price of his raw material, increase the amount of capital necessary in his business, enhance his costs of production, and make it impossible for him to compete for trade in neutral markets. More than this, they completely bar him from the use of important varieties of wool that are available abroad. South Africa, for example, exports about 125,000,000 pounds of wool as fine and, for many purposes, as useful as any that is grown, but the amount we take of it is negligible. The explanation of this is found in the fact that the duties are specific payments on a pound of wool 'in the grease'—that is, in its natural condition as it leaves the sheep's back. But in each class of grease wool there are many varieties which differ not only in length, strength, luster, and fineness, but also in the quantity of oil and other impurities they contain, so that some varieties when scoured yield much less clean fiber than do others. These variations appear not only in sheep of different breeds or from different regions, they are also found in different parts of the same fleece. Thus wool from the neck, breech, or belly shows a different shrinkage in scouring from that of wool on the rest of the body. Naturally the American buyer abroad can now take only wool of a good yield. The heavy shrinking wool is often excellent for his purposes, but when the duty is estimated on its clean content he finds that he can not afford to import it." Prof. Page charges that the reason why the duties on woolen cloth have continued so high has been the disposition of American manufacturers to profit by compensatory duties imposed for the purpose of offsetting the tariff on raw wool, but fixed at so high a point as to be much more than compensatory. Furthermore says he, "It is well known that the greater part of the woolen fabrics that enter commerce are not all wool." In summing up he uses the following strong language: "It must be admitted that there is good reason why this particular raw material should not be taxed. In all other countries with any industrial development except Russia the importation of wool is free. Our tax on it, therefore, puts our manufacturers at an insuperable disadvantage in neutral markets, and it would have the same effect in the domestic market but for the compensatory duties. The importance of properly adjusting these duties becomes evident when it is remembered that while the annual output of our wool crop is less than $60,000,000, the annual output of our wool-using industries is more than $700,000,000. As they now stand our compensatory duties are a glaring abuse in our tariff system, and are responsible for much of the popular outcry against it. It seems, however, to be impossible to adjust them fairly, and to repeal them involves the total repeal of the duties on wool. It follows from what has been said that whether they are studied with regard to their effect on the production or the manufacture of wool the wool duties are without economic justification."

Even with reference to the business side of the sheep-raising industry Mr. Page says:

"The industry as a whole would not materially suffer; it would even make a substantial gain in being freed from the necessity of playing politics and relieved of the uncertainty and anxiety that will hamper it as long as the duties are there to be defended. There would be a temporary setback owing to panic, but forces that are already at work would soon build up the industry along new lines and on a more stable foundation."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They say that the tax on raw wool is written in conformity with the Tariff Board's report in this bill. There is a witness which I present to you, a distinguished member of the Tariff Board, who says that the duties on raw wool are without justification. And, more than that, it is a well-known fact that the chairman of the Tariff Board did not believe in levying duties on raw wool.

And yet you come before this Congress, not asking to legislate on your judgment, on your own ability, but you come here to-day and tell us that you have been taught a lesson and you want to write that lesson on the statute books, and when we call your teacher to testify he refuses to stand for a statement that you have made to the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not yield.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course he will not. He does not dare to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not have the gentleman taking my time. It is too valuable right now.

Mr. MONDELL. It would be embarrassing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have a very great admiration for the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], a man of the highest character and fearless honesty when it comes to anything else but the tariff; but he has been so badly trained as to the way in which he should go on the tariff that he could not write a wool schedule, even if he tried, without putting jokers in it. [Laughter.]

Now, he has told the people of the United States that although he taxed the wool from which clothes were made he is going to give them free wool carpets. He will tax the material that keeps them warm from the winter's snow, but he will give them untaxed carpets to walk upon. He did not do it; he just told them he was going to do it. He has two classifications in this bill, first and second class wool. On second-class wool he puts the rate of 7 cents per pound, and then follows it with a proviso and says that it shall come in free if it is used for making carpets. But he also says in this bill:

Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood, from their present character, as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

And that means they have to pay 19 cents per pound on scoured wool. But he goes on further and says:

If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act, invoiced or entered as of class 2, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of class 2, shall contain any wool or hair subject to the rate of duty of class 1, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the rate of duty chargeable on wool of class 1.

Now, I am informed by men who buy wool, who import wool, that it is almost impossible to-day to find wool that is all class 2, without some of the finer grades of wool being mixed with it. Why? Because everyone is trying to improve his sheep. Everyone is mixing the high-bred sheep with the low-bred sheep.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer it for you.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is not talking to the Democratic caucus; he is talking to the House of Representatives.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell it.

Mr. PAYNE. You do not tell it to anybody.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I got this information only a day or two ago, although I knew it to be a fact before, from a manufacturer of carpets in your own State.

He told me that he hoped that this distinction that you were trying to draw would not be maintained, because it was only a fraud. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He said it was only a fraud; that it was almost impossible to find a bale of second-class wool, and that carpet wool, or a large proportion of it, under this bill would be classed as wool of class 1.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the situation in the present law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not through with the gentleman yet.

Mr. PAYNE. You are not proving anything.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, here is the bill that I hold in my hand, the bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] offers as a substitute, and he says that it was prepared by the Tariff Board. My friends, I am sure that the gentleman from New York should not charge this to the Tariff Board. The Tariff Board already has enough sins to bear. You should not send it down into history, or try to do so, bearing the errors and iniquities of this substitute that you have offered to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Listen to this. Here is the way they class wools, or try to class them:

The duty on all wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, imported in their natural condition, shall be 7 cents per pound. If scoured, 19 cents per pound.

Now, mark: Imported in their natural condition, the duty shall be 7 cents a pound, and if scoured, 19 cents a pound. It will be noted that there is no provision for washed wool of class 2. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may have half an hour and that I may have five minutes afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] submits a request for unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] may have half an hour and that he may have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for his courtesy, but inasmuch as the country expects us to do business I must decline to accept it and must insist on our going on.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not dare to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will insert as a part of my remarks, under the leave already given, a comparison of the rates in the Payne law with the proposed bill.

Following is the comparison referred to:

Comparison of the imports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, with the estimates for a 12-month period under H. R. 3910.

7. CLASS I,[1] WOOL ON THE SKIN, UNWASHED.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as a substitute for the wool schedule.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 188.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. MANN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 193.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE L—SILKS AND SILK GOODS.

319. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, and silk noils exceeding 2 inches in length, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ELDER Mr. Chairman, being a new Member, I have not bothered the committee any heretofore. But there is one doctrine that our Republican friends have persistently and continuously argued which seems to me an apparent fallacy, and yet it has been the backbone of the Republican vote for many years—that is, that protection is a help to the workingman.

On the one hand, we admit that it has largely increased his cost of living. But, my friends, I believe that a large reason for the high wages in America is this, that we have had great undeveloped resources in this country, and that immutable law—the law of supply and demand—has forced up the rates of wages.

You can go into Canada, into Australia, or into any other new country where they have these great undeveloped resources and you will find high wages in analogous cases.

But in order to see that protection is not a benefit, go into the old countries of England and France and Germany, and what do you find? In the protected countries, such as Germany, you find lower wages than you do in free-trade England. You can come into this country and under the schedules where they have the highest protection you find they are paying the lowest rate of wages.

Take the woolen schedule that we have just passed, as an example. In the New England States, in their sweatshops, you will find perhaps the lowest rate of wages that is paid in America.

Being from Louisiana, my friends, perhaps it is not amiss for me to say that I did not agree with several of the items in this bill.

I do not believe any man could draw a bill on a competitive basis that necessarily contains discrimination for and against that would satisfy me, and I do not believe that I could draw a bill that would satisfy any man on the floor of this House.

I do not think it would be wise for this country to go immediately into free trade, because our economic system is so finely balanced that it would perhaps cause a panic to change our system, but I hope to see the day come in the course of the next 20 or 30 years when we will raise our entire revenues on noncompetitive articles, on an income tax, an inheritance tax, and the excise tax, when this system of robbery and of burdens upon the sweating masses of the American people will come to an end. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have no cause of quarrel with those other colleagues—or a portion of them from my State—who will not heed this appeal. They are honest and sincere gentlemen, perhaps sent here to defend the large industries in their districts, but I believe that as sure as fate within the next 15 or 20 years no tariff wall could preserve and protect the Louisiana cane grower, but that the beet industry of this country would remove him. And, my friends, perhaps it is better to let it come now, and let our people end the protection theory and the idea that they can obtain their living from the sweat of some other poor man's brow. We have a great State, rich in resources. Our soil is most fertile; and though you have struck down a great industry of our State, you have not ruined our people, because they are brave and courageous, and they will turn these fertile lands and these large plantations into smaller farms. Instead of being in the future a State of sugar barons, I hope we will be a State of small farmers; and we will be as we ought to be, one of the brightest stars in the galaxy of the States. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out the last word. We seem to have gotten back to a political debate, and I want to say a word or two in answer to some of the remarkable statements—the marvelous statements—made by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I can not understand how the gentleman could make such statements as that and be so ignorant about them. I say that because I have always regarded him as honest. He says I have removed the favor of free wool from the manufacturers of carpets—if it may be regarded as a favor to them—by another provision in this schedule, and that some carpet manufacturer told him so. Well, if somebody did tell him so the gentleman ought to have known better. That same provision has been in the law heretofore. There has been a different duty on carpet wools and wools of the first class all this time, and yet no carpet manufacturer in the United States has failed to get his wool at the carpet wool rate of duty. The gentleman might have explained that to the House, but he thought he was talking to a Democratic caucus and that there was nobody here to pick him up on the proposition. It is a good deal like his talking to that man in Connecticut on the Wilson and Dingley schedules on metals and telling him that there was not anything in the Dingley schedule that was not as high in the Wilson schedule, and then handing him a copy of the comparison of the two. I have in my hand the comparison. It is a book issued by the Senate 8 years ago or 12 years ago, I do not know when. It is absolutely the worst document that was ever issued by any body of men. I am ashamed to say that it was a Republican Senate that issued that book. There are three volumes, and if you take the first volume by itself you can not get any more information out of it on the subject of the tariff than you could out of some of the gentleman's speeches on some other questions.

He says Mr. PAGE is for free wool. Well, I knew that. So is Mr. Emery for free wool. I have never said they were not, but the facts they reported showed what the duty should be if it was to be a protective duty, and those gentlemen approved of those duties if they were to be protective. And they did approve of them. Even Mr. PAGE thought if we were going to put a protective duty on wool they had not got it quite high enough at 18 cents a pound, that it ought to be 21 cents; and after he had studied the subject some more he approved these duties. So it goes all along the line. But what is the use, gentlemen? The gentleman from Alabama takes the last two minutes in debate. He will not allow any interruptions; he will not allow a word to be said; he will not allow his statements to be punctured at the time they are made. He seems to be intent on nothing except to win the applause of gentlemen who do not know but what he is telling the exact truth about the matter and is not misrepresenting anything or drawing on his fancy. [Laughter on the Republican side.] If it pleases him and amuses you, I suppose the whole thing is accomplished. And yet I wonder that the gentleman from Alabama does not raise his debate on this great subject, on this great bill, to a higher plane and not let it result in what appears to me—I say it with all politeness to the gentleman—to be the purest demagogy that I ever heard him utter. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

324. Ribbons, bandings, including hatbands, beltings, bindings, all of the foregoing not exceeding 12 inches in width and if with fast edges, bone casings, braces, cords, cords and tassels, garters, suspenders, tubings, and webs and webbing; all the foregoing made of silk or of which silk or silk and india rubber are the component materials of chief value, if not embroidered in any manner, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about this silk schedule. The schedule in the present law is new and different in principle from any one ever made before. Up to 1909 the silk schedule had been on an ad valorem basis. The question of putting it on a specific basis was taken up by the committee. Several experts went over the schedule; the importers were represented among the experts, and the manufacturers of the silks were represented. They brought in a schedule which they said did not increase the rate of duty. After studying it for a while I told them that I thought it did increase the duty and I would not stand for any such rates. They brought in another one modifying it and the House committee refused to take it up. After the bill went to the Senate, I was in touch with the same gentlemen, and they finally got up a schedule which I believed would not advance the rates, and I preferred a specific duty if we could get equitable rates. The silk schedule is as purely a luxury as anything in the clothing line in the bill. Finally they got a schedule and presented it to the Senate and the Senate agreed to it, and afterwards I went over it with some of the gentlemen, cut down the rates in some instances, and got a rate that I thought would not be larger than the ad valorem rate in the old law, and it was finally put in the bill. It turned out that it was substantially on the same level as the rates of the former law. I am sorry that these gentlemen have changed it. If they wanted to favor the wholesale purchaser and had lowered the duty below 50 per cent, which is the ad valorem equivalent; if they had taken the rates of 1909 and cut them 5, 10, or 15 per cent to bring them into conformity with their ideas and leave them as specific rates, it would have been better. I think it would have been a great improvement in the bill. I would not offer an amendment, for I might as well throw it to the east winds. There is no use in trying to amend the bill. You have heard a one-sided statement in your caucus, with no one to dispute it or to give you information on a great many items. Your minds are made up and the President has approved the bill, and so on to the end of the chapter.

I simply wanted to call the attention to the schedule which these gentlemen so ruthlessly break up and destroy, representing a great deal of labor, probably ten times that which was put upon it in their committee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to say a word as to my vote against the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] on the woolen or Schedule K. I believe I was the only Republican to stand up and pass between the tellers and vote against the proposition. I have no apologies to make for it. I am a Republican and I believe in a protective system, and I will not stultify myself by voting for an amendment offered from this side of the House which will increase foreign importations of woolen goods from what it is now—$15,000,000—to over $9,000,000 per annum, or a total of $24,000,000.

Then, I do not believe in a policy of voting on this or any other schedule until the manufacturers and their employees have been given a full, fair, and impartial hearing. We have arraigned and condemned Mr. UNDERWOOD and his committee for failing and refusing to give hearings, and that is what Mr. PAYNE has neglected to do with his substitute. I am opposed to both the Payne and the Underwood Schedules K as a substitute for existing law.

In the course of this discussion on the tariff I have from the very start criticized the so-called Underwood bill because it proposed to increase the importations of foreign-made goods at the expense of the American manufacturer and the American wage earner. I must be consistent. I can not stand here day in and day out and take that stand and then turn around and vote for a proposition to increase foreign importations more than $9,000,000 under one schedule of this bill.

On yesterday I inveighed against the action of the Democratic Party on Schedule I, which proposes to increase foreign importations of cotton goods $12,000,000, and having condemned the majority for doing that, I could not be consistent, fair, and just to myself to-day to do practically the same thing on Schedule K by indorsing and approving such an un-American and anti-Republican policy. A man that has not the courage of his convictions does not deserve a position on the floor of this House. [Applause.] I must retain my self-respect; I must be consistent in all these matters far above party friends or party conferences.

I notified Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican caucus or conference, that I would not support the Payne substitute, in view of the discovery that if adopted it would transfer $9,000,000 of our business to our foreign competitors, injure our woolen mills, and turn many of their men out of employment.

I believe in the principle that we should retain the American market for the American mills and the American wage earners, and by my vote and voice I shall stand here as long as I am in Congress and oppose any bill, amendment, or proposition which will take away from the woolen or cotton manufacturers and wage earners of this country their business and employment and transfer it to foreign shores.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I honor the gentleman for his convictions, but in order that some of the rest of us may be put in a proper light I wish to inquire of my colleague where he got the information with reference to the amount of importations?

Mr. AUSTIN. I take pleasure in giving my colleague from Iowa that information. When we had the Republican conference, which was open and aboveboard, I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] if he could tell us what the increased importations under that proposed schedule of his would amount to, and he said he could not give me the information.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, the gentleman asked me in regard to the Underwood schedule, not in regard to this.

Mr. AUSTIN. I asked the gentleman about his own proposed substitute.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. AUSTIN. I did; and I can prove it by our colleagues Messrs. FORDNEY, MOORE, GREENE of Massachusetts, and others who were present. The gentleman may not have understood it, because he is a little hard of hearing, but that was my question.

Mr. PAYNE. I answered in regard to the Underwood schedule.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then the gentleman misunderstood me. Then, on the following day, not having received that information from Mr. PAYNE, I requested the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to send a copy of the Payne substitute to the Treasury experts in order to secure a report, and Mr. FORDNEY in a few days showed me the report, and he again showed it to me on the floor of the House to-day, in which it was stated that the increased importations under that proposed Payne schedule would amount to $9,000,000 over and above the present importations of $15,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Right there I want to say that I question the accuracy of that statement, and I am inclined to think that it is the same expert that reported—and they have it in the Democratic handbook here—that under the Underwood bill, with free wool, there will be practically no more importations of wool than there were before.

Mr. AUSTIN. The same expert——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; the same expert that makes those figures.

Mr. AUSTIN. We need not guess about this matter. It is the same Republican official or expert in the Treasury Department who made the estimates on the original Payne bill and on other tariff bills.

Mr. PAYNE. He never made any estimate for me. He may have made it for the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to have the gentleman tell me how much the importations would be under this proposed substitute.

Mr. PAYNE. I could not tell the exact amount.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman can give it to us as best he can.

Mr. PAYNE. No man living can tell. It will be guesswork; but I say that this proposed substitute would furnish ample protection for the American manufacturer.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the wool schedule has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

325. Chiffons, clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods, made up or manufactured in whole or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer; all the foregoing composed of silk or of which silk or silk and india rubber are the component materials of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 78, line 23, strike out the word "chiffons."

Mr. PALMER. I would like to put in a word of explanation in regard to that. Paragraph 325 is the wearing apparel paragraph, while paragraph 326 is the woven fabric paragraph. While it is a little difficult for us men to settle the question, I understand that the expert testimony is that chiffons are woven fabrics rather than wearing apparel, and they are changed to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

326. Woven fabrics, in the piece or otherwise, of which silk is the component material of chief value, and all manufactures of silk, or of which silk or silk and india rubber are the component materials of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 9, after the word "section," strike out "45" and insert "35."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that a reduction is proposed by this amendment. I proposed to reduce the ad valorem rate from 45 per cent to 35 per cent on woven fabrics. I do not do that because I want to deprive the silk industry of any protection it may have, but in order to assist the committee to be consistent in its arrangement of the duties. The peculiar situation that confronts us here is this: That silk used in the manufacture of umbrellas is rated at 45 per cent ad valorem, while umbrellas are dutiable under this bill at 35 per cent ad valorem. The foreign umbrella may therefore be brought into the United States for 10 per cent less than the raw material from which it is made. It is manifestly impossible for any man to manufacture umbrellas in this country if these rates as written in the bill prevail. One of the largest manufacturers of umbrellas and parasols, who does not live in my district, writes:

We are the largest manufacturers of umbrellas and parasols in the country, but did not think it necessary to ask for a hearing or file a brief while the bill was being considered because never heretofore has the duty on parasols and umbrellas been less than the duty on the component parts, and we did not for an instant imagine that in the new bill there would be a departure from this practice. We believe that there was no desire upon the part of the framers of the tariff act to ruin any legitimate industry, and that it is only necessary to call your attention to this matter to have your committee see the mistake and correct same.

There is absolutely free and keen competition in the umbrella and parasol industry, and while it can doubtless meet foreign competitors if the duty on the finished product is no more than that of the parts, yet we can not survive with a duty of 35 per cent on ribs, rods, and other metal parts, a duty of 45 per cent on silk cloth, and only 30 per cent on the finished product.

It seems to me that the committee in all fairness, if it does not mean to destroy this industry, as it will by this enactment, ought to accept this amendment for a lower rate, especially as it comes from one who believes in protection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

327. Yarns, threads, filaments of artificial or imitation silk, or of artificial or imitation horsehair, by whatever name known, and by whatever process made, 35 per cent ad valorem; beltings, cords, tassels, ribbons, or other articles or fabrics composed wholly or in chief value of yarns, threads, filaments, or fibers of artificial or imitation silk or of artificial or imitation horsehair, by whatever name known, and by whatever process made, 60 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 16, after the word "horsehair," insert the words "or of yarns, threads, filaments, or fibers of artificial or imitation silk, or of artificial or imitation horsehair and india rubber."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately we have not any scientific information from a tariff board or any other source as to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad of the articles covered by this paragraph. My information is that if we had such a report it would show that this paragraph, so far as many articles are concerned, is highly protective. I was very much surprised some moments ago by some statements made by the genial and generally fair gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], touching a tariff board report. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said that some one on this side had said that our wool schedule was prepared by the Tariff Board. If anyone said anything of that sort I have not heard it. There is no one on this side who ever expected a tariff board to fix rates, nor do we ever expect to ask the opinion of a tariff board or commission as to what the rates should be, based on the facts they find.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not.

Mr. BRYAN. Do not speak for everybody on this side, then.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am speaking of Republicans.

Mr. BRYAN. I am sitting right in front of you.

Mr. MONDELL. I am speaking of protectionists, at least I am speaking for those who believe in the principle of protection, protection to the labor and industry of every man under the flag whether he lives on the Pacific coast or on the rock-bound coast of Maine, by the waters of the Gulf, or up yonder on the border of Canada. The gentleman said that we claimed that our woolen schedule was approved by the Tariff Board, and then proceeded to attempt to prove that—that the members of the Tariff Board or some member of it was opposed to a duty on raw wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would not yield to me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from New York stated—I merely quoted from the gentleman from New York——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will find nothing in any statement made by any gentleman on this side that we have asked the Tariff Board to make rates for us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I asked him.

Mr. MONDELL. Neither to-day nor any other time has the Republican Party or any member of it expected a tariff board to fix rates or frame schedules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is not what I said.

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I am personally concerned, I should be perfectly content to have my friend from Alabama a member of a tariff board or commission. He would endeavor honestly to ascertain the facts; it would be a matter of absolute indifference to me what his view was as to what rate should be fixed on the facts thus ascertained.

This has been so often stated on this side and made so plain that I am surprised that my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does not understand it. I think he must understand it. The duty of a tariff board is to ascertain the facts, and if the men on a tariff board or commission are honest men, it matters little what their political views or opinions may be as to the policy to be followed in fixing tariff rates. If they will honestly present to us the facts, we on this side will endeavor to fix rates based on those facts in accordance with our understanding of them, measuring the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment.

It proves nothing to say that some member of the Tariff Board, or all the members of the Tariff Board, may have held to the opinion that wool should or should not have been made dutiable.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did not the members of the Tariff Board and the Tariff Board experts help to write and to fix the rates in the cotton bill which you voted for last session and in this wool bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand that any expert of any tariff board has ever been called upon; neither will they ever be called upon by a Republican believing in protection to do anything but give information relative to the facts their investigations develop, and on the facts thus developed they may be of assistance in figuring what rate will cover the difference in cost at home and abroad. As to their opinions as to what the rate should be, whether protective or otherwise, it matters not to us.

It is the function of a tariff board or commission to ascertain the facts. As to whether the rate should cover the difference in cost thus ascertained is a matter of opinion depending on whether one believes in the principle of protection or not. I and my friend from Alabama could agree on facts; we could not agree as to the rate those facts warrant.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is recognized.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and, I believe, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] disavowed that the Tariff Board or the Tariff Board experts helped to write the Hill cotton bill, for which the Republicans voted last Congress, or helped to write this wool substitute bill, which the distinguished gentleman from New York introduced and for which Republicans voted this afternoon. I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the gentleman from Alabama was nearer right than he thought—and he did not have to take the word of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]—that the Tariff Board, or the members of the Tariff Board, and their experts assisted in preparing this substitute and fixing these rates. The Republican campaign textbook last campaign expressly declared that this wool substitute bill and the Hill cotton bill, for which you voted last session, were prepared by the Republicans in conjunction with the members of the Tariff Board and the Tariff Board experts, and those rates were fixed by them. So the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is entirely right.

Mr. MONDELL. The statement made, if that was the statement made in the campaign textbook or elsewhere, is absolutely correct. The rates were fixed by the Republican members of the committee, assisted in the matter of ascertaining facts by the experts of the Tariff Board.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; that these substitute bills were written by the House Republicans and the Tariff Board members; and it is a fact that on the cotton bill the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] was working in its preparation for six weeks in conjunction with Mr. Page and the experts who aided the Tariff Board in preparing their report on the cotton schedule. And you gentlemen ought to know that. You gentlemen know that there is not a Republican committee or a Republican Congress that has written a Republican tariff bill since the Civil War. The manufacturers and tariff beneficiaries have written the bills for you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman know of any manufacturers that were in favor of either the Hill cotton bill or the woolen bill? He says they have written all the bills.

Mr. KITCHIN. I say this, I never heard of a manufacturer opposing this wool bill that you voted on here to-day. And I want to tell my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], if I have the time, that in the debate on this wool bill last year—and you all remember it—Mr. Hill, in answer to a question from me, admitted that the wool bill for which you voted then, and for which you voted this afternoon, would not admit a penny's worth more of importations into this country and would not reduce the price of woolen goods one penny to the consumer. It was not written for that purpose.

I then replied to him that the Republican bill was a sham revision, a bill to fool the people and at the same time to satisfy the woolen manufacturers in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And I do say it does satisfy the woolen manufacturers of this country, and there is not a woolen manufacturer in the United States who opposes the bill for which you voted this afternoon. Not a dollar more of importations will be admitted under the Payne bill of this afternoon than under the present Payne Act, and if I had the time I think I could show it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from North Carolina is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and he knows that no woolen manufacturers appeared before his committee and indorsed either of these bills. They say it is too low.

Mr. KITCHIN. I never heard of one saying it was too low and not satisfactory to him last Congress. On the contrary, the members of the American Woolen Manufacturers' Association indorsed the bill then. Their representatives, as well as representatives of other manufacturers, had examined carefully into the report made by the Tariff Board, and while the board was preparing its report wrote a letter commending the work of the board. They indorsed it, and Mr. Taft, your President, sent a communication to Congress, including this very letter in which they indorsed the work of the Tariff Board and its work upon the woolen schedule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FORDNEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] can take time on the next paragraph.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] if he desires.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Never mind. I will take the opportunity to speak on the next paragraph.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not believe that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] would attempt to do any man an injustice. In fact, I do not believe that any Member of this House will misrepresent another man on the floor of this House. Gentlemen may sometimes, for the purpose of gaining political advantage in argument, make a wild-eyed, fire-eating statement [laughter], such as that which the gentleman from North Carolina has just made, thoughtlessly. He states that the Republican Party never wrote a tariff bill. He says the manufacturers of this country have always written Republican tariff bills.

Mr. Chairman, I have had the honor to take part in the writing of a tariff bill, and I want to say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who never made a more untruthful statement in his life, that he is entirely mistaken when he states that the manufacturers, or any other interest in this country, great or small, wrote the tariff rates in the Payne tariff law. The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee heard everybody that came; heard what they had to say, for and against a revision of the tariff, upward or downward, at that time, and from the information presented them, in their best judgment, they fixed the rates as best they could agree among themselves, as you gentlemen have fixed the rates as best you could agree among yourselves.

I venture to say that there was not a man on the Democratic side of the Ways and Means Committee in writing this bill who voted for every rate that is in your bill. No one man on that committee is satisfied with everything written in this bill. You have agreed upon a compromise. You have gotten the best rates you could get among yourselves. You went into caucus and you agreed to stand by the will of the majority. There is no other way to pass your bill. There is no other way for the Republicans to pass a bill. There is no way for any party but to stand by its majority and vote for whatever that majority of the party believe to be the best thing to be done.

I admonish the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] you should withdraw your remarks from the RECORD; and no other Member of this House of Representatives should cast such insinuations and aspersions upon other men as to say that they are so dishonest as to write a tariff law solely in the interest of the manufacturers.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I shall be glad to yield if I can get time to answer the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I believe the gentleman will admit that the most important schedule is Schedule K. Did not the gentleman hear Mr. Wood, president of the American Manufacturers' Association, admit that the woolen manufacturers and the woolgrowers wrote Schedule K?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; and neither did you hear him admit that.

Mr. KITCHIN. He did admit it.

Mr. FORDNEY. He did not; and neither has any other man admitted that any special interest in this country wrote Schedule K in the Payne tariff law; and when any man makes a statement to that effect he is sadly mistaken—purposely or otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Wood is my constituent and my personal friend, and he protested to me against that schedule. He never helped to write it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The fact that he is the gentleman's constituent does not make him any more truthful or any more competent to write a tariff law.

Mr. BUTLER. I know the gentleman and I know he is capable of telling the truth, and that he does tell the truth.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think I am capable of telling the truth, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order and gentleman will observe the rule.

Mr. FORDNEY. I hope this colloquy will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. GARDNER. Did not the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], on the opening day of this debate, say that Schedule K was not changed in the Payne law from what it was in 1897, in the Dingley law?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think he did, but the gentleman was mistaken when he made that statement. I will say that in Schedule K there were, as I now remember it, three slight changes, slight reductions, but no increases at all in Schedule K.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I will be glad to.

Mr. PALMER. Does the gentleman remember that before the Committee on Ways and Means, in January last, Mr. Chaney, the witness who appeared on behalf of the silk manufacturers, declared that the former president of the Silk Manufacturers' Association wrote the silk schedule for the same committee?

Mr. FORDNEY. I know that the gentleman made a statement that he was asked by the members of the Ways and Means Committee or somebody to prepare rates and present them to the committee, but it has not been shown——

Mr. PALMER. That is what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no; be fair with me.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have several others here.

Mr. FORDNEY. It was not shown that the rates suggested by that gentleman were written into the law. You members of the Ways and Means Committee last January asked gentlemen to prepare schedules to present to you, and, among others, you asked Mr. Parker, of South Carolina, to present to you rates on the cotton schedule. Mr. Parker presented rates for you to consider. I would not misrepresent you by saying that you accepted just what Mr. Parker prepared, and you have no right so to misrepresent me, to say that I would accept anybody's opinion unless, in my judgment, it was for the best.

I thank you, gentlemen, for your attention. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE M—PAPERS AND BOOKS.

328. Sheathing paper and roofing felt, 5 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do not believe that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] intended to misstate any facts with reference to the Tariff Board, but in some respects he has altogether misrepresented their action. The Tariff Board never had any manufacturers appear before them. The Tariff Board never had any hearings where any manufacturers or other parties could appear before them. They sent out their experts to examine their books and factories and took their word for nothing. I think the gentleman is aware of that, but in the heat of debate he said something he did not mean.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not say they had any manufacturers before them at the hearing, but I said that a group of manufacturers, including the Woolen Association, appointed a committee of manufacturers to go down and see how they were progressing with their work and the method of their work on Schedule K, and that those manufacturers did report—and Mr. Taft sent it to Congress—that they were just doing it all O. K., to the queen's taste of the manufacturers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am glad the gentleman has relieved himself of those facetious expressions, which he knows does not express any fact. The real fact about it is that what the Tariff Board did down there at the Treasury Department was open to anybody and aboveboard, and anyone could go there and examine it and see just exactly what they were doing.

Mr. HARDWICK. That statement is not correct. I know I wished very much to find out some things they were doing, and although I had a very good personal friend down there, it was not considered that it was proper to let me know about it, and I thought that was proper.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Georgia mean to say that the Tariff Board did not openly show the methods they were pursuing?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; after they were through.

Mr. MANN. While they were at work.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell the gentleman what happened. I made some effort to find out what they were doing or intending to do on the sugar question and the method that they were adopting and the conclusions they arrived at, and officials of the board did not think it was proper, as they understood the situation, to give me such information, and I did not, of course, question the propriety of that course.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The information on both the wool and the cotton schedule was open to the public.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; so far as a schedule of questions they were sending out, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. They did not give secret information that they had obtained from certain manufactories, and never have.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that any Member of Congress could go there and find out what they were doing, and I think the gentleman was clearly in error.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was not in error.

Mr. HARDWICK. They would not tell you how far along they had got with the investigation, nor to what extent they had arrived at conclusions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very true. I am talking about facts.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I would ask the gentleman from Georgia if he would consider it proper for an individual member of that board, even if a Member of Congress of the gentleman's party came to him, to give to him information without consulting the board?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly not; but the gentleman from Iowa said that any Member of Congress could go there and get just such information from the board, as I understood him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I say that any Member of this House could have gone to the office of the Tariff Board and found out what they were doing there as far as the facts were concerned. If they did not apply for facts but conclusions, they would not give them out until they were completed and ready to be given to the President. Of course, if they wanted to find out where the reports came from, they could not get that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the Payne schedule being satisfactory to the manufacturers of wool, I know that there are manufacturers engaged in the business that have objected to it. I know as a member of the Ways and Means Committee in the examination of that schedule that these manufacturers had nothing whatever at any time to do with reference to the preparation of the schedule. It is true that it was prepared before I was a member of that committee, but I knew that it was being prepared at the time, and I know that the manufacturers had nothing to do with it. I can not understand why the gentleman from North Carolina should make the statement he did.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to call attention to the fact that I had a strong protest from Mr. Frank P. Hobbs, treasurer of the Arlington Mills. I think he is at the head of some woolen manufacturers' association, and he is a son-in-law of Mr. Whitman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and there were protests from others engaged in this business, partly because they did not understand the schedule and partly because they were in the habit of protesting against everything.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that some of the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa ought to go unchallenged. I know some members and high officers of the Tariff Board thought, and I believe they were right about it, that acting under the law which made them appointees of the President of the United States that they could not allow Members of Congress to know anything about what they were doing or what the reports were until they were reported to the President of the United States. In this I thoroughly agreed, and I am sure that as to some of the members of the board, if not all, the rule was uniform.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is what I stated—until after the reports were completed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then they were published to all the world.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I think I can make this thing plain. On January 10, 1912, while we were working on the tariff bill, Schedule K, Mr. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, addressed a letter to Mr. Emery, chairman of the Tariff Board, in which he asked him for certain information the board had concerning the wool and woolen schedule. The board refused to give Mr. UNDERWOOD and the committee the information desired.

I will put into the RECORD the correspondence between Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. Emery relative to this matter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 10, 1912.

Hon. HENRY C. EMERY,
Chairman Tariff Board, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the course of my examination of your report on wool and manufactures of wool, I require further information for a complete understanding of it. It may be that this information is contained in portions of the report which have escaped my attention, but I have been unable to find it. If the data desired are contained in the report, I shall be under obligations to you to point it out to me, and in the event that they are not given, I would thank you to kindly supply me with the same. I do not, of course, desire to request any data that may be considered as confidential in the way of making public names or addresses of persons who have supplied you with details. If any of the material sought by me comes within this scope, I take it that it will be possible for you to designate by numbers such returns, retaining your own memoranda which show the names of the concerns to which given numbers refer. I desire the detailed data sought only for the purpose of informing myself and this committee with regard to the general meaning of certain features of the report and not for the purpose of examining the sources which you have used.

The points which I have in mind and about which I would thank you to furnish me additional information are:

Raw wool—

(1) Will you kindly loan this committee the original tables or working sheets showing the full and detailed returns from the reports of field agents with regard to raw wool, you reserving, if desired, names and addresses of the persons whose returns to you are involved?

(2) If no such sheets were compiled for the investigation in Australia, New Zealand, and South America, please inform me more fully as to the conditions under which the inquiry was carried on there and the number of growers visited.

(3) Were general tables compiled showing the data obtained from each and every mill with regard to woolen manufactures? If so, have these been printed; and if not, could you lend these to this committee?

(4) Have you a record of the number of concerns from which costs were obtained and each sample of cloth, and can you lend the committee that record?

I would like the record in this connection both for foreign and domestic mills, with an indication in connection with each of the degree of efficiency of the foreign mills furnishing such costs compared with the efficiency of the mills in the United States furnishing similar costs. If possible, I would be pleased to have these same data for each of the groups of samples which are discussed in your report, together with a memorandum of the location of the mills involved.

(5) Can you supply the committee with a tabular view or statement showing how many ready-made cloth concerns were asked to furnish costs on specimen garments of each given kind, thereby creating the basis for the tables in which typical costs are analyzed?

These are some of the points which have occurred to me in the course of my examination of your report, and if you can put me in possession of the data outlined I shall be especially gratified, and thank you in advance for your prompt reply.

Very respectfully,

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman.

THE TARIFF BOARD, TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, January 18, 1912.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of January 10, which reached us on the 13th. The delay since then in replying to it is due to absence from the city.

I regret that it is impossible to meet your five requests fully. You will realize that a very large part of the information we received was given us only on condition that the material should not be made public, except in the form of summaries and conclusions to be printed in our report. It was stipulated that individual figures should not go beyond the possession of the board. We are obliged to respect these pledges of confidence.

Taking up your requests seriatim, I beg to say:

1. The original schedules on raw wool were secured on the understanding that they should be held confidential by us. These could not be submitted in a form which would not make identification possible. The same is true of the working sheets, which are arranged on the basis of counties, giving acreage, size of flock, etc., in a manner which would make it possible to identify the individual sheep owner.

2. As to the investigation in Australia, New Zealand, and South America, this was carried out by wide traveling and consultation with many growers and buyers. You will find on page 519 of Volume II a description of the course pursued by our agent in South America. He visited over 100 leading growers. Similar methods were followed by our agents in Australia and New Zealand.

3. The compilations on wool manufactures were not made by mills, except in the case of those covered by that part of the investigation of which the results are given in Volume IV. The information there is given by establishments.

4. It is not possible for us to give the exact number of mills from which figures were obtained abroad on the different samples, since the results were in some measure summarized by experts employed by us before being submitted. Furthermore, information was secured as to the cost of certain processes from a large number of mills from which complete figures as to total cost were not secured. In the case of American mills the costs given on the 55 samples cover a range of from 3 to 15 mills per sample. In all cases we aimed, both at home and abroad, to take costs on the basis of mills of good efficiency running full time. In the case of the 55 samples of cloth inefficient mills were eliminated. Where, because of unusual success on particular fabrics, one or two mills are able to make a given sample at a distinctly lower cost than other mills of the same general efficiency, that fact is noted in the report. A statement of the locality of such mills would easily identify the particular establishment. However, you will find on page 620, Volume III, a complete list of the 174 mills from which information was received.

5. I think you have misunderstood the table as to costs of "specimen garments." In the case of the ready-made clothing investigation we did not establish a definite number of sample suits, but took costs from a number of manufacturers on actual suits turned out by them. That is, in the table of costs of specimen garments (Tables 14 to 17, in Vol. III, pp. 870 and following) each one represents the cost of an actual suit or garment made by one manufacturer. These are then grouped in various ways to bring out the essential facts as to prices and costs. Altogether they cover 169 suits, 45 overcoats, and 10 pants made in 40 establishments.

I appreciate your statement that you do not wish to examine the sources on which our report is based in such a way as to reveal the identity of establishments who have given us confidential information. However, the original material is of such a nature that if made public such identification would be possible.

As to your expressed desire for information regarding "the general meaning of certain features of the report," we are entirely at your service or at the service of any member of the committee. If the meaning of any part of our report is not clear, we are anxious to make it so and will welcome a call at any time from any member of the committee or of Congress and further explain any question that may arise.

Very respectfully,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to yield any further at this time. So that the gentleman's statement—if he will not change the record, and I know he will not since the controversy has arisen, and I know that he would not change it, anyway, without consent—was that while this board was doing this work any Member of Congress of any party could go to them and get the information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No, no. You will not find that statement in the record. Any Member of Congress could go down there and find out what they were doing. That is what I said, and the record will show it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman will find that they could not do it. They said, and they said properly, I think, that under the law they were appointees of the President of the United States, and they reported to him, and until they did report to him they could give no information whatever to anybody else. Yet you say the work was open and above board, and that was one of the vital reasons why the Democratic minority at that time, the great majority of it, rejected the leadership of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on this question and declined to permit a tariff board to be provided for by law, because we knew that that very thing would happen if we got a presidential tariff board that under the law reported only to the President and not to Congress.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do say the work was open and aboveboard so that everybody could go down there and find out what they were doing, and that no manufacturer was appearing before them or having anything to do with their findings.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say to the gentleman that I disagree with him. Of course I do not mean that their work was underhanded or unfair, because I had a very dear personal friend who was a member of the board; but we did not have any access to their work. Those gentlemen did not feel they had a right, as I do not think they had, to give individual Members of Congress any information about the workings of that Tariff Board before its reports were made to the President and he had made them public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] for a moment, he stated a while ago that the woolen manufacturers and the American Association of Woolen Manufacturers indorsed the Hill woolen bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not say anything about the association. I said the woolen manufacturers.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will consult the record, just as it appears, he will see that he referred to the American Woolen Association.

Mr. KITCHIN. Go ahead.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the American Woolen Association presented a brief to the committee of which the gentleman is a member at the hearings last winter. It is found in the hearings, and I hold a copy of it in my hand. I want to read from it some suggestions the American Woolen Manufacturers' Association made as to what the rates in this woolen bill should be. They say—

Subject to the qualifications, we suggest the following as the minimum rates under which the greater part of each branch of the industry concerned can continue—

And so forth—

Should a duty be imposed upon wool the rates hereafter given must be increased to cover the greater cost of raw material.

And so the figures they now give are upon the basis of free wool, just as your bill is—

Tops, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The Hill bill provided for 10 per cent ad valorem and the bill you have just adopted provides for 15, just as suggested by the American Association of Woolen Manufacturers. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, who has written the bill, so far as tops are concerned? The woolen manufacturers' rates on tops are in your bill, and I say you have given the Woolen Trust, if there be such, a protection that can not be justified from any standpoint upon tops. "Yarns." Their suggestion upon yarns is "a rate equal to one quarter of a cent per pound plus the duty on the top, the same being approximately equal to 35 per cent ad valorem." In our bill the rate is from 10 per cent ad valorem to 25 per cent ad valorem. Does the gentleman still say that the woolen manufacturers indorse the Hill bill when the rates you have written upon yarn come very much nearer the suggestion of the woolen manufacturers than do the rates in the Hill bill? Upon cloth they suggest a rate of 55 per cent ad valorem, and say:

Is that indorsing the rates in this Hill bill, so-called, when the lowest rate on cloth in that bill is 30 per cent, 5 per cent lower than your own bill? Now, if my friend will be fair he will admit that if there has been any influence exercised upon these bills by the American Woolen Manufacturers' Association, the Democrats have been more susceptible to that influence than have the Republicans. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I made the statement that the woolen manufacturers throughout the United States had approved and indorsed the Payne woolen bill in the last Congress, the same that was introduced here and voted on this afternoon by the gentleman from Iowa and other Republicans, and that statement is absolutely true. Not a word the gentleman read here showed anything to the contrary.

Mr. LENROOT. There is not a single rate that is not higher than this bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Sit down and let us see. Now, here are 40 or 50 Republican gentlemen present. I challenge a single one of them and the gentleman himself to stand up here and say if you got a single protest or a single line or word of objection from a single woolen manufacturer throughout the United States against the Payne bill introduced at the last Congress as a substitute for the Underwood bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The one filed here to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. I said the last Congress; certainly you might get them to-day, as they are against any change now.

Mr. BUTLER. I have. I have had protests threatening to read me out of the party if——

Mr. KITCHIN. When did you get them?

Mr. BUTLER. Last year.

Mr. KITCHIN. When did a Republican ever disobey an order from his superior? When did a Republican ever vote against a manufacturer's demand?

Mr. GARDNER. When did the gentleman ever vote against any importer?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, now, I am going to wind this up——

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman asked us to stand up.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And somebody called the gentleman's bluff; that is all.

Mr. KITCHIN. What did the gentleman from Massachusetts say?

Mr. GARDNER. I said when did a Democrat ever vote against an importer or the press?

Mr. KITCHIN. An importer or the press?

Mr. GARDNER. An importer or the press.

Mr. KITCHIN. So the gentleman by asking that question refuses to answer me in asking if a Republican ever voted against a manufacturer.

Mr. GARDNER. My question was in reply to the gentleman's.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Democrats have always supported tariff bills in the interest of all the people and not of the few. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I was Republican floor leader in the last Congress at the time that the Payne bill or the Hill bill was voted for on the Republican side of the House. I will say for the gentleman's benefit that as the Republican leader in the House, and because of that fact, I received a good many protests from woolen manufacturers against the Payne bill.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, gentlemen, that is the strangest thing in this world that these witnesses never so testified until 12 months after they voted on it. In that connection—some page get me the Republican campaign book—the Republicans in their campaign book last year boasted that it was a bill in the interest of and as protection to American manufacturers, and it declared——

Mr. MANN. And we still will.

Mr. KITCHIN. And it showed that the reduction you did make was the excess of rates that the manufacturers were not utilizing, that they were "useless and ineffective," and that in the Payne substitute bill the rates made would keep out importations to this country and would protect the manufacturers from foreign competition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CLINE. I want to inquire if the President did not defend the rate of the woolen schedule as placed in the Payne bill on the ground that the manufacturers had so many friends on the Republican side that the rates could not be reduced without endangering the whole bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. He said they were indefensible.

Mr. KITCHIN. The truth is that the substitute then offered and now offered was a sham revision. This is the first time any man on this floor, either Democrat or Republican, declared or intimated that the woolen manufacturers were not content and did not approve of the Payne Act.

Why, that Payne substitute is written, not in the interests of the American public, not in the interests of the men, women, or children who buy woolen clothing, but in the interests of the woolen manufacturers. And every speech that you made in the last Congress and to-day in its behalf is conclusive proof of the charge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] sought recognition a few moments ago.

Mr. KITCHIN. I can get in on another paragraph and finish what I have to say.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask recognition as a member of the committee, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the situation. The Chair, of course, has tried to be fair, and thinks everybody will admit that. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] rose a moment ago and desired recognition, as did the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. The gentleman from Georgia was recognized. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rose at the same time, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I desire to ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph shall close at the end of five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] desires five minutes and I desire five minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Then we will say 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina asks whether there have been any protests received by the Members on the Republican side against the Payne woolen bill for which we voted to-day. I said that I had received such protests. I did not say that I received them last year, because I do not recollect whether I did so or not. I have this year received telegrams and letters from various manufacturers protesting against the Payne woolen bill, sometimes called the Hill woolen bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you heard the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] read a letter from Mr. UNDERWOOD to Prof. Emery, president of the Tariff Board, and you heard him say that the answer was a prompt denial. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not read President Emery's answer. I find that, far from being a prompt denial, it was a partial acceptance. I am going to read some passages from it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Read his refusal, which I read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GARDNER. I yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. Suppose you read his refusal there.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose the gentleman lets me read it in my own way.

Mr. KITCHIN. Read the fact that we got nothing from him.

Mr. GARDNER. He says:

THE TARIFF BOARD, TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, January 18, 1912.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of January 10, which reached us on the 13th. The delay since then in replying to it is due to absence from the city.

I regret that it is impossible to meet your five requests fully. You will realize that a very large part of the information we received was given us only on condition that the material should not be made public except in the form of summaries and conclusions to be printed in our report. It was stipulated that individual figures should not go beyond the possession of the board. We are obliged to respect these pledges of confidence.

Taking up your requests seriatim, I beg leave to say:

1. The original schedules on raw wool were secured on the understanding that they should be held confidential by us. These could not be submitted in a form which would not make identification possible. The same is true of the working sheets, which are arranged on the basis of counties, giving acreage, size of flock, etc., in a manner which would make it possible to identify the individual sheep owner.

And so on through all the five requests. And now come the last two paragraphs, in which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is especially interested:

I appreciate your statement that you do not wish to examine the sources on which our report is based in such a way as to reveal the identity of establishments who have given us confidential information. However, the original material is of such a nature that, if made public, such identification would be possible.

As to your express desire for information regarding "the general meaning of certain features of the report" we are entirely at your service or at the service of any member of the committee. If the meaning of any part of our report is not clear, we are anxious to make it so, and will welcome a call at any time from any member of the committee or of Congress and further explain any question that may arise.

Very respectfully, HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I made the statement that a good many of the woolen manufacturers were not satisfied with the Republican substitute which was offered a year ago, and again offered to-day, I do not make that statement with the idea that the substitute is not a protective measure or does not meet the approval of Republicans generally. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has been so in the habit of making stump speeches throughout the country, in which he says that the Republican tariff measures were all written by the manufacturers, that he has really almost come to believe that the Republican side of the House does not act upon its own volition or its own judgment.

There never was a tariff law written that was high enough to suit many of the manufacturers, and there never will be a tariff law written that will be low enough to suit many of the importers. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is very likely to be influenced by the importers. Possibly I am more likely to be influenced by the manufacturers; I do not know. I believe in giving proper protection, reasonable protection, not unreasonably high protection; and whether the Payne bill satisfies the manufacturers or not is not the question that comes into our minds. The question is, Does the substitute proposed conform with the facts found by an impartial tribunal, the Tariff Board, and do we write the law or the bill based upon the facts so as to provide reasonable protection for American industries? And when we say that we believe we do we support the bill.

It is impossible, possibly, for the gentleman from North Carolina to understand that attitude of mind; and yet when he has written more tariff bills he will come to the conclusion, as I am sure is the fact, that he will endeavor to do what he thinks is right, regardless of what some importer or some manufacturer may think or say.

Mr. Chairman, in reference to the Tariff Board, the Tariff Board acted in the open. It could not have concealed, if it wanted to, the schedules upon which it had obtained its information, because those schedules went into the hands of many people throughout the country. No one expected that they would give out special information, and they did not endeavor to do so.

But gentlemen seek to cast odium upon the Tariff Board and say that the Tariff Board would not furnish information.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I remember, when the chemical schedule bill was before the House a year ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] in charge of the bill, had at his side—not in strict accordance of the rules of the House, but by the common consent of the House—had at his side an expert of the Tariff Board whom he brought on the floor of the House; a gentleman, an expert who had helped to write the chemical schedule, who sat on the floor of the House ready to furnish information which would defend it. Nobody objected to that. That was the purpse of the board—to furnish information if it could.

The only trouble on the other side of the House in reference to the Tariff Board is that, having the information, it refuses to pay any attention to it and prefers to write tariff legislation out of ignorance rather than out of knowledge. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

329. Filter masse or filter stock, composed wholly or in part of wood pulp, wood flour, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, just to get straight this matter of the manufacturers' indorsement of this bill, I want to say that I never heard of any manufacturer in the woolen interest protesting against it, and I have no doubt in the world that typical standpatters like my friend PAYNE and my friend FORDNEY and my friend MOORE would never have voted for it if they had ever had any protest against it from the manufacturers.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHIN. Wait a minute.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; you wait a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am not asking the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then if you do not ask me to yield, sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I rise to object, Mr. Chairman, because the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is not addressing himself to the paragraph now pending before the committee. I shall object unless the gentleman allows me to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] can make a point of order.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will make a point of order if the gentleman from North Carolina does not address himself to the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Woolen Manufacturers' Association indorsed it because it was to the interest of the American woolen manufacturers, and the Republican campaign book indorsed it because it was in the interest of the American woolen manufacturers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Republican campaign textbook indorsed it last year, and we indorse it to-day.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the strongest evidence, to my mind, that the manufacturers indorse it to-day.

Mr. MANN. That only shows the peculiar character of the gentleman's mind.

Mr. KITCHIN. In 1867 the woolen manufacturers—and my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] will not deny this—the woolen manufacturers and woolgrowers, by agreement, fixed up the rate and a Republican Congress adopted it. Mr. Wood, president of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, before our committee admitted this.

Mr. FORDNEY. When?

Mr. KITCHIN. In 1867. It went into the next tariff act. I asked Mr. Wood if that was not practically the same rate that had been in existence since then, with no material change, and he said, "Yes." The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in his speech last year admitted that Schedule K had not been changed materially in 50 years. We all do know—it is a matter of record and has been proven—that Mr. North, who at the time was secretary of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, prepared the woolen schedule of the Dingley Act. The testimony before the committee this year shows that the harness and saddlery manufacturers fixed or suggested the rate on saddlery and harness that went into the Payne Act. We do know that the lemon growers of California came down here and fixed or suggested the lemon rate, and they fixed it at 1½ cents, and into the Payne Act it went. We do know that Mr. Littauer, the great glove manufacturer, fixed the glove schedule. We do know the gentleman who appeared before us representing the silk industry told us that he had suggested to the committee the rates, which they changed, in the silk schedule in the Payne law. And we know, too, that many of the reductions were not made until the manufacturers themselves asked them to reduce the rates.

Now, I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to name a single rate on any article except lumber that the people use that was reduced except at the request of the manufacturers themselves. Take boots and shoes. Why, the boot and shoe manufacturers themselves came here and said that 25 per cent was too high; that if they were given free hides they would consent to a reduction of 10 and 15 per cent. Some, however, said they could stand free boots and shoes, and in the Payne Act the rate was reduced to 10 and 15 per cent.

In regard to machine tools the manufacturers themselves came down here and went before the committee and said, "While we have 45 per cent on machine tools, that is too high. We do not want that. It is interfering with our foreign trade. If we keep this high rate upon our goods other nations will retaliate and keep us out of their markets," and they asked Mr. PAYNE and his committee to reduce the rate on machine tools down to 30 per cent, and it was reduced down to 30 per cent. They always raise the rates when the manufacturers ask them to do so, and they never reduce rates until the manufacturers ask a reduction. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PALMER. I move that debate on the pending paragraph be now closed.

Mr. FORDNEY. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. PALMER. Can not the gentleman get in on the next paragraph?

Mr. FORDNEY. I reserved a point of order for the purpose of getting an opportunity of making a reply.

Mr. PALMER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman allow me one minute to read three telegrams from woolen manufacturers?

Mr. PALMER. Can not the gentleman read them on the next paragraph?

Mr. MANN. Oh, let the gentleman do it now, and make it six minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Then I will make it six minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to call attention to the fact, after this is over, that we had an understanding this morning that we would endeavor to proceed as rapidly as we could with the bill, without too much side political debate. I hope both sides of the House will endeavor to observe that understanding as far as practicable.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Illinois should not have insisted on this six minutes' debate, because I suspect that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is going to make a political speech.

Mr. MANN. He is only going to reply to one that was made a moment ago.

Mr. PALMER. That is what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. GARDNER. I have here a telegram from Mr. Frederic S. Clark, president of the Talbot Mills, which reads as follows:

NORTH BILLERICA, MASS., April 21, 1913.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Although the Underwood Schedule K would be very objectionable, the Payne-Hill bill would not be a satisfactory substitute. There are many grave objections to it.

FREDERIC S. CLARK,
President Talbot Mills.

Here is one from Edwin Farnham Greene, treasurer of the Pacific Mills:

BOSTON, MASS., April 21, 1913.

Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Consider it a very great mistake for Republicans to reintroduce so-called Hill bill on Schedule K as representing their views. The bill is inconsistent and quite inadequate to properly protect the industry.

EDWIN FARNHAM GREENE,
Treasurer Pacific Mills.

Here is one from Franklin W. Hobbs. Mr. Hobbs is the son-in-law of William Whitman; he has recently been elected to succeed him as president of the Arlington Mills. Whitman was formerly president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, but it appears that that office is now held by John P. Wood, of Philadelphia:

SOUTH BOSTON, MASS., April 16, 1913.

Hon. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your telegram 15th, my objections to so-called Hill bill are wool duty impracticable, compensatory duties utterly inadequate, protective duties absurdly low. The whole trade believed such a bill disastrous, and was amazed last year that the Republicans introduced it. The party must not repeat the blunder. The new Democratic bill, radical and disastrous as it will be, is more protective to the woolen industry. We would be handicapped in trying to secure improvements in Democratic bill if measure introduced by Republicans was actually worse.

FRANKLIN W. HOBBS,
President Arlington Mills.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] should make such rash statements as he did in his remarks a few minutes ago about who wrote the rates in the Payne tariff law. He was not a member of the Ways and Means Committee at that time. He says he has read the hearings. He states that Mr. Littauer wrote the glove schedule. He is just as near the mark as the Irishman was that shot at a pigeon with both barrels of his gun. He turned his head in the opposite direction, pulled both triggers, and let go, and when the gun went off the pigeon flew away. Mr. Littauer came before the committee and gave testimony. Mr. Littauer asked for a higher rate of duty on ladies' gloves. He pointed out that in the Dingley law the rate of duty on men's gloves had been increased from $2.50 to $4 a dozen pairs, and that before the adoption of that rate Germany furnished us with 95 per cent of the men's gloves consumed here. But after the rate was advanced to $4 a dozen pairs, the people of the United States are manufacturing 95 per cent of the men's gloves consumed in this country. Mr. Littauer wanted the same rate of duty on ladies' gloves that was written in the Dingley tariff law on men's gloves. He did not get it. I was one of the members of the committee that wanted to give that higher rate, so that ladies' gloves consumed in this country might be made by American labor and American capital.

Now, it is not true that Mr. Littauer wrote the glove schedule. It is not true that any man or set of men wrote the saddlery schedule. It is not true that any man or set of men wrote the wool schedule, except the Republican members of that Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. How about boots and shoes?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is not true that any man wrote the schedule on boots and shoes. It is true that Mr. Jones, of Massachusetts, came before the committee and stated that if the committee would give them, the shoe manufacturers, free raw hides he would be willing to have boots and shoes put on the free list. I doubted the correctness of his statement and the sincerity of that statement, and so told him then and there. He came back afterwards on his bended knees and begged the pardon of the committee and said that he did not mean just what he had stated. He did not recommend any rate of duty on shoes. The rates all through the bill were fixed by a majority vote of the 12 Republican members preparing the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did not they in their brief suggest that if you would give them free hides that 10 or 15 per cent would be the proper rate and they would stand for that?

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not read their briefs. I listened to the statements of the gentleman himself.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did read the brief, and it shows that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not care a ha'penny what they wrote or what the brief states; I listened to the words of the man's own mouth.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman said that the woolgrowers——

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman is going to read from a report I can not yield.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to read what they said.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not in my time. I say that I can go through the hearings of January last and find any amount of such reports or testimony before the committee, taken in the hearings that you lent a deaf ear to; and you have no right to say that because such things are in the hearings that any man wrote these schedules. It is true that way back in 1867, when a Republican tariff bill was being prepared on wool, a committee was appointed. It selected a committee of manufacturers to get information; months and months were spent by that committee in furnishing information, as the Tariff Board has recently done, and upon the report of that committee the Ways and Means Committee prepared their report on wool. I have that information at my office, and if the gentleman doubts what I have said on this subject I will at a later time present it to the House, showing exactly what was done by that committee at that time. The country was uninformed as to the cost of production at home and the cost of production abroad right after the Civil War.

They therefore appealed to the men in the business to give them an intelligent estimate of the cost of production of the various kinds of cloth made from wool—made in this country and made abroad. That was the only time in the history of the Republican Party that a committee of manufacturers or any manufacturer has been asked to furnish information except to come before the Committee on Ways and Means and make his statement and furnish his views on the cost of production at home and the estimated cost abroad. You have prepared your bill along those lines. I do not impugn dishonest motives to you, and you should not to me, for doing the same thing your committee have done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

330. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued above 2½ cents per pound, 12 per cent ad valorem: Provided, however, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose any export duty, export license fee, or other charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed upon printing paper, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty equal to the amount of such export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

Page 80, at the end of line 13, insert the words "valued at above 2½ cents per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 19, after the word "paper" insert the words "or upon an amount of."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the amendment which was just agreed to, would not that leave the matter in such shape that if Canada should impose an export duty upon print paper, valued at less than 2½ cents per pound, we would have no recourse against that? There is nothing in here to prevent that, except where you have the free list. You impose a duty on chemical pulp which we do not import to any extent from Canada.

Mr. HAMMOND. The effect of this amendment is simply to limit the retaliatory duty to paper valued at more than 2½ cents a pound, because in the free list we have paper up to 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. MANN. I understand. This bill carries news print paper, which is the term usually used, at less than 2½ cents per pound on the free list.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But supposing Canada imposes an export duty on that paper.

Mr. HAMMOND. There is no retaliatory duty.

Mr. MANN. Of course not in the free list. There is a retaliatory duty on chemical pulp.

Mr. HAMMOND. But not upon print paper.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman afraid that is rather a dangerous proposition?

Mr. HAMMOND. The purpose of it is to have print paper up to 2½ cents per pound admitted to this country without the imposition of any duty here. Of course if we should impose a retaliatory duty we would make it cost that much more.

Mr. MANN. I think not. If we impose a retaliatory duty there will be no possibility of their imposing in the near future an export duty, because the paper could not stand the export duty and our import duty.

Mr. HAMMOND. That would depend on the size of the export duty.

Mr. MANN. I think it would not depend upon the size of the export duty. On 2½-cent paper you would have to make some duty. Of course, if they put one one-thousandth of 1 per cent, that would not mean anything.

Mr. HAMMOND. If they put it 10 per cent——

Mr. MANN. If they put a 10 per cent export duty on it and we had a retaliatory duty, that would be 10 per cent import duty here. That paper could not stand that, coming from Canada, and hence they would not do it.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is very difficult to determine just what Canada will do or will not do under certain conditions. At one time we contemplated a retaliatory duty in connection with the provision admitting news-print paper under 2½ cents free of duty, but later on it was thought that by so doing we would simply make it more difficult to bring that paper into this country. For that reason the committee decided to strike out the retaliatory provision. Of course, the gentleman understands that the amendment that was just adopted has nothing to do with the question we have been discussing.

Mr. MANN. I do not so understand; quite the contrary.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think it has nothing to do with it for this reason, that we are now engaged in perfecting the paragraph that contains retaliatory duties upon paper valued at more than 2½ cents per pound, and this amendment which was agreed to simply proposes that the retaliatory duty shall be levied on paper valued at above 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. MANN. The dutiable part of this paragraph has not affected paper valued less than 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The proviso is one which I wrote some years ago, I think in practically the same language; perhaps exactly the same.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is very like the language of the Payne bill.

Mr. MANN. That applies to print paper regardless of value.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman's amendment is designed not to apply to print paper valued at 2½ cents or less per pound.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is the danger in the matter. With print paper admitted free of duty from Canada, Canada having a supply of the raw material, the spruce wood, it is almost sure that the development of the industry will be mostly in Canada. When they have acquired the development of the industry and possess the mills, possessing the raw material, the danger is that they will do in some form what Brazil did in regard to coffee. We do not get any benefit from taking the tariff off coffee and if they shall in the end have an incidental development in Canada, then, they having the industry, impose an export on paper, we will be in a worse position so far as paper is concerned than now. I do not think they will do that if we had an import duty based upon the export duty, if they make one, of the same amount.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman states that if they develop the industry there and practically control it then they may put an export duty upon print paper. I fancy that he is not far out of the way in such speculation. If they secure that control of the market and then put an export duty upon paper and we have to have that paper we must pay that export charge, and if there be an additional retaliatory duty here we must pay more for it than if we took it at their export duty.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands it would not have any practical effect now either one way or the other. It is a mere declaration of policy written into the law, as far as that is concerned. I think in the interest of the paper manufacturers, and principally the paper consumers of the country, we ought to declare our policy that if Canada at any time proposes to impose an extra duty we will impose an import duty of the same amount, and therefore would prevent an export duty being imposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 20, after the word "pulp," strike out the period and insert the words "necessary to manufacture such printing paper."

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information in regard to this paper? Do I understand paper at the present time up to two and a half cents a pound is admitted free of duty from Canada?

Mr. HAMMOND. At the present time all paper from Canada valued at not more than 4 cents a pound is admitted free of duty, if it is made of wood or wood pulp, subject to no export restrictions. We in this bill have a provision admitting news-print paper, valued at not more than two and a half cents, free of duty, and I suppose the effect of this provision, if it is adopted and enacted into law, will be to repeal or at least render nugatory section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity act.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, my next question is, At the present time what is the export duty on paper up to two and a half cents a pound from Canada?

Mr. HAMMOND. The export duty on paper going into Canada?

Mr. DONOVAN. No. What duty does Canada impose upon a similar grade of paper, say, of 2½ cents a pound?

Mr. HAMMOND. I am unable to inform the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps I can give some information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do.

Mr. MANN. There is no export duty on paper from Canada.

Mr. DONOVAN. No export duty; but what does Canada impose on paper from this country?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; but it is quite a duty.

Mr. DONOVAN. The point I want to make is to show what a foolish transaction it is upon our part to allow print paper into this country practically free, at 2½ cents a pound, and we pay $6 or $7 a ton to ship paper there. In other words, we have performed a fool business act in connection with Canada. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. The observations of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], of course, not only apply to paper, but a good deal more strongly to other articles in the bill. Print paper coming from Canada now under the Canadian reciprocity laws is admitted free of duty under certain conditions. Those conditions are such that more than half of the news-print paper which is imported from Canada is actually now admitted free. That paper is made from pulp wood cut upon what are known as the private lands, and comes in free because there is no restriction in Canada upon the exportation of the pulp wood. Most of the forests in Canada are owned by the Provinces, and are called "Crown lands." The right of stumpage is leased or sold, and there is a restriction in all the leases or sales providing that the wood shall be manufactured in Canada. That is considered a restriction. Paper made from that pulp wood, or from pulp that is made from that pulp wood, does not come in free. The Treasury Department has ruled where paper is made partly from pulp wood that is cut on Crown lands and partly from pulp wood that is cut on private lands, they will ascertain the proportion of the pulp wood that was had in the manufacture of paper and admit free the proportionate part made from the pulp wood cut on the private lands, and impose a duty on the proportionate part made from pulp wood cut on the Crown lands.

This bill provides for the admission of the news print paper up to 2½ cents a pound free. As I understand, the real purpose of fixing this at 2½ cents a pound—and I originally made the limit in the law which this follows—was in order to prevent the Canadians taking advantage of the American consumer by charging more than 2½ cents for the ordinary newsprint paper. As long as they keep the price down to 2½ cents, they get it in at a lower rate of duty, or, by this bill, free. The minute that goes up above 2½ cents, there is an import duty on it.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a very brief observation in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN]. He comes from a section of the United States that has always been famous for its ability to make trades. The Yankees are the best traders probably in the world, and his natural view of tariff making as a good Yankee is that we ought not to give away something to another country without getting something in return from them——

A MEMBER. Even nutmegs.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Even nutmegs, as some gentleman prompts me to suggest. But his remarks are in line with the message recently sent to the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts by the governor of that State, in which he deprecated the proposed Democratic tariff revision upon the ground that the only proper way to proceed to revise the tariff was to do so by making a reciprocal trade or bargain with some other nation, and that seems to be the opinion also of my good friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN].

Now, I agree that it would be very desirable, indeed, if we could get other countries to make reciprocal bargains with us, so that in reducing our own tariff duties for the sake of our consumers, we might also get them to reduce their tariff duties so as to give extended markets to our producers.

But the trouble with that arrangement is that if we wait for that time we shall never get any revision of the tariff downward at all. We have just been through a great campaign in which we wrote upon our own statute books a law offering reciprocal bargains to the Dominion of Canada, and instead of accepting them the Canadians rejected their own side of the agreement, so that the proposed reciprocity fell to the ground.

Sent here, as we were, commissioned by the consuming public of the United States to give them relief from tariff burdens, against which they were justly complaining, what assurance have we of giving relief to that situation if we pay no heed to that cry and, instead, offer to them a bargain with some other country? If I were confident that we could get those bargains and write them immediately into law I would desire, for the sake of the manufacturers in the United States, to do so.

But a burned child fears the fire, and we have just been burned in our endeavor to make a trade with the Dominion of Canada, our nearest neighbor, the country most like ourselves in habits, commerce, and business manners; and my conviction as the result of that experience is that unless we ourselves proceed immediately to revise the tariff for the sake of the American consuming public we shall have to wait until the cows come home. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer briefly the inquiry of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN]. I agree with him in the main, but I think that he does not quite appreciate the situation that exists at the present time. In order to obtain the pulp to make news-print paper there must be a large supply of spruce wood. It so happens that Canada has that large supply. We do not have it in the United States, but we have a great demand for the paper itself, so we are hardly in a position to retaliate against importations, under any terms, of news-print paper from Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

331. Papers commonly known as copying paper, stereotype paper, bibulous paper, tissue paper, pottery paper, letter-copying books, wholly or partly manufactured, crêpe paper and filtering paper, and articles manufactured from any of the foregoing papers or of which such paper is the component material of chief value, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 24, after the word "paper," insert the words "weighing not more than 10 pounds per ream of 480 sheets."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be allowed to make an observation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DONOVAN. The passage of this bill, if so amended, will result in this: That the Canadians will receive all the benefits of the so-called reciprocity act without giving anything in return. That is true, is it not? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation, too. I represent in part a State that has the spruce and also has the paper mills for the manufacture of paper. This industry is only one of many which will suffer in the great State of Washington.

While I am on my feet I want to suggest to my good Democratic friend, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], that, following up the discussion that was had on this side this afternoon as to who wrote the items of the wool schedule, we shall be indebted to him if he will disclose to the House who wrote the little item concerning gun wads which will soon be reached. Taxed gun wads under any tariff bill have never produced more than $300 of revenue per year to the United States. While my Democratic friend from Connecticut is bewailing the loss of protection for his paper mills, for his hat makers, and for his makers of notions of a thousand kinds, it must console him to know that the gun wads, made only in his State, are protected, and that protection is certainly not for revenue. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I will answer no; of course Canada does not receive all the benefits of reciprocity. Neither does Canada receive all the benefits under section 2 of the act. Canada, under section 2, might send us paper under 4 cents free of duty. Under this bill all paper valued over 2½ cents a pound is subject to a duty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the construction of this committee, if this becomes a law, upon section 2 of the reciprocity act?

Mr. HAMMOND. Well, of course, the Committee on Ways and Means is not a judicial body. I do not know that the committee as a whole has expressed any opinion upon this matter. I stated a moment ago that it was my own opinion that the effect of this legislation would be to render nugatory section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity act, and I assume that if section 2 is rendered nugatory it would be practically impossible for the Canadian reciprocity act to become a law without being reenacted here.

Mr. MANN. Of course, so far as paper under 2½ cents being admitted free is concerned, that would not necessarily conflict with section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity act, because that is giving something more than is given there.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But as to paper between 2½ and 4 cents, where you impose a duty upon it in this bill that would be in direct conflict with the provisions of section 2 of the reciprocity act?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes; it would.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if that act is a practical repeal of section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity act it acts practically as a repeal of the entire act.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is my opinion.

Mr. MANN. Then why not repeal it, and not leave it as a matter of uncertainty?

Mr. HAMMOND. I shall be very glad to vote to repeal it.

Mr. MANN. I have always voted for the Canadian reciprocity act.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have always voted against it, and I voted to repeal it.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I voted the other way; but if it is to be repealed in this way by implication, it would seem to me that for the purpose of avoiding possible international disputes or questions in court it would be advisable to do directly that which otherwise would be done indirectly. In other words, when you are writing a law it is better to make it clear on those things concerning which you know questions will arise, if you can do so, than to leave it until after the questions have arisen.

Mr. HAMMOND. If the gentleman from Illinois has an opportunity and does move to repeal the Canadian reciprocity act, I will assure him of one vote.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, I do not intend to move to repeal it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not think myself that this law will repeal the entire Canadian reciprocity treaty. It will have that effect as to section 2 undoubtedly, in my opinion, but I think the balance of the act will stay on the statute books. Of course, whether Canada will at any time accept the balance of it with that portion out, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. But, if the gentleman will pardon me, it may be that we can change our position with that degree of celerity which would fit the case. We are now claiming that section 2 is a part of the whole Canadian reciprocity act, and hence that where we grant free paper coming from Canada, that does not grant free paper coming from Sweden under the clause that gives Sweden the same rate of import duty that any other country has, on the ground that this is a reciprocity treaty with Canada and is to be treated as a whole. Perhaps we could switch around. I do not know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But my friend from Illinois overlooks the fact that Canada has not ratified this reciprocity treaty, and therefore it is not a question of repealing a treaty. Of course, if we should leave the law on the statute books and Canada should then accept the whole of it, it will then become in the nature of a treaty; and being ratified after this law goes into effect, the only effect it would have would be so far as this particular bill changes the terms of that act.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that. We would not ratify it after this bill went into effect. We have passed the law, as far as we are concerned. It is on the statute books. Now, suppose we in effect repeal one section of that law and then Canada passes a law in the same terms as the one which we originally passed, we would not either one of us get together. The minds of the two Governments would not meet. It would not amount to anything. It seems to me it is a practical repeal.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman was genuinely in favor of the Canadian reciprocity act, as I was. And having, after a great congressional convulsion, secured the passage of our side of the law, does not the gentleman think that instead of endeavoring to repeal the whole law we might leave it on the statute books, with the hope that, should Canada change her mind about it, this one trifling point might easily be adjusted between the two countries, and we could get all the benefits we hoped for from the whole reciprocity act?

Mr. MANN. I should say it would be desirable either to repeal it, or else put into this law a saving clause that if the Canadian reciprocity act should be accepted by Canada section 2 should remain in force.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. With all this talk I have not received a satisfactory answer on the point I wanted to bring out. My claim is that if this Underwood bill reported by the committee goes into effect paper will be allow to be brought into this country free of duty up to 2½ cents. That is, when we take it off it comes in free from the Canadian Province, and paper going out of this country must pay a duty. Now, the gentleman from Washington asked me a question, and I did not answer him, because I did not know. I do not want to appear discourteous to the gentleman. I suppose that the chairman of the committee ought to answer the question. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

332. Papers, including wrapper paper, with coated surface or surfaces, not specially provided for in this section, including wrapping paper with the surface decorated or covered with a design, fancy effect, pattern, or character, whether produced in the pulp or otherwise, but not by lithographic process, whether or not wholly or partly covered with metal or its solutions (except as hereinafter provided) or with gelatin or flock, or embossed or printed, cloth-lined or reenforced paper, parchment papers, and grease-proof and imitation parchment papers which have been supercalendered and rendered transparent, or partially so, by whatever name known; all other grease-proof and imitation parchment papers, not specially provided for in this section, by whatever name known; bags, envelopes, printed matter other than lithographic, and all other articles composed wholly or in chief value of any of the foregoing papers, not specially provided for in this section, and all boxes of paper or wood covered with any of the foregoing paper, 35 per cent ad valorem; albuminized or sensitized paper or paper otherwise surface-coated for photographic purposes, plain basic papers for albuminizing, sensitizing, baryta coating, or for photographic or solar printing processes, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 3, strike out all after the word "papers" and down to and including the word "printed," in line 10, and insert the words "including wrapping paper, with coated surface or surfaces, or with the surface wholly or partly covered or decorated with a design, fancy effect, pattern, or character, whether produced in the pulp or otherwise; all of the foregoing not specially provided for, whether or not wholly or partly covered with metal or its solution or with gelatin or flock or embossed or printed except by lithographic process."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 20, amend by inserting after the first word "paper," at the beginning of the line, the words "papier mâché."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 11, after the word "paper," strike out the words "parchment papers."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter addressed to me by the Glen Mills Paper Co. protesting against the reduction of the duty upon what is known as vegetable parchment paper. I move to strike out the two words. If I should be successful, that I may keep the record straight, I would like to give notice that I shall move to substitute for the duty on parchment paper the rates that we find in the present law. Mr. Chairman, in my time, I ask to have this letter read.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, April 21, 1913.

Hon. T. S. BUTLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We write you in regard to the proposed change of duty on vegetable parchment paper.

The rate in force at the present time is 2 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem. The proposed change (H. R. 10 of Apr. 7, 1913, p. 81, par. 336) by the House committee is 35 per cent ad valorem duty on parchment paper, including it with a number of other papers.

This change would be a most disastrous one, because it would not only reduce the rate to a point which would enable German competition to practically undersell the entire market in this country, but it would further continue this paper in a class with a larger number of other papers, and for this reason and also by making the duty ad valorem, it would render frauds by undervaluation and misdescription as prevalent as they were in prior years, and almost impossible of detection.

Ad valorem duties are generally conceded to be a fruitful source of fraud. Misdescription and undervaluation are almost impossible to follow up, and it would be but a very short time before the American manufacturers of this paper would be driven out by the Germans.

Practically the only foreign country making this paper is Germany, and none of the German paper has been imported since 1909.

Parchment paper of domestic manufacture formerly sold in this country at 12 cents per pound, and its price has continuously declined until it is now 7½ cents per pound, and this has been entirely under stress of domestic competition. In the meantime, the efficiency of labor has declined, and the wages have been increased so that the economies and the better methods of manufacture have been partly offset by the inefficiency and high cost of labor.

We respectfully request you to use all possible means—

(1) To prevent the inclusion of vegetable parchment paper in a class along with other papers.

(2) To prevent any change in the existing specific duty.

(3) In the event of change, to prevent it being placed on an ad valorem basis.

The present duty is 2 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem. We think that if it were necessary to make any reduction that the reduction would be sufficient if the 10 per cent ad valorem were stricken out.

Thanking you very much for your favor, we are,

Truly, yours,

THE GLEN MILLS PAPER CO.,
Per J. M. DOLAN.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the letter has been read and the views of my constituents will appear in the RECORD. I now await the operation of the committee upon the request of my constituents. I have endeavored to comply with their request. They will not hold me responsible for the failure, but they will charge it properly to the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, in the letter just read, if I understood correctly, the writer stated that 10 per cent ad valorem might be dropped and the specific rate continued. The present rate upon parchment paper, reduced to an equivalent ad valorem, is 47 per cent. Deducting 10 per cent would leave an equivalent ad valorem of 37 per cent. The rate we have fixed at 35 per cent, so that there is not a great difference between what the gentleman says might be done with safety and what we have done.

Mr. BUTLER. The principal protest is against the ad valorem duty. My constituents want a specific duty. I am not criticizing the gentleman because he does not accept the amendment. The gentleman will recall that while the principal protest is against the specific duty, it is also against the reduction which the gentleman's committee has made.

Mr. HAMMOND. The reduction is only about 2 per cent from what the gentleman would be content with if it was a specific duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 25, after the words "ad valorem," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words "parchment paper, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. MOORE. This is merely reenforcing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], and slightly reduces the Payne rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 11, after the words "reenforced paper," insert the words "parchment and vellum."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is to encourage Americans to manufacture parchment and vellum. It all comes in from foreign countries now, and it could be made here if there were a duty upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 22, after the word "purposes" insert "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in order to make a compensatory duty between paper to be prepared for photographic process and the actual paper ready for the photographer's use. It seems that there should be a distinction between the two, as testified to by some constituents of mine. The following message I received to-day:

Rate on sensitized or surface-coated photo paper should be higher than on plain. It is a luxury; benefits Eastman only.

We have heard a great deal about hitting at the trust, and at the request of these constituents of mine I beg to solicit the assistance of the Democrats in an endeavor to hit the trust in one particular. This seems to be a very good means of giving the trust just a little bit of a knock, or, rather, letting one of them have a little of the kind of treatment which it has been agreed we ought to give to them.

Further, I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota in charge of this section if there should not be a compensatory duty between these two kinds of paper. I also wish to submit a brief that has been sent to me that was prepared for submission to the House Committee on Ways and Means during their sessions last winter, but which was not submitted, in view of the fact that a general appearance was put in on behalf of the paper manufacturers in my section rather than for this special kind of paper. I would ask the Clerk to read this in my time. May I ask the indulgence of the gentleman from Minnesota, also, that he answer the question which I have asked?

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, B. D. Rising Paper Co., are manufacturers of paper at Housatonic, Berkshire County, Mass. We join with other manufacturers in the request that there be no radical change in the classification of papers as it appears in the tariff act of August 5, 1909. Manufacturers and importers have become familiar with the classification, and so have the inspectors and appraisers. Any change would necessitate much labor and argument and the loss of valuable time in determining the duty on different kinds of paper under a new classification. We are particularly interested in—

"PAR. 411. Plain basic papers for albuminizing, sensitizing, baryta coating, or for photographic or solar printing processes, 3 cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem."

Very little of this kind of paper was made in this country previous to the enactment of the tariff of 1897, and even afterwards, as that act imperfectly described the paper; large quantities were brought in as "printing paper." This undervaluation was made impossible by the act of 1909, and under the protection thus afforded a large business has been developed, affording employment to many people.

Any reduction in the duty on this paper will result in the business going entirely to foreign mills, because they are able to produce the goods much cheaper than in this country. The supply of raw material for the manufacture of blue-print and photographic papers in this country is not sufficient, and very large quantities are imported from Europe. American manufacturers must pay more for these materials than the foreign manufacturers or they can not obtain them. When they have done so and have paid freight and other charges to bring the materials to their mills, and added the high labor rates prevailing here, the cost of the finished product must be greater than if manufactured abroad.

That the present duty on these papers is none too high is further shown by the fact that importations are increasing rapidly, as will be seen by the attached statement from the records of the Treasury Department:

	Pounds.
Plain basic photographic paper imported year 1907	2,218,496
Plain basic photographic paper imported year 1911	3,550,510

Note the increase of 60 per cent in four years.

All photographic paper imported year ending June 30, 1907	$593,040.64
All photographic paper imported year ending June 30, 1910	761,940.00
All photographic paper imported year ending June 30, 1911	1,147,039.00

Note the steady increase and that the value of paper imported in the year ending June 30, 1911, is nearly double that for the year ending June 30, 1907.

There is no reason why all this paper should not be made in this country except that the foreign manufacturers have the advantage of lower costs of labor and material.

It should further be noted that photographic paper, either plain or coated, is not one of the necessaries of life, but is sold at an enormous profit by one of the biggest and worst trusts in the country.

Any reduction in duty will benefit nobody but the manufacturers of camera supplies, who send large sums of money out of this country, and cause a loss of employment, which will greatly injure the wage earner.

B. D. RISING PAPER CO.,
CHAS. MCKENNON, Treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, when the question was asked by the gentleman from Connecticut a few moments ago, whether or not section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity is repealed by this act, no one seemed to be able to give the information. The reciprocity act that was heretofore passed by this House and enacted into law did not conform with any of the principles that are advocated by the Republican Party, in that it provided for the importation of the products of another country into this country without duty, whereas that country charged us a duty when we shipped our products into that country. That is not a good business policy. I do not think that conforms to the best interests of America, and I think that the people of this country and the manufacturers of paper are entitled to know whether or not, by the enactment of this into law, that particular section will or will not be repealed. It is reported by the Tariff Board that it costs $3.50 a ton more to manufacture paper in this country than it does in Canada. But there is nobody who need say that Canada would put an import duty upon the products that we ship into that country, providing they were not opposed to the import or to our export. According to the information I have, we have 40,000,000,000 feet of fir spruce and other paper timber in this country, sufficient to supply the need for all time, if it is properly conserved, for the manufacture of paper. One of the purposes for the enactment of the Canadian reciprocity treaty and for this particular provision was, according to Democratic principles, that we would get our product cheaper, and I leave it to the House or any Member here to say whether or not that condition has come about, and I stand with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND] to repeal that act in toto from top to bottom, and I hope before this Congress adjourns that that will be done. The reciprocity treaty with Canada was rejected by that country, and belittled us in the eyes of the world. The Republican Party heard from the American farmers in the election of 1912 because of having promulgated reciprocity with Canada, and by the passage of this act promulgating free trade and one-sided reciprocity with the world the Democratic Party will hear from the people in 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. J. M. C. SMITH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

333. Pictures, calendars, cards, labels, flaps, cigar bands, placards, and other articles composed wholly or in chief value of paper lithographically printed in whole or in part from stone, metal, or material other than gelatin (except boxes, views of American scenery or objects, and music, and illustrations when forming part of a periodical or newspaper, or of bound or unbound books, accompanying the same, not specially provided for in this section) shall pay duty at the following rates: Labels, flaps, and cigar bands, if printed entirely in bronze printing, 15 per cent ad valorem; if printed otherwise than entirely in bronze printing, but not printed in whole or in part in metal leaf, 25 per cent ad valorem; if printed in whole or in part in metal leaf, 30 per cent ad valorem; booklets, books of paper or other material for children's use, not exceeding in weight 24 ounces each, fashion magazines or periodicals, printed in whole or in part by lithographic process, or decorated by hand, booklets, decorated in whole or in part by hand or by spraying, whether or not lithographed, 12 per cent ad valorem; decalcomanias in ceramic colors, whether or not backed with metal leaf, and all other decalcomanias, except toy decalcomanias, 20 per cent ad valorem; pictures, calendars, cards, placards, and all other articles than those hereinbefore specifically provided for in this paragraph, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, line 4, strike out the words "other than gelatin," and, after the word "or," insert the word "other."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, line 25, after the words "ad valorem," strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That articles composed wholly or in chief value of paper printed by the photogelatin process and not specially provided for in this act shall be dutiable at 3 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is lower than the Payne rate and is simply intended to protect the American manufacturers against foreign competition.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

334. Writing, letter, note, handmade paper and paper commercially known as handmade paper and machine handmade paper, japan paper and imitation japan paper by whatever name known, and ledger, bond, record, tablet, typewriter, manifold, and onionskin and imitation onionskin papers calendered or uncalendered, whether or not any such paper is ruled, bordered, embossed, printed, lined, or decorated in any manner, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, line 8, after the word "manner," strike out "25 per cent" and insert "35 per cent."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the paper industry is one of the largest industries in western Massachusetts, and the mills feel that the rates proposed in the Underwood bill are very detrimental to their interests. They consider that the lowest rate in this section should not be under 40 per cent. This rate of 35 per cent which I have proposed is a reduction from the existing rate, as I understand it, and it seems to me that it is not more than a fair return on the industry that it represents. You will note by the brief filed by the Paper Makers' Association that the comparative rate of wages in this country and in Germany is as follows: The skilled labor in Germany receives from 8 to 16 cents per hour and in America from 25 to 50 cents per hour. Unskilled labor in Germany receives from 6 to 11 cents and in America from 13 to 25 cents per hour.

Mr. AUSTIN. What about the length of hours they work?

Mr. TREADWAY. Both the skilled and unskilled laborers work shorter hours in America than they do in Germany. This is very strong proof that labor will obtain a large share of any benefit of a tariff act, and if the tariff is reduced on these papers labor must eventually give up a portion of its gain. We have been over this subject with our friends on the other side so frequently that I do not care at this time to transgress upon the time of the House. We make this appeal in behalf of the men employed in the paper mills of western Massachusetts, not in behalf of the manufacturers.

The competition between the paper mills there is such that the profits have been extremely low, and I could furnish, if you desired it, statistics corroborating these statements. It seems to me that we ought to consider the welfare of the employees in these great mills and not compel them to accept a lower scale of wages in competition with foreign labor.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have but a moment. I do not intend to go into any lengthy discussion, as I realize it is useless, the Democratic caucus having settled in advance and without consideration of the merits of the case what action is to be taken upon every amendment offered in behalf of the great industries of my State.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], I think, started to interrupt.

Mr. AUSTIN. I was simply going to ask the gentleman not to be discouraged. This side has succeeded in getting so many amendments on the bill that if you talk a little longer you may get another.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will appreciate your cooperation in behalf of the men I am speaking for.

Mr. AUSTIN. You will get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

335. Paper envelopes not specially provided for in this section, folded or flat, bordered, embossed, printed, tinted, decorated, or lined, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "not specially provided for in this section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that this makes a very severe reduction in fancy envelopes. I am not very well informed in reference to the business. Embossed, printed, tinted, decorated, or lined envelopes are reduced from 25 to 15 per cent, the same as plain envelopes.

Mr. HAMMOND. The average rate upon envelopes, I think, is 27 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANN. Plain envelopes now come in, I think, at 20 per cent, and fancy envelopes at——

Mr. HAMMOND. Thirty, is it not?

Mr. MANN. Thirty-five per cent. Of course, whatever the average is does not make any difference as to my inquiry of whether there ought to be little higher rate, either as a protective or a revenue measure, on fancy envelopes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will say to the gentleman that he has undoubtedly noticed an apparent inconsistency in the rate upon writing paper and the rate upon envelopes. That was suggested to the committee, and it was proposed at one time to increase the rate upon envelopes. We have not done so, however. The difference in rates has been carried for a number of years, and is in the present law. Believing the ad valorem would take care of the different values of the envelopes, we did not feel like going over 15 per cent. We desire to make a reduction, and if we did not go below 20 per cent, there would be no reduction on plain envelopes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, line 10, after the word "flat," insert the word "plain."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, line 9, strike out paragraph 335 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"335. Paper envelopes not specially provided for in this section, folded or flat, if plain, 20 per cent ad valorem; if bordered, embossed, printed, tinted, decorated, or lined, 35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MOORE. This restores the Payne rate, and the reason for it is this, that the duty fixed upon envelopes is here fixed at 15 per cent while the duty on the paper from which the envelopes are made is fixed at 25 per cent. These figures would make it almost impossible for the manufacturer of envelopes to successfully compete with the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. PAYNE. I am afraid the gentleman does not understand the theory. They put them all at the low rate of duty in order that it may benefit the impecunious consumer of the United States. The gentleman does not understand the theory.

Mr. MOORE. Evidently I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

337. Books of all kinds, bound or unbound, including blank books, slate books and pamphlets, engravings, photographs, etchings, maps, charts, music in books or sheets, and printed matter, all the foregoing and not specially provided for in this section, 15 per cent ad valorem. Views of any landscape, scene, building, place, or locality in the United States, on cardboard or paper, not thinner than eight one-thousandths of 1 inch, by whatever process printed or produced, including those wholly or in part produced by either lithographic or photogelatin process (except show cards), occupying 35 square inches or less of surface per view, bound or unbound, or in any other form, 45 per cent ad valorem; thinner than eight one-thousandths of 1 inch, $2 per thousand.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 83, line 22, after the word "section," strike out "15 per cent ad valorem" and insert in lieu thereof "25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if this paragraph, referring to "books of all kinds," will also include Bibles, which have been transferred to the free list?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would if they were not on the free list.

Mr. MOORE. Then Bibles are to be distinguished from "books of all kinds" as referred to in this paragraph?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. The committee is of the opinion that there is one Book in all the world that ought not to be taxed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE. I am glad the committee is of that mind, for this is the first time they have displayed any religious feeling since this discussion began. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, not desiring to delay the committee further, I wish to say that the printers' and pressmen's and binders' unions, and union men generally, are opposed to this transfer of books to the free list. They are also opposed to the reduction of duty from 25 per cent to 15 per cent. I shall extend in the RECORD some things they have to say on that subject. I think this paragraph is decidedly against the interests of union labor, of which we have so many champions on the other side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me a question right there?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he objected to the passage of this schedule?

Mr. MOORE. I object to the passage of the schedule; yes. I object also to the passage of the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is it because the gentleman thinks that the work on the books—the work of the printers and all—will be done on the other side, and that that work will be given to labor of that class on the other side?

Mr. MOORE. I say that if we had the printing done on the other side, and employed the pressmen on the other side, and employed the bookbinders on the other side, and all the other labor of diversified character entering into the making of books of all kinds, whether Bibles or not, included in this paragraph, it would transfer the industry to the other side of the water, and we would have to buy what they send to us. I think it would be far better to have this work done in the United States, rather than have it sent over to Canada or Europe or Germany or England and have their people make them. I think it would be better, if we had money to spend, to spend among our own people, in our own country, and I think that it would be better, even in the case of Bibles, for which there is a demand, and in which, for the first time, there seems to be an interest on the Democratic side. I think it would be a splendid thing for our people to buy them from American publishers. The truth is that Bibles are being distributed all over the world, and they are being printed in the United States, and the printing and circulation of the Bible gives our people employment and helps to civilize the nations of the world, and that civilization brings money to the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we are going to have so much money in the near future under the operation of this bill that we shall not be able to spend it all at home, and here is a provision under which we may be able to spend some of it abroad. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE. I know my friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] is speaking satirically in this instance, although he is right in his opposition to the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask if he knows why they propose to place Bibles on the free list in this bill?

Mr. MOORE. No.

Mr. MANN. It is probably because they know the people throughout the country will have so much spare time on their hands, not having anything else to do, that they will have ample leisure in which to read the Bible, and they think they ought to be furnished with it cheaply. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. On the contrary, I think the people have been enduring so much suffering on account of the operations of the Payne law in the last four years that they should be permitted to get comfort from reading the Bible, and to that end they should be permitted to buy it cheaply. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. They will have to do something more than merely read the Bible if they want to make a living.

Mr. MOORE. The communications I referred to were as follows:

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES COUNCIL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:

Whereas it has been brought to the attention of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Philadelphia that the Presbyterian Publication Committee is advocating the removal of the present duty on Bibles of foreign manufacture and the placing of religious publications of all kinds on the free list; and

Whereas the universally accepted theory of tariff protection comprehends the equalizing of opportunities for American and foreign labor; and

Whereas there has been placed before committees of the Congress indisputable evidence that the printing industry of the United States stands in great need of additional protective legislation in order to successfully compete with foreign markets: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Allied Printing Trades Council of Philadelphia, in regular meeting assembled on Friday evening, February 21, 1913, does hereby earnestly protest against any reduction of the present import duties on printed matter; and be it further

Resolved, That Members of the Congress be fervently petitioned to promote legislation designed to levy such additional duties on imports of printed matter as they, from their investigations, shall find to be just and proper.

ALLIED PRINTING AND BOOKBINDING TRADES ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
New York.

The following was adopted at a meeting of the representatives of the Allied Printing and Bookbinding Trades Association of America at the National Hotel, Washington, D. C., April 20, 1913:

"Resolved, That we earnestly petition the United States Senate to grant public hearing to American citizens on the revised and amended tariff bill.

"As members of trades who are threatened with loss of employment by reduction of Schedule M, we ask that the United States Senate grant to us the opportunity of proving that our industry is in great danger if the revised bill should become a law.

"We ask this privilege as American citizens to lay before your body evidence which will disclose and prove to you the dangers of this legislation to the American workman."

PHILADELPHIA PRINTED BOOK BINDERS' UNION,
Philadelphia, February 17, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Find inclosed copy of a resolution adopted by our organization, which is self-explanatory. We are seeking your aid in this matter, which means so much to our craft, not only in Philadelphia but throughout the country.

Our committee will be pleased to call upon you while in Philadelphia to explain any feature that you should want explained.

Thanking you for any aid that you may extend to us in this matter, I am,

Yours, sincerely, J. HOWARD BERRY, Sr.

P. S.—Find inclosed copy of our agreement and scale of wages that we have with our employers, showing our reliability.

B.

Whereas it has been brought to our attention that the Presbyterian Publication Committee appeared before your honorable body, requesting that all religious publications be placed upon the free list, also asking that the 25 per cent duty on Bibles be taken off; and

Whereas we, members of Local No. 2, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, which have a membership of over 15,000 mechanics, both male and female, throughout the United States who are employed in making these Bibles and religious books, and who are a part of this great constituency, endeavoring to build up our industries by having uniform laws maintained, where the journeymen and apprentices can earn living wages and support their families properly; and

Whereas at the present time here in Philadelphia the largest Bible publication house in America, employing hundreds of skilled mechanics, and having done abroad thousands of dollars' worth of Bibles and religious publications each year under our existing tariff laws, by having Bibles and all religious publications upon the free list, as advocated by the Presbyterian committee, would mean throwing out of work thousands of employees throughout the United States and closing down our workshops, for if American mechanics can not compete with the foreign labor under our present tariff laws it would mean the elimination, so far as the American workmen are concerned, of our present book industry if all books were placed upon the free list; and

Whereas at the present time figures taken from statistics showing the difference between the American and foreign paid labor and hours' work per day, with almost the elimination of child labor, in America, but not in force in some of those foreign competitive countries which American labor must compete against, also in foreign countries operating our American-manufactured labor-saving machines, same as are operated in our country:

Countries.	Hours per day.	Maximum wages per week.
Germany (work home at nights)	9	$6.00
France (work home at nights)	9	7.00
England (child labor)	9	12.00
Belgium (sweatshop system)	[1]10	6.00
Russia (sweatshop system)	[1]10	5.00
Austria (sweatshop system)	[1]10	5.00
Italy (sweatshop system)	[1]10	4.50
Spain (sweatshop system)	[1]10	4.50

[1] Or more.

Also in some of these countries the mechanics' families are working on book covers during the day while the fathers and brothers are in the binderies. In Belgium, Russia, Austria, Italy, and Spain children are employed in these workshops 10 and 12 years old, while in the United States our child-labor laws in most States prohibit girls and boys from working in factories under certain ages, which, at an average, is four to six years above those in foreign countries. These are the conditions confronting the American mechanics and workmen, who receive most universally the eight-hour day and wages ranging, in the book industry, from $18 to $22 per week, along with our great cost of living here in America: And be it

Resolved, That Local No. 2, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, do hereby unanimously protest against any such reduction, knowing the deplorable calamity it would cause, not only to the bookbinding industry but throughout the printing trades; and be it further

Resolved, That Local No. 2, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, recommend an increase on the present tariff on Bibles and religious books, also all books bound in foreign countries, printed sheets flat or folded, books partly bound, covers for books, either leather or cloth covers for books, with or without any labor upon the same, pieces of leather or any other materials, stamped or printed, for books or bookcases, should have sufficient duties added to equalize the difference between American and foreign-paid labor; and be it further

Resolved, That Local No. 2, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, wish to present the deplorable conditions of their industry caused by the unjust discrimination of our import laws, not only upon Bibles and religious books, but our fine bindings that have left our shores to be done in foreign binderies, which it has forced in America the closing of our fine binderies and forcing our mechanics into other fields, after spending their lives in becoming masters of their respective trades; and be it further

Resolved, That we ask for no advantage over our foreign competitor, but place the tariff high enough that it will equalize the difference between paid labor in European countries and the United States, and if the foreign countries can produce a superior and cheaper book after all conditions are equal, then they should have the trade on supremacy.

[SEAL.] A. NORMAN HANNINGS, President.
WILLIAM J. LEWIS, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is exercised over the rest of this paragraph. I remember four years ago there were brought before us barrels of post-card pictures of scenery in this country "made in Germany." It seemed to be one of the chief occupations of people in Germany, and it was impossible to find any such views of American scenery made in the United States. I recall that a contract was made in my own town for the production of such pictures in Germany. We put the duty up so there was a 75 per cent rate on those things, and thereby we stopped that German business. As a result the retailers and the public here are now getting them for about the same price as they formerly paid for the foreign-made pictures of our home scenery, and our people do the work.

Pictures of that character are used on various other things besides post cards. They are used in many instances on the calendars which newspapers sell to the newsboys once a year, on New Year's Day, when the boys come around and tax us a quarter or half a dollar apiece for calendars. There is no excuse for allowing the newspapers to procure these calendars more cheaply. Of course there is no connection between the newspapers getting these a little cheaper under this change in the tariff and a desire on the part of Democracy to "snuggle up" closer to the press. Perish any thought of that kind! And still it is difficult to see what other motive there was on the part of the committee in making such a severe cut, unless they prefer to see the legend on American landscapes, "Printed in Germany." That may be a dear thought to them, although it causes the cheek of our worthy President to blush with shame every time he sees it. Perhaps they want to shame him. I do not know but they want to get even with him for changing the bill from what it was when the Ways and Means Committee had it. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Possibly it may be chagrin because the pie counter has been kept from so many and they want something to bring him to a realizing sense of their gnawing hunger. But, Mr. Chairman, I will not interfere with the harmony of the bill by even offering an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

339. All boxes made wholly or in chief value of paper or papier-mâché, if covered with surface-coated paper, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 84, strike out paragraph 339.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

340. Playing cards, 60 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 14, after the word "cards," strike out "60" and insert in lieu thereof "50."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the committee has treated playing cards as a luxury. They have put the rate so high that it is impossible for the poor man to obtain a pack of cards to while away a winter evening. Having information that cards are used by the other side who are largely in the majority, and that there will be ample time after the bill goes into effect for them to spend their time as pleasantly as possible, I have moved to reduce the rate.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman use playing cards himself?

Mr. MOORE. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. If he did he would know that the cost of cards does not cut much ice—at the end of the game. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I suppose the gentleman will follow up this amendment when we come to the paragraph relating to poker chips, making the blue chips a luxury and the white ones a necessity. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. He would if he knew the difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. I knew some gentlemen on the other side would give me some expert information. [Laughter.] If anybody knows anything about cards, the gentlemen on the other side of the House do. Now, in the interest of the "downtrodden and the poor" I have offered this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Schedule N—Sundries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

343. Braids, featherstitched braids, fringes, gimps, gorings, all the foregoing of whatever material composed, and articles made wholly or in chief value of any of the foregoing not specially provided for in this section, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 85, line 1, strike out the letters "ed" in "featherstitched," so that it will read "featherstitch."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

344. Braids, plaits, laces, and willow sheets or squares, composed wholly or in chief value of straw, chip, grass, palm leaf, willow, osier, rattan, real horsehair, cuba bark, ramie, or manila hemp, suitable for making or ornamenting hats, bonnets, or hoods, not bleached, dyed, colored, or stained, 15 per cent ad valorem; if bleached, dyed, colored, or stained, 20 per cent ad valorem; hats, bonnets, and hoods composed wholly or in chief value of straw, chip, grass, palm leaf, willow, osier, rattan, cuba bark, ramie, or manila hemp, whether wholly or partly manufactured, but not blocked or trimmed, 25 per cent ad valorem; if blocked or trimmed, 40 per cent ad valorem. But the terms "grass" and "straw" shall be understood to mean these substances in their natural form and structure, and not the separated fiber thereof.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 85, line 16, at the end of the line insert the words "and in chief value of such materials."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

345. Brooms, 15 per cent ad valorem; brushes and feather dusters of all kinds, and hair pencils in quills or otherwise, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert the following in lieu thereof:
"345. Brooms, made of broom corn, straw, wooden fibers, or twigs, 15 per cent ad valorem; brushes and feather dusters of all kinds, and hair pencils in quills or otherwise, 35 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

348. Buttons or parts of buttons and button molds or blanks, finished or unfinished, not specially provided for in this section, and all collar or cuff buttons and studs composed wholly of bone, mother-of-pearl, or ivory, 40 per cent at valorem.

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

Insert as a new paragraph:
"348½. Bituminous coal and shale, 40 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel; coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 15 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel: Provided, That the rate of 15 cents per ton herein designated for 'coal slack or culm' shall be held to apply to importations of coal slack or culm produced and screened in the ordinary way, as such, and so shipped from the mine; coke, 20 per cent ad valorem; compositions used for fuel in which coal or coal dust is the component material of chief value, whether in briquettes or other form, 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided further, That on all coal imported into the United States, which is afterwards used for fuel on board vessels propelled by steam and engaged in trade with foreign countries, or in trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States, and which are registered under the laws of the United States, a drawback shall be allowed equal to the duty imposed by law upon such coal, and shall be paid under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of Members of the House, and particularly of Democratic Members, to the fact that at no time in the history of this Government, except during the anthracite strike of 1903, when all coal was admitted to this country by law free of duty for one year, which was a measure of emergency and expediency, has bituminous coal ever been placed upon the free list.

Recognizing that there is a popular demand for revising the tariff downward, it will be noted that I have fixed the duty on bituminous coal at 40 cents per ton, on coal slack or culm at 15 cents per ton, and on coke at 20 per cent ad valorem. The duties provided in the present law are 45 cents per ton on bituminous coal, 15 cents per ton on coal slack or culm, and 20 per cent ad valorem on coke. I do not know whether it will have any weight or influence with the distinguished gentlemen on the other side of the aisle or not, but permit me to inform you that the amount of duty on bituminous coal named in the proposed amendment is the same as that provided in the Wilson-Gorman law. While I think the present duties on bituminous coal, coal slack, culm, and coke are none too high to adequately protect our great and growing bituminous-coal and coking industries and the many thousands of hard-working miners and their families, who are dependent upon these industries for their livelihood and daily bread, yet I have proposed to lower the duties provided by existing law to the figures named in the amendment which I have offered.

The great bituminous-coal and lignite producing States of this Union are Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Virginia, Colorado, Wyoming, Washington, and Montana.

The Nation's annual production of bituminous coal and lignite is about 406,000,000 tons, the value of which, in round numbers, is $450,000,000, and in which production 555,000 men are engaged. A higher wage scale and a higher production cost prevail in this country than in any other country in the world. In British Columbia and Vancouver wages are from 30 to 50 per cent lower than in this country; in Nova Scotia wages are from 20 to 25 per cent lower than here; and the average wages paid to coal miners in this country are more than double those paid in England, while the hours of labor are much shorter.

I for one am unwilling to and will never vote to reduce the wages, to lower the standard of living, or increase the hours of labor of our American miners to those or that, as the case may be, of foreign countries. While the wages of coal miners in this country and in the State of West Virginia, which I have the honor to humbly represent, exceed those of any other section of the universe, I earnestly desire our bituminous coal and coking industries to be made and kept so prosperous that coal miners will be, as they should be, the best paid laborers for the least number of hours work of any of our industries. And why not? The coal miner is certainly a laborer worthy of his hire. No employment is more hazardous or fraught with more danger, no work more exacting and uncomfortable, and no occupation more conducive to physical infirmity and loss of health and limb than his. Yet our Democratic friends would place bituminous coal and coke on the free list and place in jeopardy the industries in which he is engaged.

Since I have been here I have heard it asserted that with coal on the free list there would be no danger to our bituminous coal and coking industries from abroad; that with the exception of Canadian coals, no other coals can be brought into competition with our coals. Let me remind you in this connection that during the great anthracite strike when all coals were placed upon the free list, coal was imported from England as well as from Canada, and that the prices of coal in this country fell to such an extent that the bottom virtually dropped out of the domestic market. While this country exports very little bituminous coal other than to Canada, the importation of coal from Canada is increasing, particularly from Nova Scotia, British Columbia, and Alberta. Canada imposes a duty of 45 cents per ton on all bituminous coal and lignite imported from this country, yet the gentlemen on the other side would open, without any reciprocal arrangement, our markets free of duty to Canadian coals. The coals of British Columbia and Alberta directly compete with the coals and lignite of Montana, Washington, and Wyoming, and indirectly compete with those of Utah, Alaska, and North Dakota, while Nova Scotia coals compete with the coals of our eastern coal-producing States, and particularly with the coals of West Virginia.

A reciprocal arrangement with Canada might be of benefit to the coal operators of western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, and perhaps northern West Virginia, because a considerable quantity of coal is shipped from the United States into Ontario and that section of Canada between Montreal and Winnipeg.

Canada has no coal tributary to that area and is largely dependent upon coals produced in the United States for the adequate supply of that area. The distance to said section is too great and the cost of transportation too high for successful competition by the coals of Nova Scotia. An investigation will disclose, however, that no coals produced in this country can pay the Canadian duty and successfully compete with the coals of Nova Scotia in the St. Lawrence market.

While my remarks so far have more particularly related to the country at large, I desire to say a few words, before the expiration of my limited time, as to the probable effect of free bituminous coal on the southern part of West Virginia and the district I represent.

The gentlemen on the Democratic side seem to have some unsatisfying grudge against the great State of West Virginia, as would appear from the duties that they have agreed upon in the Underwood bill. To the New England manufacturers they have said: "We have partly compensated you for excessively lowering the duties on your manufactured products in this bill by giving you free raw wool, free coal, free lumber, cheap raw cotton," and so forth, but no compensation do they offer or give to the State of West Virginia and her people. I want to call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side to the fact that nearly everything West Virginia produces has either been placed on the free list or the duties thereon lowered to such a great extent that her industries will be either completely destroyed or seriously crippled. In my humble opinion West Virginia will be more severly hit and injured by the provisions of this bill than any other State in the Union. They propose to put coal, wool, and lumber on the free list and to reduce far below the protective principle duties on iron, steel and tin plate, glass and pottery, cattle, sheep, wheat and other farm products, besides other things which West Virginia and her people largely produce and are vitally interested in.

West Virginia has 826 coal mines and 36 coking plants, employing over 73,000 people, with an annual production value of about $60,000,000, upon which nearly one-third of the people of West Virginia are dependent and directly sustained; she has 62 glass and pottery plants, employing over 11,000 people, with an annual production value of $11,000,000; she has 104 lumber plants, employing 7,700 people, with an annual production value of exceeding $18,000,000; she has 600,000 cattle and 900,000 sheep, and the value of her stock and farm products exceeds $71,000,000. The Democratic Members of Congress now propose to take away from her, by admitting bituminous coal free of duty, her New England coal market and to give the same unconditionally to Nova Scotia.

While the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania are very rich in bituminous coal, yet West Virginia contains more than both of them, with that of Virginia thrown in for good measure. In southern West Virginia there are three great bituminous coal fields, namely, the New River, the Kanawha, and the Pocahontas fields, producing the highest grade of bituminous and semibituminous coals produced in the United States. West Virginia ranks second in the bituminous coal producing States, and her annual production is about one-sixth of that of the entire Union. The maintenance of West Virginia's coal production is largely dependent upon her retention of the New England market, in which market over one-third of the entire coal production of the Pocahontas and New River fields is consumed. Nova Scotia is now contending vigorously for that market. Her mines are in their youthful period, and although her coals are not as excellent as West Virginia coals, the latter's coals can not successfully compete in New England against Nova Scotian and other foreign coals coming into this country free of duty. In addition to the water haul on her coals to New England markets, West Virginia has to pay an overland haul of about one-third of 1 cent per ton per mile, while Nova Scotia has very little overland haul to pay on her coals.

From the best figures obtainable it costs Nova Scotia only about 55 cents per ton to transport her coals to Boston, while it costs West Virginia about $2.10 per ton to transport her coals to the same market. While in heating units the New River and Pocahontas coals of West Virginia have an advantage of about 17 per cent over the coals of Nova Scotia, yet this advantage will be quickly overcome by Nova Scotian coals in lower selling prices if Nova Scotia is not required to pay any import duty thereon. Canada evidently does not think that there is any great disparity in the value of the coals of West Virginia and Nova Scotia, because she burns the coals of Nova Scotia in preference when she can get them as cheaply as she can the coals of West Virginia.

I would like to see West Virginia lessen the hours and increase the wages of her miners. If West Virginia is to be deprived of the New England market for her coals, I am very much afraid that such deprivation will result in a reduction in wages of the miners of West Virginia, as well as in the number of days work.

When all of the foregoing matters are taken into consideration it seems to me, although I can not hope for or expect it from the gentlemen on the other side, that this amendment should receive serious consideration and should be adopted. I again remind Members of the House that the duty on bituminous coal provided in this amendment is less than the duty imposed upon bituminous coal by Canada, and that to put bituminous coal, coal slack or culm and the products thereof, and coke on the free list means the annual loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars in revenue, besides leaving the great bituminous coal and lignite industries, and the many thousands engaged therein, without any protection whatever.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AVIS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How does the duty in the proposed amendment compare with the present rate?

Mr. AVIS. It is 5 cents a ton less.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, so far as 99 per cent of the people of the United States are concerned, so far as nearly that much of our territory is concerned, it makes little difference whatever whether bituminous coal has a duty upon it or is free, for there are but very few regions in our country to which bituminous coal can under present conditions be profitably shipped from abroad. By placing coal on the free list we lose near half a million of revenue and we do not make coal cheaper for any man under the flag. Our good friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] suggested the other day that it was a self-denial upon his part, coming from a great coal region, to stand for free coal. He knows, of course, as we all know, that it does not make a particle of difference so far as Alabama is concerned whether coal is on the free list or carries a duty. No foreign bituminous coal can reach Alabama or her markets. Of our total importations of bituminous coal last year—1,761,000 tons—724,000 tons, or nearly half, came into Montana, Idaho, and Washington. It so happens that the State of Wyoming ships nearly a third of its coal production northward, and nearly that amount of the coal output of our State will be lost to American miners and mine owners by the placing of coal on the free list, and not a single, solitary small American consumer will, in my opinion, receive coal a particle cheaper after we have lost the revenue and our miners have lost their employment and our mines their markets. We had an illustration of that one year when we provided for a rebate of the duty.

At that time there was one mine in our State that had a contract of 750 tons per day with a great smelter. Immediately after that contract expired the Canadian coal mines secured that contract by reducing the price, not 65 cents, the tariff rate, but 10 cents a ton. The Canadian gains our market not by reducing his price the amount of the duty, but by a few cents a ton. So far as the ordinary consumer was concerned in that territory, he did not get coal any cheaper.

I realize that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle will on the stump make much of the fact that they placed coal on the free list. They have given the poor man free coal, they will claim, and yet there is not a man over there who knows anything about it—and I see my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] smiles—who does not know that there will not be a citizen under the flag, unless it be some great mining or manufacturing corporation, that will get a pound of coal a penny cheaper by placing coal on the free list. But you will close the mines or change the direction of at least a third of the tonnage of my State, you will crowd that coal southward in competition with coals mined elsewhere. We are entitled to this market, and we are certainly entitled to it when that coal is sold under the active conditions of competition that now exists; our miners are entitled to the employment; our mines greatly need that market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, everybody who knows anything about the matter knows that the miner of bituminous coal who makes 5 cents a ton makes a lot of money, and most of the miners of bituminous coal make nothing whatever on the coal they mine. To put coal on the free list and destroy this enterprise in the State of West Virginia adds but one more to the difficulties under which the American people will be obliged to labor when this bill becomes a law. If the bill does become a law, it will add four or five hundred million to the imports of this country, to come into competition with the labor of the factories of America. If we add anything like this amount to what is already imported from European nations, where the labor cost is anywhere from 25 to 50 per cent of what it is here, we are bound to displace that much American labor——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will not yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman something about the condition in West Virginia, where they have set aside the civil law there——

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman, my colleague, I know that there is no labor in America that is not protected which is as well paid as the labor employed in the construction of buildings throughout the United States——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). And if we place the factories and the great industries of the United States——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). At the mercy of the European nations, where the people are upon a starvation basis, in competition with the labor of this country we are bound to destroy the opportunity which otherwise would be afforded in this country for them to live as human beings should live.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. I made the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is out of order and has been continuously for 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I see no reason why the people who are employed in this country should be embarrassed by having dumped on the American market the products of European labor. Everyone who gives any consideration to this question must agree that when you bring a dollar's worth of finished products from abroad and place it in competition with the finished products of American labor you are going to reduce the opportunity of the labor of this country by that amount. If 1,000 men could make all the shoes used by American people, and the factory in which those men are engaged was transferred to England or Germany or France, why, as a matter of course, the factory in the United States would have to be closed, and thereby the opportunity for employment of American citizens to make goods for American consumption would be destroyed; and I can not undertsand why the Democrats insist upon placing the people of this country in competition with the people abroad. I have always been educated to believe that the first consideration with American legislators was for the good of the people of the country for whom they were legislating.

Mr. AVIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. AVIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he was aware of the fact that the present strike in West Virginia was not on the ground of wages; that West Virginia pays the highest wages of any State in the Union and pays 25 per cent increase in wages over that of Nova Scotia, and that on an 8-hour day whereas in Nova Scotia they have a 10-hour day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Then what do they strike for?

Mr. MADDEN. When they have a strike under Republican rule they go on strike because they want more wages, and they want more wages because there is more opportunity for employment; but when they go on strike under Democratic rule they go on strike for a job, and they do not care anything about wages. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I, for one, wish to protest against the passage of this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

349. Cork bark, cut into squares, cubes, or quarters, 4 cents per pound; manufactured cork stoppers, over three-fourths of an inch in diameter, measured at the larger end, and manufactured cork disks, wafers, or washers, over three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness, 12 cents per pound; manufactured cork stoppers, three-fourths of an inch or less in diameter, measured at the larger end, and manufactured cork disks, wafers, or washers, three-sixteenths of an inch or less in thickness, 15 cents per pound; cork, artificial, or cork substitutes manufactured from cork waste, or granulated corks, and not otherwise provided for in this section, 3 cents per pound; cork insulation, wholly or in chief value of granulated cork, in slabs, boards, planks, or molded forms, ½ cent per pound; cork paper, 35 per cent ad valorem; manufactures wholly or in chief value of cork or of cork bark, or of artificial cork or bark substitutes, granulated or ground cork, not specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will say, Mr. Chairman, when my colleague and good friend from Chicago gets himself exercised over giving protection to the coal operatives in the State of West Virginia, where, due to the unfairness to the employees there exists a condition which should bring the blush of shame to the face of people of public spirit, that it does seem to me indeed that he needs to be educated.

Mr. AVIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have not the time just now.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] says they pay the coal miners there better than anywhere else in the country, but I deny that. I know something about what coal miners receive for mining coal, and I know they do not only refuse to pay them as other miners are paid in other parts of the country, but they have a condition now, as I am informed, that is a condition of peonage, and probably it will be investigated in the near future and the facts brought out in regard to it.

It is quite a spectacle, indeed, to see our friends on that side of the House getting up for the purpose of protecting corporations that are trying to take the legal, constitutional, and natural rights from their employees and then rob them by selling them their supplies at an abnormally high price. The coal miners of West Virginia are a good deal like the negro's coon trap: It catches them both ways—in the first place, by giving them low wages, and, in the second, making them buy everything they need from them, thereby taking away all the little pittance they do get.

Now, the argument that is given on that side in regard to the protection on coal is that it does not affect the price; it does not make any difference to the consumers of this country, because the tariff does not keep up the price. At the same time, if you take the tariff off the low-priced Canadian coal and that of other places, it is going to put the American coal operators out of the business. That is about as consistent as any argument that is given for a protective traiff. This is, indeed, as I said before, a spectacle showing how much those who are defending the protective-tariff system care for the American workingman. All they care for him is to get out of him what they can for the least possible amount in return for his work. This has been true everywhere. The people that are clamoring the loudest for this high-protective tariff are the ones who are using their influence everywhere and all the time to keep down the price of labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 5 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will not the gentleman make it 10 minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman desires to speak; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] does not know anything more about the provisions of this tariff bill than he does of the wages and strike conditions in West Virginia, he is not competent to vote on the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want to call his attention to the fact, when he speaks of the gentlemen on this side of the House, if he will go back into the history of legislation on this subject, that he will find that ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, who was at one time the vice-presidential nominee of his party, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee when the Wilson-Gorman bill was under consideration and stated that the placing of bituminous coal on the free list would ruin the coal-mining industry in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AVIS. I will not yield now, sir. You would not show me that courtesy, and I can not show it to you. [Applause on the Republican side.]

He, the gentleman from Illinois, speaks of the coal operators. I am not here at this time to discuss strikes between coal operators and miners. I am here to discuss a business proposition, and, in stating that business proposition and in discussing it, I want to emphasize the fact that nearly every miner in the State of West Virginia, or, at least, in my section of the State of West Virginia—and I live in the strike zone—whether he be a Democrat, Socialist, or Republican, favors a protective duty on bituminous coal. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Why, the members of his own party in the mining sections of West Virginia would hardly listen to him if he argued for free bituminous coal. Not only that, I want to emphasize a statement enunciated a moment ago that this strike trouble in West Virginia was not solely over wages. It was largely over two questions. It is true that among the miners doing work other than digging coal there was a strike over the hours of labor. They wanted the reduction of an hour, but the main trouble in that strike was for recognition of the union and for what was known as a check weighman. All the other elements that entered into the strike were practically agreed upon, and it would have been settled a year ago but for the two principal questions. But, I say, with that I have no concern at this time. I think that some mistakes were made on both sides. But I do want to say to you that the people who live in the Pocahontas field and the people who live in the New River field want a protective duty on coal.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER]?

Mr. AVIS. Wait until I finish my sentence, and I will be very glad to answer. I started to say that the operators of the Pocahontas and New River fields ship a large percentage of our coal production—at least 12,000,000 tons each year—into New England.

I understand and am informed that the nearest thing to a coal trust in this Union is the Boston Gas Co., which, I understand, controls the output of the Nova Scotia mines, and by placing coal on the free list you are legislating in favor of 10 hours' labor and lower wages, and in favor of the only coal trust in the United States, if there be one. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. RUCKER. A few moments ago the gentleman was speaking of a strike in West Virginia.

Mr. AVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman to say that the cause of the strike was the failure of the operators to recognize the union.

Mr. AVIS. Yes; that was one cause, but that was not the only cause. Another cause was the question of having a check weighman.

Mr. RUCKER. Was not the other cause the fact that the company refused to pay the men oftener than once in 30 days, and the men demanded that they should be paid every 15 days?

Mr. AVIS. I said that.

Mr. RUCKER. And another cause was that the corporation required the men to spend their money at the company's store, and on their side they asked the right to buy wherever they pleased.

Mr. AVIS. No. I am informed that they already had the right to buy where they pleased.

Mr. RUCKER. Is not that one of the things that the Republican governor exacted of the operators in the settlement of the controversy?

Mr. AVIS. The Republican governor of West Virginia suggested that they already had that right in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood further that some distinguished Democrat appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and said that the cost of labor in the West Virginia coal fields was about 80 per cent of the cost of mining coal?

Mr. AVIS. Yes, sir. Senator Davis said it was 95 per cent.

Mr. RUCKER. What is the rate that the miner gets in the New River country, on the Norfolk & Western and on the Chesapeake & Ohio road?

Mr. AVIS. The report for this year is not in yet, but it is shown that the average wages paid to the coal miners in West Virginia is about 44¼ cents per ton and about $575 per annum.

Mr. RUCKER. It is about 75 or 80 cents a ton, is it not?

Mr. AVIS. Total labor cost exceeds that.

Mr. RUCKER. Do they not sell it for $1.50?

Mr. AVIS. No, sir. In the last few years it has sold below $1 per ton, and the average last year was 98 cents per gross ton of run-of-mine coal.

Mr. LANGLEY. The labor cost is 95 per cent, according to the statement of ex-Senator Davis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] appears again in the rôle of the professional friend of labor. I want him to hear me.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I hear you.

Mr. LANGLEY. Come a little closer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. But the unfortunate thing for American labor is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] appears in this case as the friend of Canadian labor and not of American labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I believe the gentleman is a labor-union man. The mines in my State which will suffer from free coal are unionized; and, without desiring to contradict my good friend from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS], the wages of miners in Wyoming are considerably higher, if I am correctly informed, than anywhere in the eastern fields, and higher, I believe, than wages paid to coal miners anywhere except, perhaps, in our neighboring State of Montana. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have miners—scores of them; and I have the good fortune of a personal acquaintance with many of the miners of my State—who never go into a mine without making from $3.50 to $5 a day before they leave the mine, and ordinarily they work no more than seven hours. And these are the miners whose opportunity for work is to be reduced by the placing of coal on the free list.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has given so little attention to this question that he does not understand that when a mine operator in Canada has an opportunity, without loss, to make a reduction of the entire amount of a 45-cent duty, he need not cut his price 45 cents—it is not necessary for him to cut it more than 10 or 12 cents a ton in order to drive the American out of the market—and when he has reduced his price by that amount and driven our mines from the market, he can raise his price again to the old figure, and our people can not get in, because there is the potentiality of the opportunity to control and still have a profit.

When we reduced the duty on coal from 65 cents to 45 cents under the Payne bill, the Canadians drove us back just about 100 miles. We lost all of our markets along the line of the Great Northern Railway. That great railway has been getting cheaper coal, perhaps, transported over its own railroads, but if there is anyone else on earth except this great railway in that northwestern country who will be benefited by reducing the rate on coal, I do not know who it can possibly be.

Free coal means that one-third of the product of our State will lose its market, and one-third of the miners—union miners, working reasonable hours, content with their employment, who have had no recent serious disagreement with the operators—must either lose their employment or wages be threatened.

We have troubles enough in our country through this bill without losing our coal markets; wool on the free list; sugar going to the free list; and now a third of the market for our coal mines taken from us by this Democratic Congress. Yet, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who calls himself a friend of union labor, is going to vote for this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As matters now stand the competition among our northern mines is so intense, the summer trade so small that even though our miners receive good wages while working, the working days are often so few, the idle days so frequent, that their yearly income is much too small to comfortably support a family. We need more rather than fewer markets, for it is of the utmost importance that our miners have steadier employment as a good or fair wage per ton or day helps little if work is slack. I call on my friend from Illinois, who, I think, is a friend of labor, to help preserve the American market for coal mined by union American labor.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

350. Dice, dominoes, draughts, chessmen, chess balls, and billiard, pool, bagatelle balls, and poker chips, of ivory, bone, or other materials, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANN. Where is the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

During political campaigns we are not greatly surprised to hear much political buncombe which the speaker himself does not expect the audience to accept very seriously; but when I came to the Congress of the United States, the place where we are supposed to find the greatest debaters, the most earnest men, I expected to find something a little different. But lo, and behold, we find here raised to the *n*th power all of the political balderdash that we hear from one end of the country to the other every two years. We hear the self-appointed agents and guardians of the downtrodden, as they would have us believe, pleading piteously for the American workingman. Who gave them their commission? I would like to see the captions of those letters to which they so continually refer. I know that those which I have received—not very many—are not from those labor organizations to which they have been so fond of alluding.

Let us consider briefly the fundamentals of the minority's tariff position. It is and always has been simply a proposition to levy a tax on the American people, the whole people; a scheme to require them to pay bounties to a few people for their enrichment and then to insist that it is for the benefit of all. They tell us it is for the benefit of the American workingman. How solicitous indeed our Republican friends have become about the American workingman since they have gone out of office. [Applause on the Democratic side]. Just think how ridiculous is the proposition that because there are poured into the hands of a few men, into the hands of a privileged class, great fortunes which are wrung from all of the people by means of a taxation which they euphoniously call protection; that by virtue of the fact that you have put these benefits into their hands they suddenly become philanthropic, and are going to hand over the money so acquired to their workmen. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] My friends, labor will receive, as wages, just so much as its employer is compelled to pay in order to procure that labor and no more, whether or not the tariff be high or low. That is only human nature.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. No; I do not care to yield. I have not taken any of the time of the committee up to this moment.

Why, gentlemen, I claim that instead of the tariff being an advantage to the American workingman it is a positive disadvantage even as to his wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Because it does nothing more nor less than give to the tariff beneficiaries of the United States an opportunity to combine among themselves, and then say: "We have it all to ourselves anyhow. We will therefore demand just such a price as we see fit for our products and we will pay just as much as we see fit to the men whom we employ." Is not that the common sense of the proposition? Would you or I or anyone else pay more than we were compelled to pay for labor? Not very likely. Oh, the high priest of protection from Michigan informed us yesterday, by having the Clerk read the clever little letter from his farmer friend, how this friend of his is getting $1 apiece for his chickens, 50 cents a dozen for his eggs, 50 cents a pound for butter, and all that sort of thing. But has the gentleman stopped to think about the man who is buying these things? There are two sides to his proposition——

Mr. FORDNEY. He told you in the letter what the men were getting.

Mr. CROSSER. I can not yield to the gentleman, for I have but little time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not ask the gentleman to yield, and I would not if I was in his place.

Mr. CROSSER. There are but two sides to that proposition—the buyers' and the sellers'. But, Mr. Chairman, while I am bitterly opposed to all kinds of tariff privileges, I do not advocate the immediate removal of all tariff duties any more than I would advocate the immediate taking away of all opium or morphine from the slaves to these drugs. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] We must give industry an opportunity to settle its nerves, which have been shattered by the drug of tariff privilege.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the tariff question has very little to do at the present with the matter of wages. The gentleman from Michigan himself proved that conclusively the other day. He told us that he had employed labor in the wilds of the State of Washington at $3.50 per day, and that he had employed in Mississippi labor of the same character for $1.75 per day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And yet, my friends, both of these States are favored with the same beneficent tariff laws.

I have no doubt that the statement of the gentleman is absolutely correct, and it is quite likely that all labor in the newer countries of the West is better paid. Then it is also true that the colored man of the South is not so easily organized. But tell us why the wages in free-trade Britain are almost double the wages paid for the same class of labor in high-tariff Germany. Tell us why it is that the industries which enjoy the highest tariff privilege in the United States pay the lowest wages. The woolen industry, for example, enjoys the benefits of the highest tariff, and yet the employees of the woolen manufacturers at Lynn, Mass., received but a miserable pittance for their long hours of toil. So it is with the employees of the cotton industry and those employed in some of the metal trades. The fact is it is the veriest nonsense to suppose that because we give certain concerns the right to levy a tax upon the whole people for the purpose of increasing their profit these concerns will forthwith transfer this profit to their employees. How many of the gentlemen on the other side of the House would support a proposition to permit the present beneficiaries of the tariff to levy a direct tax upon the people for the purpose of collecting a sum equal to that derived from the present tariff law? Why, not a single man of you would vote for such a bill, although it would be much fairer than permitting these men to mulct the public by means of an indirect tax. Why do men cling so fondly to the plan of granting bounties to the few through this indirect taxation? Simply because, as the old woman said, "It is the best way to get the most feathers with the least squawking." And yet we hear men again and again blandly asserting that the purpose of the tariff is to raise wages, although they make no pretense at showing any casual connection between the tariff and wages. As their authorities to support different tariff rates they read us letters, petitions, and briefs from this interest and that. I am frank to say that I believe capital in the true sense of the word has suffered along with labor. The real dog in the manger that robs both capital and labor is the monopolist of the natural resources. Break the stranglehold of private monopoly of the natural resources and then both labor and capital will thrive and become healthy again; but until we do break the hold of such monopoly, all your high tariff will serve but to increase the tribute it may exact from capital and labor; and if such private monopoly of natural resources is permitted to exist you may establish absolute free trade without improving greatly the condition of our people.

It is undoubtedly true, however, that by reducing the tariff low enough to make competition possible we shall to that extent weaken the hold of monopoly and thus compel it to give up part of its booty. The country therefore has great cause to rejoice over the prospective passage of the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is a wise man who knows himself, and it is a very wise man who is able to judge of his own speeches. I congratulate the last speaker that in his opening remarks he so aptly characterized the speech he was about to deliver. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CROSSER. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. That courtesy is like the one he showed me the other day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I do not know what courtesy I showed the gentleman the other day, for frankly I have not become acquainted with the gentleman until now.

The Clerk read as follows:

356. Matches, friction or lucifer, of all descriptions, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, 3 cents per gross; when imported otherwise than in boxes containing not more than 100 matches each, one-fourth of 1 cent per 1,000 matches; wax matches, fuses, wind matches, and all matches in books or folders or having a stained, dyed, or colored stick or stem, and tapers consisting of a wick coated with an inflammable substance, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 88, line 13, after the word "substance," insert the words "and night lights."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

357. Percussion caps, cartridges, and cartridge shells empty, 15 per cent ad valorem; blasting caps, 75 cents per thousand; mining, blasting, or safety fuses of all kinds, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 88, line 15, after the word "caps," strike out the figures "75" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "2.25."

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to substitute the present tariff on blasting caps for that contained in the bill. I have introduced this amendment at the request of a number of gentlemen who are interested in a blasting-cap factory at Stege Station, in the city of Richmond, in my district, who inform me that if this tariff is reduced from $2.25 to 75 cents a thousand the blasting-cap industry in this country will cease; that they will close up their factory. Nearly all the blasting caps imported into the United States come from Germany, and the German article is one that can not be depended upon. Blasting caps are used for the purpose of setting off blasts of dynamite and powder.

The United States Bureau of Mines and the mining bureaus of the mining States in a number of their pamphlets and bulletins have called the attention of the mine operators to the fact that a great many of the accidents in the mines have been caused by defective blasting caps, and to be careful to use none but the best, and those manufactured in the United States are the best. There are but three blasting-cap factories in the United States—one in California, one in Pennsylvania, and one in New Jersey.

Now, in the event of war, it would be a serious matter if we had to depend on foreign importations for Army and Navy use, as blasting caps are contraband of war. I do not expect that the Committee of the Whole will accept this amendment, but I am presenting it to bring it to the attention of the Ways and Means Committee in the hope that when the bill reaches the Senate it may be given a reasonable and proper rate that will permit this industry to be continued. During reecnt years the price of the American article has decreased and the quality has been improved until we manufacture the best blasting caps made in the world, while the imported foreign article continues to be unreliable and unsatisfactory.

Under the Wilson bill the tariff rate was $2.07 per thousand, with an ad valorem equivalent of 85.24 per cent. Under the present law the tariff is $2.25 per thousand, with an ad valorem equivalent of 46.55 per cent. Manufacturing these caps is a dangerous occupation, and the wages paid operatives in this country is from $2.50 to $10 a day, according to the skill required and the danger encountered in the different departments of the factory in which the operative is employed. In Germany the highest wages paid is less than $2 a day.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment of my colleague I desire to call attention to a recent report of Consul General Robert P. Skinner, at Hamburg, published in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, dealing with the blasting-cap industry in Germany. This report calls attention to the wages paid in Germany in the blasting-cap factories, which I wish to contrast with the wages paid in these factories in the United States. It shows that in the German factories the wages paid for men are 15.5 cents per hour, for women but 6.7 cents per hour, and for the children but 5.2 cents per hour. For an eight-hour day that would be $1.24 for the men and 53.6 cents for the women. In the blasting-cap factory in the district of the gentleman who has just spoken, the wages range from $2.50 to $10 a day. There is not a man or woman employed there who does not receive a minimum wage of $2.50 or a maximum of $10, as against a little over $1.24 and 53.6 cents. This is another illustration of the necessity for obtaining information from some reliable body so that when a tariff bill is before the House we will have information that is reliable and upon which we can base schedules that will protect the industries of this country. This is another instance of where the committe strikes at a California industry. I will insert an extract from the report of Consul General Skinner:

German manufacturers of blasting caps employ women for drawing the detonator tubes and for charging and packing the finished product. They are also employed in the manufacture of electric fuses and fuses for war purposes.

Probably one-half of the employees in German factories of this class are adult men, one-third women, and one-sixth minors. It is impossible to obtain absolutely correct figures relating to this special industry as a whole. In regard to one very important concern manufacturing blasting caps, the following entirely dependable figures have been obtained: Number of men employed, 96; women, 59; boys, 15; girls, 7; total, 177. The men are paid at the rate of 65 pfennigs (15.5 cents) per hour, the women 28 pfennigs (6.7 cents) and the boys and girls 22 pfennigs (5.2 cents).

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two in relation to this blasting-cap proposition. In the interest of labor again we hear the distinguished Representatives from the State of California asking for a return to the Payne rates, and the gentleman who has just taken his seat has compared the cost of labor in the production of these articles in this country and abroad, and he would return to the duty of $2.25 a thousand in order to protect that difference in labor cost. Yet he must know that upon the value of this article in 1911 the rate of $2.25 would be over 95 per cent ad valorem of the import value of the article. He certainly has qualified as a friend of labor when he would protect the difference in cost of production to within 5 per cent of the entire cost of our production, material, labor, and everything else. It seems to me to be a sufficient answer to all these arguments to say that as to this line of goods our exports, including kindred articles like cartridges, mining, blasting, and safety fuses, and percussion caps amount to $2,294,000 per annum, while our imports amount to $173,000. There can not be this startling difference in the cost of production, which is going to drive the American producer out of existence, if he can take abroad two millions and a quarter of his goods and compete with the foreigner in his market, while the foreigner brings here less than $175,000 worth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know where the gentleman from Pennsylvania got his figures, but I notice from the report which he submitted to the House on this bill that he gave the import value of blasting caps at $4.83 a thousand, and I am quite sure of my arithmetic when I say that $2.75 is not 90 per cent of $4.83.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. I said on the price which prevailed in 1911. The price has since risen.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is begging the question. That was not correct, as to the price in 1911.

Mr. PALMER. Well, I am stating the fact. The gentleman is speaking of another year.

Mr. MANN. On this subject I ask to have read in my time a letter from the president of the Aetna Powder Co., which does not manufacture blasting caps.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, February 18, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Relative to the duty on blasting caps, paragraph 437 of the tariff act 1909:

We consider the maintenance of the present tariff on blasting caps a matter of great importance to the welfare of our industry in this country. We manufacture and sell dynamite. We believe that when our product leaves our mill it carries with it that degree of perfection which the exercise of the highest degree of skill and the application of sound scientific principles can give it. But when it passes into the hands of the consumer its ability to do the work expected of it is dependent in some measure upon other elements, chief of which is the blasting cap. The best dynamite ever made will fail if used in conjunction with a poor cap. Either the charge will not be set off at once, thereby enormously increasing the hazard to the user who is apt to believe that it will not go off at all, or the combustion will be incomplete or retarded, thereby failing to develop all of the disruptive force of the dynamite. In either event the average consumer condemns the dynamite and the manufacturer thereof must contend with a criticism which is unjust and undeserved.

We do not manufacture caps; the margin of profit is so small and the risk so great that we prefer to buy. We buy caps from domestic manufacturers and urge our customers to buy the caps from us, thus assuring ourselves, as far as we are able, that our dynamite will develop the highest efficiency.

Domestic manufacturers have given us an efficient cap at a reasonable price. In fact, the cost of the cap to the consumer, especially in view of the importance attached to the work it is required to do, is insignificant. The dynamite costs the consumer from $12 to $15 a hundred pounds, while 100 caps will cost him only 75 cents.

Foreign blasting caps in this country are of a quality decidedly inferior to the domestic. We speak from experience. We have handled the foreign cap, have given it an extensive and a thorough test, and know, to our cost and injury, that it is wholly unfit to develop the efficiency of the high-grade explosives now produced in this country.

It is proposed now to reduce the tariff on blasting caps. Domestic manufacturers tell us, and we believe that we know enough about the manufacture of explosives to vouch for the accuracy of the statement, that if the tariff is reduced they will be forced either to retire and to leave the field to the weak and cheap foreign cap or to lower the standard of their goods to the level of the inefficiency that now comes from abroad. Either event would surely work serious harm to both the maker and the user of dynamite.

We feel the strongest interest in the maintenance of the present high efficiency of the domestic blasting cap. Necessarily, therefore, we are much concerned in the proposition now being advanced that the tariff on blasting caps be reduced. We believe that such action on the part of Congress would have a most damaging effect. We are therefore taking the liberty of addressing this communication to you for the purpose of acquainting you with our views on the subject.

Yours, very truly,

THE AETNA POWDER COMPANY.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

358. Feathers and downs, crude or not dressed, colored, or otherwise advanced or manufactured in any manner, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem; when dressed, colored, or otherwise advanced or manufactured in any manner, including quilts of down and other manufactures of down, 40 per cent ad valorem; artificial or ornamental feathers, fruits, grains, leaves, flowers, and stems or parts thereof, of whatever material composed, not specially provided for in this section, 60 per cent ad valorem; boas, boutonnieres, wreaths, and all articles not specially provided for in this section, composed wholly or in chief value of any of the feathers, flowers, leaves, or other materials or articles herein mentioned, 60 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That the importation of aigrettes, egret plumes or so-called osprey plumes, and the feathers, quills, heads, wings, tails, skins or parts of skins, of wild birds, either raw or manufactured, and not for scientific or educational purposes, is hereby prohibited; but this provision shall not apply to the feathers or plumes of ostriches, or to the feathers or plumes of domestic fowls of any kind.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, line 18, after the word "downs," insert the words "on the skin or otherwise."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he would consider an amendment striking out the proviso.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I can not help considering it if he offers it. I do not think it is probable it will go through.

Mr. MOORE. It is not probable such an amendment would pass. Mr. Chairman, of course this is a matter in which I must submit to the chairman of the majority, but I am very much surprised at this method of reducing the cost of living. There is a certain element of selfishness about this entire paragraph. In the first place, it is proposed that notwithstanding birds of high plumage may be killed in foreign countries and that the meat of the bird shall be admitted into this country, the feathers of the bird, which the ladies of America would like to have for ornamental and millinery purposes, must be excluded. To be sure, there are some societies of ladies and gentlemen endeavoring to preserve the song birds of this country, and who are also extending their influence to foreign countries in order that no one shall kill birds beyond our borders, but the fact still remains that the birds are killed and that we admit, in one of the foregoing paragraphs of this bill, the meat of the bird after it is killed, while we deny the right of admission to the plumage of the bird, which adds so much to the adornment of the ladies of this fair country of ours. Now, it appears——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not my friend from Pennsylvania think that the ladies are now ornamental enough without requiring this additional degree of ornamentation? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Yes; there is no doubt about that. Added to the attractive personality of the gentleman from Illinois he is a good judge of beauty and does not hesitate to express himself freely on that subject. But the truth of the matter is that the elimination of these feathers may be in the interest of the Ribbon Trust of the United States [laughter], and at the same time aid in the depopulation of the feathered flock both of the barnyard and the pigeon cote. But what I object to particularly is that the gentlemen who are now in control of this House and the country, many of them pushing women's suffrage with the loudest possible acclaim, propose by this bill to reduce their personal expenses in the purchase of these high-priced feathers for the ladies whom they so much admire. [Applause.] Not only do they do that with respect to feathers—and in this particular I am surprised at my handsome and well-groomed friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who conducted the steel schedule through the House the other day and then admitted himself to be an expert on arborculture—but they also intend to reduce the cost of living for themselves personally by reducing the rate upon the trimmed hats that come into this county. It is economy at the expense of the fair ladies of the land. [Applause.] You are putting out of business three or four concerns that are dependent upon the manufacture and the sale of this sort of plumage, but as the responsibility is all yours I suppose we will have to submit.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

359. Furs and fur skins of all kinds not dressed in any manner, except undressed skins of hares, rabbits, dogs, goats, sheep, and not specially provided for in this section, 10 per cent ad valorem; furs dressed on the skin, not advanced further than dyeing, 30 per cent ad valorem; manufactures of furs, further advanced than dressing and dyeing, when prepared for use as material, joined or sewed together, including plates, linings, and crosses, and articles manufactured from fur not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem; articles of wearing apparel of every description partly or wholly manufactured, composed of or of which fur is the component material of chief value, 50 per cent ad valorem. Furs not on the skin, prepared for batters' use, including fur skins carroted, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply for the purpose of saying that my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Philadelphia——

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman correct that?

Mr. PALMER. Has, per his usual, spoken upon all sides of the question which was involved in the feather schedule; and, inasmuch as he is, as usual, the author of all the newspaper reports of his speeches which reach the Philadelphia press, I want him now to interpret his remarks. I want him to stop and not sidestep and go upon record and say whether he stands with the good women of Philadelphia who would save bird life by restricting the importation of bird plumage of this kind, or whether he stands on the side of those who would kill birds in order to ornament themselves. I want him to say whether he is in favor of this proviso or whether he is against it.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will take back what he said about the speeches I will answer him.

Mr. PALMER. I am so anxious to get the answer that I will take back anything.

Mr. MOORE. I admit that I am the author of the speeches I make. [Laughter.] I also contend that the gentleman has no right to be envious if my speeches are reported and his are not. Merit in this matter will count as in all other things [laughter], and if the speeches of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] are not sufficiently interesting to be reported, that is his misfortune and not my fault. I will continue to have published as widely as possible everything I am able to say about the inconsistency of the Democratic program, all it is possible for me to construct and make public. And so far as the gentleman's question is concerned, I will say to him that when I have an opportunity to meet the fair ladies of Philadelphia I will tell them in confidence what I think upon this subject, and I will not unbosom myself to the gentleman at this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. MANAHAN, and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota rose.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. There is quite a contest on this——

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman better make it 20 minutes. I would like to speak 10 minutes myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not agree to that.

Mr. MANN. There are three gentlemen here who wish to speak, and I would like to speak myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to reserve 5 minutes to this side. Can we not make it 20 minutes, and I will yield 15 minutes of that time to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not propose to agree to anything unless I have 5 minutes. This is the only thing I have argued, and it seems to me if you parcel it out that way I will have to beg for more time.

Mr. PAYNE. He may lose his amendment if he does not have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes, 15 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 5 minutes by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 89, line 15, after the word "sheep," insert the following:
"Marmot, wolf, raccoon, red fox, kitt fur, pony, house cat, wildcat, opossum, muskrat, Japanese mink, Chinese weasel, kangaroo, hair seal, wool seal, wombat, vellaby, squirrel, black bear, brown bear, badger, civet cat, beaver, kolinsky, mink, fitch, nutria, skunk, wolverine, otter, cross fox."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the furs named in this amendment constitute the materials out of which the fur clothing and the fur robes of the people of the Northern States, where it is cold and these things are needed, are made. Now, raw fur, or fur undressed, has been on the free list ever since this Government was founded. For 124 years they have been free of duty. It has always been recognized by the Republicans and Democrats alike that these things are a necessity, and if the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the other eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], and the others, would come up into northern Minnesota, where the thermometer goes down as low as 45 or 50 degrees below zero, and then ride 30 or 40 miles in a sleigh, I will guarantee that they also would admit that this kind of fur is a necessity.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] has stated in the hearings that he has observed the ladies on Fifth Avenue wearing sealskin coats, and therefore he thinks that they are a luxury. [Laughter.] I do not care how fashionable ladies are adorned on Fifth Avenue. They may wear what they please, but coon-skin coats are an absolute necessity in the northern country. [Laughter.] If the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means do not know that fact it is much to be regretted.

Every now and then some majority member of that committee comes in here and says he pleads for "the clothing of the poor." [Laughter.] Another comes in and says he pleads for "the food of the poor man." [Laughter.] You heard it stated and repeated and reiterated over and over again that they are taxing luxuries. I say that a greater injustice was never perpetrated upon humankind than is now attempted to be perpetrated in this paragraph that proposes to tax the fur clothing which is necessary to keep people of the Northern States warm in the winter on the Democratic theory which comes from Alabama that fur is a luxury and has to be taxed. [Laughter and applause.]

You have stripped my people, gentlemen, of every vestige of protection. You have taken away the duties on what my people produce. Everything produced on the farm is opened to the competition of the world. And when you have done that and have deprived the Government of thirty or forty or fifty or a hundred million dollars of revenue, now you pretend, for the sake, as you assert, of a million and a quarter dollars of revenue, to place a tax on the coon-skin coats which my people wear in the wintertime. [Laughter.] The only thing that you have left on the free list, so far as furs are concerned, are a few measly rabbit skins and dogskins. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, do you think any farmers in the northern part of the country will vote the Democratic ticket when the only thing that they can wear in the winter is dogskins? [Laughter.] Even the beautiful hair that grows upon the back of the Angora goat of Texas bears a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, because they do not come in under your classification of goatskins. Goatskins, you know, are pretty smooth. [Laughter.] You do not get any hair on them unless it is from these long-haired goats in Texas. [Laughter.]

Now, I will say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who spoke about furs the other day, that if he thinks these things are not a necessity I will meet him in any mass meeting in the winter or in the fall in Minnesota, and if 90 per cent of the farmers who come out to that meeting do not wear fur coats I will give him a certificate of election as long as he lives. [Laughter and applause.] You can not hold a meeting or go into any town in the northern part of this country in the wintertime without seeing the farmers wearing these very same furs that are mentioned in that amendment of mine. Fur clothing and fur robes are also necessary to the thousands of rural carriers in the North and street-car drivers and all who are exposed to the weather.

You call these things luxuries. A muskrat cap is a luxury, according to your idea. [Laughter.] At the same time that you have placed a tax on the raw fur and compensatory duties in proportion—a tax on the raw material—you have in this same bill continued curling stones and curling-stone handles free as a necessity. [Laughter and applause.]

These things are all imported from Scotland at the high price of fifteen or twenty dollars for every stone used in fashionable winter sport by the idle rich in New York and other large cities. Instead of being necessities, those are luxuries. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not think I used up all my time. I ought to have about one minute left, according to my count. [Laughter.] Just imagine how a man will feel standing in a dogskin coat watching those fashionable people on the ice at a bonspiel playing with curling stones. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I am impelled by a feeling of sympathy for the majority to make an observation in their behalf. The onslaught of my Viking colleague [Mr. STEENERSON] so absolutely destroyed every semblance of justification for this schedule that I hardly feel it necessary to say anything to sustain his amendment. I am more inclined to think it would be the charitable and proper thing for me, under these circumstances, to enter into a defense of the majority and its misguided committee. I think we have been unnecessarily severe with them in our discussion to-night. There is needed a defense of this schedule from some one, and the committee is silent.

Now, I am not going to defend the whole bill. I am not a criminal lawyer. [Laughter.] I only wish to defend this committee, who for the first time that I have observed in this discussion have seen fit to protect one of the industries of my State. They put a protective tariff on the gopher skins of the Gopher State, and for this small favor we are thankful and appreciative.

But, Mr. Chairman, now that I am on this line of defense I think this observation ought to be made in this connection: This particular paragraph represents very clearly the general incongruity and inconsistency of the whole measure. It severely taxes the consumers of the North on a stern necessity of life while pretending solicitude for consumers.

There was a debate this afternoon as to who was responsible for this bill, and gentlemen went into ancient history to show who was responsible for other bills in years gone by. To a new Member this is mystifying and unconvincing. It does not make any difference who is responsible for any bill that ever was written. The bill must stand or fall upon its merits as a law. If it is good, it will work out well. If it is bad, it will work out ill. It does not make any difference who the author was or is.

When they consider these obvious contradictions in this law, I know that my colleagues have unnecessarily uncharitable feelings toward the majority in regard to this measure. They see in it so many glaring inconsistencies. They see a high and noble purpose in one paragraph, and evidence of mendacity in another, the good and bad confused and commingled without sense, system, or sanity. I have been mystified for an explanation. What is the cause of it? How did it happen? Who is responsible? God only knows who was responsible for this monstrosity of a law. But, Mr. Chairman, I think I understand the forces in which the Ways and Means Committee drifted, and I feel it my duty to my associates to offer them my theory—my defense of the committee.

This bill is not a result of the belief in the doctrines of Thomas Jefferson, who was a protectionist—my colleagues know that. They know also it did not result from a study of political economy. Every political economist must condemn it. This Underwood bill has no common or mortal parentage; nor does it come from any particular or presidential source, as some say.

I found this little book coming down on the street car to-night, and discovered in it the explanation and inspiration of this law. It is not a campaign book. It is an almanac. The proof is in the bill. It fluctuates like the changing seasons. It blows hot and cold; is as inconstant as the moon, and as uncertain as Venus in the morning.

Evidently this bill was written at different times and suffered in the writing from the different conjunctions of the planets, sometimes one force exercising itself and sometimes another. I do not favor the more prosaic theory of some observers that some days the committee ate too much meat and felt destructive, and so on those days they put in schedules that would destroy industries. They say that on other days probably the moon, at least, was full. [Laugher.] Anyhow, they got it, I surmise, from the almanac. I see the effect of all the signs of the zodiac in this measure. There is Aries, the ram, ramming this bill right through regardless of consequences. I see Taurus, the goat [laughter]—no; not the goat——

Mr. GARDNER. Capricornus is the goat.

Mr. MANN. The Angora goat? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANAHAN. Taurus is the bull, typical of the original Bull Moose and of this bull-neck, stubborn committee that will not yield to any argument; and, as I said, the ram is represented, and the lion. You beheld him yesterday in charge of the ceremonies, with his bushy locks [laughter]—the lion of the zodiac—with much more noise in his voice than intelligence in his argument. [Laughter.]

Then there are the other signs of the zodiac—even the creeping crab is represented, with all its mendacity.

Now I see my time is about to expire. I want to say, gentlemen, that Minnesota needs cheap furs. It is not right to put a tariff on this great necessity. It is not fair to the consumers, and it is not fair to anybody. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLOAN. Do you not think the majority will need protection on their bare skins when the people get after them? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANAHAN. They undoubtedly will need bear skins on their backs when the lash of public scorn scourges them from the temple of this great Government.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] desires to offer an amendment. I do not know whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] desires to be heard upon the Steenerson amendment or not.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the committee is not able to satisfy the various gentlemen from Minnesota. As I was listening to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN], who addressed us so eloquently the other day, and described what he called the prehistoric Democrat, with long ears, it occurred to me to wonder whether he was speaking of himself, for I understand that he has only been in the Republican Party about two years. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANAHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I can not. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] is a little bit vague in his zoology. His remarks upon the fur-bearing animals bear less weight in this House since he has announced that he considered Taurus as a goat. [Laughter.] As to the other gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], I was moved almost to tears by his plea for the people of Minnesota. He announced that we have stripped them of all protection, and in consequence he wants fur to cover their shivering persons. He says that if I would come out to Minnesota I would have a different opinion about the fur schedule. I visited his State last summer and drove around that magnificent city of St. Paul, and I want to say that his State in summer is a good deal hotter than Florida, whatever it may be in winter.

I drove about the magnificent city and the cab driver pointed out the palaces of the rich on the hill. I asked him "Whose house is that?" He said, "Mr. So-and-so, a fur dealer." "Whose house is that?" "That is Mr. So-and-so, who made a great fortune out of Canadian furs." Another man had a palace built out of money he had made in furs. Why, gentlemen, the Minnesota Members in this discussion defend the great rich fur merchants in the city of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no fur dealer in my district.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I can not yield. They are making pathetic appeals in behalf of the farmers of Minnesota, whereas what they are really doing is to represent the great rich men who live in palaces on the hills of the Twin Cities.

I spoke about the furs on Fifth Avenue. Every man in this House who is a member of the Husbands' Protective Union ought to desire not only a 10 per cent duty, but a prohibitive duty, so as to keep them out of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In New York the richest shopkeepers we have are fur dealers, just the same as they are in your State, and the only difference between the two gentlemen from Minnesota and myself is that I believe these fur merchants ought to pay some fair share of the taxes of the Government, and the contention of the two gentlemen from Minnesota is that they ought to be allowed to go without paying any of the burden of taxes.

I do not know why furs have always been on the free list. I suppose that up to recent times the Hudson Bay Fur Co. of Canada occupied a position of influence and power in that country, such as the Canadian Pacific Railway does to-day. I have no doubt they had sufficient influence with our Government in the past to keep furs on the free list.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question, just to set him right? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of New York. No; the gentleman will pardon me. Just as I believe the Canadian Pacific Railway to-day considers it has enough influence with our Government to make us repeal the Panama Canal act providing free tolls in the Canal Zone for American coastwise ships. I believe the day is past when our tariff laws, or any other laws, ought to be written for the benefit of any other nation or any powerful financial influence in any other government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I believe the gentlemen from Minnesota, representing as they do the powerful rich men of their State, are also indirectly representing the Hudson Bay Co. of Canada. I am willing to tax them; are not you? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAYDEN). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEENERSON) there were 56 ayes and 102 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 359 by striking out all of said paragraph down to and including the words "ad valorem," in line 22, page 89, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Furs and fur skins of the Russian sable, marten, ermine, mole, lynx, black fox, silver fox, sea otter, fisher, fur seal, blue fox, white fox, chinchilla, polar bear, and grizzly bear, 10 per cent ad valorem; furs dressed on the skin but not made into articles, 20 per cent ad valorem; furs not on the skin, prepared for hatters' use, 20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill takes off the duty on wool in order to destroy the sheep industry and puts a duty on skunk skins in order to protect the skunk industry in the United States. [Laughter.]

I call the attention of the committee to the following communications:

CHICAGO, April 15, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your letter of April 12, together with copy of the new tariff bill, and have noted the recommendations of furs on Schedule N, paragraph 363.

We are inclosing herewith a copy of a letter which we filed with the Committee on Ways and Means on January 27. We respectfully ask you to read the arguments put forth in this letter and then compare same with the new recommendations in Mr. UNDERWOOD'S bill. You will note that the new bill makes an exception of the skins of dogs, goat, and sheep in the undressed class and leaves them to come in free, while the other high-class furs are recommended for 10 per cent duty. The "rugs" and "mats" referred to in our appeal are included in manufactures of furs (see lines 21 to 25) of the new bill, and we conscientiously believe that they should also be made an exception of under this listing and be allowed to come under a duty of not over 20 per cent as they were under the old Dingley tariff, as per suggestion on the attached slip.

These are the roughest and lowest class of furs imported into this country, and the coats and robes made from them are not a luxury but are necessities to our farmers all over the country, they being the only low-priced article of fur which they can get. Under the Payne tariff this class of goods was advanced from 20 per cent to 35 per cent, and the new recommendation would advance them another 5 per cent in the face of all the arguments which we, and we believe other manufacturers, have put forth. This is adding a needless burden to the consumer, and simply increases the cost of these rough furs, bringing them up to a point where they are higher than at any time in the history of our business.

We firmly believe that even the present duty on this class of goods is unjust, and we ask you and your colleagues to lend every effort to have the prepared material of dog, goat, and sheep skins put under a separate heading at a lower rate of duty.

As the bill now reads a furrier can import the finest grade of dyed sealskin at 10 per cent less than we can bring in the "rugs" of a common goat, dog, or sheep skin. We leave this to your own good judgement as to whether or not it is fair to the consumer of the cheap goods which are a necessity as against the article which is a luxury. We also call your attention to the fact that the skin can be imported already dyed, while our material, which is imported entirely in the undyed state, is 10 per cent higher.

If there is anything about this matter which you are not quite clear on, the writer will be more than pleased to give you further information you may need, and we sincerely hope that you will see that justice is done and that this revision is made, so that the farmer, who is the largest consumer, will not have to pay this unjust tax.

We suggest the following addition to the proposed tariff bill, to be inserted in paragraph 359, Schedule N:

"Furs of goat, dog, and sheep not further advanced than dressing, when temporarily joined together for use as material in the form of 'plates,' 'mats,' or 'rugs,' 20 per cent ad valorem."

Thanking you for your attention to the matter and trusting to hear from you, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

A. HOENIGSBERGER,
HARRY L. HOENIGSBERGER,
D. HOENIGSBERGER,
Members of Above Firm.

P. S.—We are writing you at the suggestion of a mutual friend, Mr. Felix A. Norden, of Chicago.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to paragraph No. 439 under Schedule N of the present tariff, we beg to petition your committee in regard to the rough furs, which are commonly known as goat and sheep "rugs" and "mats" and dog "mats," and ask that this class of furs be separated from the general class and be put by themselves with a special rating of their own. We ask this for the reason that they are of an entirely different class of material, being cheaper and rougher than what are commonly known as "fancy furs." However, on account of not having a separate classification, they are included in the second part of paragraph No. 439, under "Manufactures" of furs further advanced than dressing and dyeing and prepared for use as material, including plates, linings, and crosses, 35 per cent ad valorem, thus putting them on an equal basis with goods which are already prepared in the greater part for manufacture. We give you the following arguments in favor of a separate listing and reduction:

First. We have no ax to grind. We neither gain nor lose on account of the higher duty. The only effect which it has is to make the manufactured article cost more to the consumer without giving to any one any added protection whatever, as this class of furs is used only for the manufacture of carriage robes and a cheap grade of men's fur coats, none of which are imported into this country in the manufactured state.

Second. The term "rugs" and "mats" is simply the trade name for certain standard sizes of furs, and has no meaning in any other sense than this. While they are not one separate skin, they are simply pieced out on the sides with a loose stitch and basted to bring them up to the standard of measurement. This stitch is absolutely worthless as far as being of any use in the manufacturing, it being necessary to rip the sewing, cut the "rugs" and "mats" apart, rematch them, and sew them before they are of marketable value, as far as manufacture is concerned. The principal reason for these furs being imported in these sizes is because the importer in this country is better able to ascertain what amount of material he is getting than if he bought these in the regular skin shape, the skins being of variable sizes.

Third. It requires just as much work to manufacture a robe or coat from these "rugs" or "mats" as it would to manufacture from natural-shaped skins.

Fourth. The natural-shaped skins, which are no further advanced than these "rugs" and "mats" can be brought in at 20 per cent, even though they may be dyed abroad. The fancy fur plates, such as squirrel, etc., even though dyed, can be brought in at the same rate of duty (35 per cent) as our "rugs" and "mats," which we import in the undyed state entirely.

What we claim is that China goat and sheep "rugs" and "mats" and dog "mats" loosely basted together to make a standard size, not machine sewed, should be under a separate heading, so worded, at 20 per cent duty.

In making this appeal to your committee we beg to impress upon you the fact that this will reduce this class of skins to the old rate of duty at which they were always entered under the old Dingley tariff; that the advance of 15 per cent made in the last revision of the tariff simply increased the cost of the manufactured article to the consumer, giving no protection to any manufacturer in this country; and that under the present tariff it would be advantageous for us to have our raw material dyed abroad instead of in this country, as we are doing now, and importing it in the dyed state, being able to do so without any increase in the tariff rate.

We beg you to take this all into consideration and give the matter an unbiased decision.

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

CHICAGO, April 23, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of April 19, in reply to mine of April 15, and thank you for your attention. I am, however, taking the liberty of writing to you again to once more call your attention to the fact that the goods which we use, namely, goat, dog, and sheep, are not the kind of goods which commonly come under the heading of "furs." The latter include sealskin and all the other kindred grades, while ours is of the cheapest kind of domestic animal.

In talking of this fur schedule, we trust you will keep the above fact before you, and we sincerely trust that the suggested amendment sent in our last letter will be offered when the bill is being put before the House.

Assuring you that your efforts will be appreciated, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

A. HOENIGSBERGER.
H. L. HOENIGSBERGER.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I send to the desk should satisfy the gentlemen of the committee—yes, even the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]. It provides substantially two things:

First, it sets forth all of the high-grade raw furs used as luxuries by the people of this country, on which there is placed the duty provided in this bill of 10 per cent ad valorem. If one agrees with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] that furs used as luxuries ought to be taxed, then this amendment of mine is the proper and safe way to accomplish such result without injury to the important fur industry.

Secondly, it provides that the provisions of the Wilson bill and of the Dingley bill as to duties on furs dressed and partially made shall be substituted for the remaining provisions in this paragraph down to the part providing for the finished article. It leaves the duties on the finished the same as in the bill, and as in the existing law, of 50 per cent on all finished garments. It is easy to perceive that the gentlemen of the committee do not understand the situation of this industry and the uses of fur garments in the North. Nearly all of the rural free-delivery carriers in the Northern States, and, I will venture to say, more than 10,000 of them, are obliged to wear fur coats in their daily journeys of 25 miles or so in the severe days of winter. Nearly all of the teamsters up in our section of the country are obliged to wear fur coats, or linings of fur or skins of some sort. The street-car drivers who are exposed, the inspectors of out-of-door work, the policemen, nearly all of the farmers who can do so, and all chauffeurs and motorists are obliged to wear fur coats, costing from $25 to $50 each.

Under the provision of the existing law these furs as they come into this country to be made over into garments are taxed substantially 35 per cent on admission. Under the Wilson bill and under the Dingley bill they were taxed only 20 per cent. Under the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich bill they were taxed 35 per cent, but under the provisions of the present bill these necessities of life are taxed 40 per cent, an increase of 5 per cent. That is why I think there should be called to your attention the cruelty and the injustice which you are doing to the people of the North, who are exposed to the severities of the weather and need comfortable clothing to don. For that reason I have provided the list of furs which are clearly luxuries and that ought to be taxed if you decide on a policy of taxing raw materials in this industry. The remainder, which are used by the people of moderate circumstances, are articles of entire necessity. We provide that raw furs shall be placed upon the free list, and furs dressed and partially made are placed back to the old provisions of the Wilson and Dingley bills at 20 per cent.

Four years ago we from the North objected to the increase of the tax on our necessities—of clothing, from 20 to 35 per cent—since it did not protect anybody, and was only an unjust exaction from our people. We object now to the increase still further of the taxes on our necessities of living from 35 to 40 per cent. You are in this way unfairly and unjustly taxing the garments of our daily living. You are taking money out of the pockets of the rural free delivery carriers, of the teamsters, the farmers, the policemen, the firemen, the motormen, the men of humble means who are exposed to the inclemency of the weather. You are depriving them of clothing they need for their daily use, and you are doing this when there is no necessity, because the revenue will not be increased. It will rather diminish. In addition to that you are keeping away a large business from that section of the country. The furs which come down from Canada as a rule are the ordinary furs for daily use and moderate-priced goods. They come in small packages—5, 15, 20, to 100 pounds. They have been coming down to St. Paul and Minneapolis for more than 50 years. They are sent by the trappers and farmers of the extreme north; and the moment you put a tax on the furs coming into this country from that region it will divert those furs, because of the trouble and difficulty of forwarding them, and they will be sent east to Montreal and London to be made up, thus depriving our people of that work, depriving our people of the opportunity to get that sort of cheap furs for their daily clothing.

You do not understand the injustice you are doing, not only to the wearers, but to a legitimate and helpful industry employing many thousands of our people in profitable employment. You seem to think you are only taxing those people 10 per cent.

That fact is of small consequence. The fact that you place any tax on raw furs at all dislocates this industry and prevents gain and even competition with its foreign rivals. But, fully as important, you must know that these furs, coming in under the description of plates, crosses, and linings, as a rule, are not suitable for use in that form, but have to be torn to pieces and entirely remade. You are taxing in reality, at this rate of 35 per cent, articles which you provide for in your bill which shall be admitted free—skins of goats, dogs, sheep, and so forth, your bill providing in terms for their free admission because they are used as garments for the poorer man. As a matter of fact, they will only be admitted at 40 per cent, under your bill, because of the way they are and must necessarily be imported, and if you gentlemen had the information before you of the business as it is actually done and must be done you would have omitted this provision from the bill. The reason substantially is that the Chinese and Siberians, who produce these skins, prepare them in that way and can not be taught or persuaded to change their customs of a thousand years, and you are penalizing our poor people for it. Of course I do not expect that you will accept the amendment, but I do want you to understand in all sincerity and fairness what the condition of our people has been and is and must be, and I have offered you a practical amendment, which satisfies your conditions and tries to meet what you are accomplishing, and I hope you will see fit to adopt it. I will place in the RECORD a list of furs classed as luxuries, as set forth in my amendment, another class of common furs, and still another class which is subject to change, and may be at one time expensive and again cheaper, depending on the fashion of the day.

This statement is prepared by Mr. C. L. Kluekhohn, of St. Paul, former president of the St. Paul Association of Commerce, and of lifelong experience in the northern fur industry, and by Mr. E. L. Ulman, of New York and St. Paul, who has devoted his life to this business.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request of to-day, we herewith beg to submit the following list of furs, which we have divided into various classes to the best of our knowledge and belief:

We class as articles of luxury Russian sable, marten, ermine, mole, lynx, black fox, silver fox, sea otter, fisher, fur seal, blue fox, white fox, chinchilla, polar bear, grizzly bear.

We class as articles of necessity, which are bought by people of small means, marmot, hare and rabbit, wolf, raccoon, red fox, kitt fox, house cat, wild cat, opossum, muskrat, Japanese mink, Chinese weasel, dog, goat, sheep and lamb, hair, seal, wool seal, wombat, wallaby.

There are a number of articles that are used by people of moderate means whenever prices are low, but which sometimes are fashionable and then are high in price. A duty on these would also be a serious handicap to American merchants engaged in interstate trade: Squirrel, black and brown bear, badger, civet cat, nutria, skunk, wolverine, beaver, kolkinsky, mink, fitch, otter, cross fox.

We respectfully submit that while certain raw furs can be classed as articles of luxury, the revenue derived from them would be small and difficult and expensive to collect on account of the nature of the material and the difficulty in classifying and valuing them.

All raw furs have been free of duty during the entire history of our Government and none of the great commercial countries put a duty on these articles, and any duty, great or small, will seriously handicap, if it would not entirely destroy, all international trade in raw furs on the part of American merchants who have been for generations engaged in the building up of a large business of this kind on a basis of free trade and exchange of this material with all commercial countries.

We respectfully call your attention to the fact that the small revenue to be derived would result in serious injury to an important branch of American commerce.

As explained to you to-day, dogskins and goatskins used for fur purposes are rarely, if ever, imported as raw skins. On account of long-time custom and habits it is impossible to induce the Chinese exporters to sell them to us in any way, except as so-called mats, robes, or rugs, which are never used in their original condition, but are only used in the manufacture of the cheapest fur coats for farmers and teamsters. Until the passage of the Payne bill these have never borne a duty more than 20 per cent.

Yours, respectfully,

C. L. KLUEKHOHN.
E. L. ULMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

360. Fans of all kinds, except common palm-leaf fans, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this, Mr. Chairman, only for the purpose of making a personal explanation, confession, and apology. I know I can not have redress outside of this Chamber against the gentleman from New York for the grave accusation he made against me. He says I was a Democrat two years ago. I confess it, gentlemen; God forgive me [laughter], I was a Democrat. I was a Democrat until I became convinced that I could not do my share for better laws in this country working in the ranks of Democracy. I became convinced that its organization, its ideals, and its handicap was such that it would not be possible for that party to do the constructive work of legislation demanded by the industrial conditions of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] It was not easy for me; to be frank and sincere, it was not easy for me to sever the ties that bound me to associates for many years, and if I had not felt compelled by my conscience to do so, and to do so at a time when every intelligent man in the United States knew that conditions looked favorable to party success at the polls, to do so when apparently and in the judgment of my friends I was making a grave mistake so far as personal advancement was concerned, because if I do say it, I held a high place in Democracy and the confidence of some of its best men.

I was a Democrat until I became convinced as a thoughtful, earnest student of political conditions that the only hope of this country having laws that were right and fair to all was under the leadership of the great progressive Republican, ROBERT LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, the ablest constructive statesman of our day. That is why I became a Republican and enlisted in that great work. [Applause on the Republican side.] And, Mr. Chairman, before I conclude let me make another personal observation, since it has been forced upon me here, and that is that I am in sympathy with many things that those gentlemen on the other side are dreaming about. It was not all sarcasm on my part in alluding to the astrology exemplified by the makers of this bill. These men are stargazers, so far as the Government is concerned, dreamers of noble dreams, but impractical executors of ordinary business, and so I say I will admit I was for a long time a Democrat and a dreamer myself, and possibly the gentleman from New York is correct when he makes personal allusion to the size of my ears. Possibly it was because I look like any ordinary Democrat; but I am surprised that he took the chance of lese majeste when he considers the appearance of the great leader of his party to-day in making an allusion of that kind. Perhaps I, like many other Democrats, elongated my ears listening for the impossible, but I saw in time my error, and therefore I trust the future will not aggravate my appearance. But I am not complaining about my appearance any more than about my belated enlightenment. I was not elected to represent the great State of Minnesota on my looks. I was elected because more than two to one of the people of that State believed that I stood for just and honest legislation, and I have not taken the position in this tariff debate on a single schedule that I did not feel impelled to take by my convictions of right and wrong. [Applause.] There is much good in this bill and, unfortunately, much evil also.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty which besets a political flopper in explaining his frequent changes under political exigency in a five-minute speech must be apparent to everybody. [Laughter.] I presume, however, the gentleman's apostasy from the Democratic Party occurred after he began to derive his information from the almanac.

Since learning the book of his faith and authority our minds are entirely enlightened and cleared up as to the origin of the antiquated wit and wisdom with which gentlemen on that side have illuminated the debate on this bill. I want to warn the gentlemen, however, that their almanac authority is liable to lead them astray. It does not even regulate the weather, much less the politics, nor will it keep their consciences nor their arguments straight. He prays forgiveness for having been a Democrat. Though he secured his own election by the flop to the Republicans, his added weight on that old hack helped us defeat the party. So we can easily forgive him if he will agree not to come back and adulterate the party and handicap our success in another election. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I want to tell him that we know the author of the almanac from which he has been deriving his politics and inspiration for his frequent changes, and he will not do. The author went clipping by a farmer in Georgia one day, a fair, bright day, with no sign of rain, there not being a cloud as large as a man's hand, and the farmer said, "You had better gallop, Doc, or you will get rained on before you get to town." The doctor thought it was ridiculous. He rode on; and sure enough, it rained pitchforks and ladles before he reached town. He was so disgusted he would not dismount. He turned around and rode back, and he said to the farmer, "How in thunder did you know it was going to rain on such a fair day?" The farmer said, "I take old Doc So-and-So's Almanac, and he said it would be a fair, dry, beautiful day, and I knew it was a lie." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

361. Gun wads of all descriptions, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to give notice that I shall ask to have gun wads placed on the free list when the item is reached. They are here in the bill at 10 per cent ad valorem. For years they have never been at less than 20 per cent, and they have never brought in over $300 revenue, but that tariff has been sufficient to keep German wads out. I want to impress on my friend from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] that all business industries everywhere will suffer as those over which he is worrying. Gun wads are manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Co. and the Winchester Arms Co., two of the industries of Connecticut. Let them wince with the rest of us. Further, I want to say that if all the industries of my State are to suffer through free trade, then I hope that we can have some free gun wads from Germany with which to shoot a little game upon which to live. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want to tell my Democratic friend, Mr. DONOVAN, that his hats are not hurt any worse than our shingles.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have sat here since last Tuesday morning listening to the tariff experts on the other side of the aisle, particularly to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I have wondered while listening to the learned arguments of those gentlemen what would happen to the country if the Lord in His wisdom should see fit at some time to remove them from among us. But I have been consoled for my country by recollections of a circumstance which once occurred in a city of my district.

A gentleman living in my district had for years been the yardmaster for a railroad company. His name was Ashley Girardeau, which was pronounced as though spelled "Jerrydo." Early in the spring of one year he decided that he ought to have an increase of salary. So he went to the superintendent of the road and told him he had been with the road a long time and thought his services were very valuable and that he wanted an increase.

The superintendent said to him, "Well, Jerry, we have been thinking of laying off a few people during the summer, and suppose you just take a rest for two or three months and let us see how things go." He says, "All right. I will quit; that is what I will do." He saw his wife that night and told her what had happened. He said, "Susie, I want you to go down to the yard with me early in the morning and I want you to just see them get a train out of those yards. You get up earlier than usual in the morning and get breakfast and go with me and we will just see them do that thing." They got up early and went down and saw that the trains went out as usual. He said, "They can't do it again; that was just an accident." The next morning they went down, and again the trains moved out as usual, and for several mornings the same thing happened. He finally said to her "You come with me and we will visit with the folks up in Jefferson County awhile and then we will come back. They can't keep this thing going without me. They'll find out they can't run this thing without me." They spent the summer visiting his kin, and in the fall they came back and he went down to the yard Everything seemed to be moving smoothly. The day was hot. He did not see anybody but an old one-eyed gray-haired darky hanging around, but he seemed to be a person of some consequence. So he approached him. He said, "Do you stay here?" The old darky said, "Yas, sir; yas, sir." "Did you ever hear of a man by the name of Girardeau who used to be around here? Did you ever know him?" "No, sah," he said; "I didn't zackly know him; but I'se heerd of him. Yas, sir; I'se heerd of Mr. Jerrydo. Yas, sir; I'se show heerd of him, becase I'se got his job." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is a bit presumptuous for me to suggest anything, to offer an amendment even, when one is obliged to stop and think that one has to meet the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], that of his associate in the chair right adjoining him [Mr. HARRISON of New York], and that of the gentleman at the table, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. But possibly we do meet them, or they might comprehend that they erred in finding, as they did, in this particular schedule. It is the last schedule, Schedule N, Sundries, which came late, after several months' work, when possibly they were out of temper and in no state of mind to deliberate as fair men ought to. I am going to claim this, gentlemen, that if the statement I make is true, that the treatment of the subject in hand, the fur-felt hat industry, as they treated it, was not fair treatment, the only way to account for it was that it was too much labor for a human being to perform.

I am probably representing a class of labor which, in my opinion, is treated more cruelly than any other class from beginning to end of this report of the Ways and Means Committee.

But I am going to claim, too, that if this matter had been considered at the beginning of the hearings there is no question as to what the result would have been. You will appreciate my point of view when I tell you that the distinguished chairman of this committee, though campaigning in a strange State, among a strange people, with the natural prejudices of those people against him and his associates in his section of the country, when he went amongst my people practically carried—yes, swept—the State from end to end with his eloquence. How? By the same means that he carries this body whenever he so desires—by his personality. When you think that misfortune or errors may befall you, you have only to look upon that face and you forget them all. [Laughter and applause.]

Unfortunately, I am occupying a position here formerly filled by one of the most noted men of our country. Probably no man ever came out of that State so well known, either favorably or unfavorably [laughter] as my predecessor. At home he said to his people since the election and within a few days that I am a free trader. The distinguished gentleman who is chairman of this committee says to his associates here in this body that the way I was returned and elected was that I accused Mr. Hill of being a free trader. [Laughter.] But that is neither here nor there. This can not affect our people.

The personality of the gentleman from Alabama is what made our people politically go to him. On the 13th day of March of this year he repeated at the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee, in yonder Office Building, what he said to them in Connecticut. This is in his report as chairman, volume 4, page 3861: "Of course," says the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, "of course none is in favor of reducing the tariff if it is going to injure any American industry." That was on the 13th day of March. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the men who are working at this business for a living are already hungry. The gentleman from Alabama has cited the figures as to these hats, but if he had looked a little further the figures would have spoiled his case. I have the census figures here to show that out of the total amount of business in fur-felt and wool-felt hats, fur-felt hats, generally known as felt hats, form only 83½ per cent. The fur-felt hats should never have been classed with the wool-felt hats. They are separate industries. The fur-felt hat industry is carried on under many disadvantages, when you understand that the fur of the rabbit and, in fact, everything that goes to make a fur hat comes from the other side of the ocean, and this side furnishes nothing except the water that comes from the heavens and a little of the spirits to cut the shellac.

We claim that under the present conditions in the hatting industry any reduction in the tariff is going to be a loss to our industry. This is not like the great steel industry, which is located near the source of its raw materials. And if there is a loss it must follow that there will be a gain to some one, for there is no loss without some gains. The gain in this case will go to the workers who pay homage to the British lion and to the coat of arms of the Italian house of Savoy.

The Italians and English are nearer the source of supply of materials. Are you going to help them, and at the same time put a profit into the pockets of the importer, while you do not make it possible for the American consumer to buy a hat one cent cheaper than he has ever purchased it?

There is merit, gentlemen, in the case of the American hatter. His own country is his own market. There is great competition among the hat manufacturers of this country. He has to compete in this country, for in the majority of the great countries of the earth, which are the fields of the exporters of goods other than hats, the people do not wear stiff hats. You could not sell a stiff derby hat in the Far East. The people there wear turbans. The Chinese do not wear the same kind of headgear that is worn in this country. The Russian moujik would not give up his cap for a black or brown stiff hat, while in the South American countries the preference is for lighter headgear of palm leaf, cork, and straw. What chance has the American hatter to expand his trade under a policy of trade expansion? I dare say that the millions of people in the Far East who buy our cotton goods and other manufactured goods have no more use for an American fur felt hat than the Sultan of Sulu has for a red flannel undershirt.

The census statistics now show that we have only eight months' work in the hatting industry each year. According to these figures we have 25,900 people employed in the month of January and in February 19,000, and these are two of the eight months that the plants are supposed to be in operation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should not feel that I had as good a case as I have if the consumer, the American millions who wear derby hats, was going to be able under this change of schedule to get the article one penny cheaper.

Who will get it? Why, the middleman. The committee has changed the schedule so that it will represent about $1.20 a dozen to labor, amounting to 10 cents a hat in labor when the raw material is deducted. Will that 10 cents per hat reach the public? No. If the committee had listened long enough and with patience to get at the facts, they would have rendered justice instead of giving the column of figures that they have in their report.

It would seem from the spirit of things in this House that only one class, and that the agricultural class, was represented here. I want to say to you gentlemen who come from agricultural districts that you have 7,000,000 workers employed in manufacturing in this country. They have made this land the great market that it is. Now, I am speaking for 25,000 workers and their families who are a large unit among the buyers of the products of the farm. Do you wish to cut down their buying power and put good American money into the pockets of the subjects of two foreign princes?

This bill as it is drawn means less revenue, less work for American hat makers, more profit for the middleman, and money for the European that he would get under no other conditions.

You will remember that the agriculturist that owns a place nearest the city has the best market, and because of his location he has the most valuable possession. When you injure the market you are injuring yourself, and you can not afford to do that by any sort of reasoning.

You have heard the gentleman from New York tell that out of 400 farmers in his district 300 owned automobiles. This bespeaks of the greater prosperity of the American farmer during the past few years. The men who work at hat making are not in the automobile class. Many of them live in tenement houses with from 50 to 100 people. [Applause.]

I am not making this appeal for a great big money-bloated industry such as some that have fattened under protection without aiding anyone except the stockholders. I am speaking for an industry that at this very time is suffering from a panacea that is peculiarly all its own. The changing fashions is the ailment that has struck the hardest at the foundations of this industry that feeds and clothes nearly 150,000 people in the United States of America. Motoring, the golf links, and the young idea aping the manners, customs, and clothing of the rich are some of the things that have hurt the business. Added to this the Democratic Party wants to take away a part of the duty which fosters a poor class of workers who are on their last legs, so to speak.

I have here in my hand a book which I have just picked up by the strangest coincidence. It tells of the recent trip to Europe of Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, and he is discussing trade conditions in this country with a fellow passenger. They are both agreed that the fur-felt hat industry in this country is in dire straits. And mind you, gentlemen, this condition exists under the present tariff of 51 per cent.

In these days of civilization, in this day of fair play, I think that we have an opportunity to say a word for the poor man who ought to get from the Democratic Party, if nowhere else, what he is justly entitled to.

All I am asking of you is 10 cents on every American made fur-felt hat. The man who goes to market now to get a hat pays $1.50, $2, $2.50, $3, and $4 for them. If this bill is passed with this schedule unchanged I will wager that you are not going to buy these hats for $1.40, $1.90, $2.40, $2.90, and $3.90.

Before the final vote is taken on this bill I want you to imagine, if you will, the distressing predicament of the workman in Danbury, Conn. Usually a man of family, a skilled mechanic, with years of training, he has perhaps saved enough money to buy a home. Now, in middle life, he finds his trade disappearing in this country. He can not seek other employment because Danbury is a city whose 25,000 inhabitants are absolutely dependent on hat manufacturing, there being no other industry in the town. He is averse to leaving the city to seek employment, because he does not wish to abandon the house he has purchased. He is not earning sufficient to provide the absolute necessities for his family—can not sell his house, because the trade depression has depressed property values in the town, and hardly able to make payments and meet taxes on his home, his bank balance is depleted and rapidly becoming exhausted—his savings of a lifetime are threatened.

With conditions no better than stated, the hat manufacturers are making every effort to work out their own salvation, under the most heart-breaking conditions, and they do not ask the aid of the Government in the form of additional tariff protection. They do request, however, in the fight they are making to recover their lost business that the Government shall not impose a further handicap and burden in the form of a reduced tariff that will invite an influx of foreign-made fur-felt hats.

Are you going to forget the divine word, "Love thy neighbor as thyself"—and in the season of your prosperity forget the skilled mechanic, the hatter? It is in your power to hold up his arms in the hour of his need.

It is simply a question, gentlemen, whether you will give your aid to the workingmen of your own country, or to some other workingmen who live 3,000 miles away and have never seen the Stars and Stripes flying to the breeze over American institutions. Gentlemen this is not a question of revenue, but a matter of patriotism, and I appeal to you. I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Some time ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut is right when he says that I am not in favor of destroying any legitimate industry. But I do not think that the gentleman from Connecticut has much of a case in this instance. The statistics show that the production in this country of goods embraced under this paragraph, according to the census of 1910, was $46,952,000, and the imports for the year 1912 amounted to $875,000. It is readily seen that the amount of imports, as compared to the American consumption, is less than 2 per cent under the existing rate of 51 per cent ad valorem. The rate is a specific one, but the equivalent tax is 51 per cent ad valorem. The importations are less than 2 per cent of the consumption.

Now, the Democratic Party stands for a competitive tax. They have reduced the rate from 51 to 40 per cent. The Treasury expert who made up these figures in this handbook made them up without my supervision. He estimates that the increased imports under this reduction of duty will amount to $125,000, or about a quarter of 1 per cent. Now, even if the imports were doubled, that would only make them about 4 per cent of the American consumption. Gentlemen who stand for protection can very readily say: "We do not want anything to come in." The gentlemen on this side of the House, who stand for a revenue tariff and a competitive tariff, certainly could not complain if the imports, as compared to American consumption, were increased to a total of 4 per cent, being less than 2 per cent now. As I say, the estimate of the Treasury expert indicates that the increased imports will not amount to more than one-quarter of 1 per cent. This shows clearly that, so far as this particular item is concerned, the committee certainly have not been drastic in their action. The only thing I can say is that the gentlemen who are interested in this hat industry have been the most persistent, continual, insistent advocates of maintaining a prohibitive tariff tax in their trade that ever appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of this House.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the gentleman if I have any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

366. Indurated fiber ware and manufactures of pulp, not specially provided for in this section, 25 per cent ad valorem.

[Mr. DONOVAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

367. Jewelry, commonly or commercially so known, valued above 20 cents per dozen pieces; rope, curb, cable, and fancy patterns of chain not exceeding one-half inch in diameter, width, or thickness, valued above 30 cents per yard; and articles valued above 20 cents per dozen pieces designed to be worn on apparel or carried on or about or attached to the person, such as and including buckles, card cases, chains, cigar cases, cigar cutters, cigar holders, cigarette cases, cigarette holders, coin holders, collar, cuff, and dress buttons, combs, match boxes, mesh bags and purses, millinery, military, and hair ornaments, pins, powder cases, stamp cases, vanity cases, and like articles; all the foregoing and parts thereof, finished or partly finished, composed of metal, whether or not enameled, washed, covered, or plated, including rolled gold plate, and whether or not set with precious or semiprecious stones, pearls, cameos, coral, or amber, or with imitation precious stones, 60 per cent ad valorem. Stampings, mesh and other materials of metal, whether or not set with glass or paste, finished or partly finished, separate or in strips or sheets, suitable for use in the manufacture of any of the foregoing articles in this paragraph, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, line 2, after the word "pieces," insert the words "60 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, line 17, after the word "stones," insert the words "or pearls."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, line 18, after the word "stampings," insert the word "galleries."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

369. Laces, lace braids, lace window curtains not specially provided for in this section, coach, carriage, and automobile laces, and all lace articles of whatever material composed; handkerchiefs, napkins, wearing apparel, and all other articles made wholly or in part of lace or of imitation lace of any kind; embroideries, wearing apparel, handkerchiefs, and all other articles or fabrics embroidered in any manner by hand or machinery, whether with a plain or fancy initial or monogram or otherwise, tamboured, appliquéed, or scalloped by hand or machinery; edgings, insertings, galloons, nets, nettings, veils, veilings, neck rufflings, ruchings, tuckings, flouncings, flutings, quillings, ornaments, all the foregoing, of whatever material composed; woven fabrics or articles from which threads have been omitted, drawn, or cut, leaving open spaces in which figures or designs are formed by threads other than the threads of the fabric, and articles made in whole or in part of any of the above materials; all the foregoing, 60 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 93, line 2, after the word "drawn," insert the word "punched."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, line 3, at the end of the line, strike out the comma and insert the words "alone or in combination with the threads of the fabric, not including hemstitching or poke stitching."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there will be a little discussion on this subject, and I will ask the gentleman from Alabama if we can not agree upon some time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that the leather paragraph?

Mr. GARDNER. The leather paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will agree to 15 minutes' debate on the subject, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman's side and 5 minutes by our side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes' time.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman not give us 15 minutes on this side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of 20 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and 5 minutes by myself. It is understood, of course, that this covers the leather proposition.

Mr. GARDNER. I shall want to discuss boots and shoes when we get to the free list, but other leathers now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, it is my intention to discuss the boot and shoe item when we reach the free list. If boots and shoes had been retained on the dutiable list they would have been included with leather in the paragraph which we have just reached.

To-night I shall confine myself to a discussion of the duties on leather. The second largest shoe city in the world, the city of Lynn, is situated in my home county. It is represented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN]. The fourth largest shoe city in the world, the city of Haverhill, is also situated in my home county. I represent Haverhill. Essex County, Mass., is the largest shoe and leather district on earth.

Now, I am obliged to admit that the gentleman who represents the Lynn half of our county [Mr. PHELAN] knows a great deal more than anybody else in this House about boots and shoes, and about the leather schedule. Unfortunately to-night he is suffering from caucus lockjaw and so I bear the burden.

In passing I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to the duty of 10 per cent on glove leather. I am of the opinion that with a duty of 10 per cent on glove leather and with the provision in the free list that leathers in general shall enter free, many importers will invoice glove leathers as dressed kid and goat skins. Although I am not by any means sure that such will be the case, yet such is my opinion. As a matter of fact I telegraphed for information as to this point to a leather manufacturer in Mr. PHELAN'S district, to a leather manufacturer in my own district, and also to the Hon. Richard Young, a former Member of Congress. The answers which I have received contradict each other. I call the attention of the chairman to the matter, in case he should wish later on to consider it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I consulted several manufacturers of gloves in reference to the question of whether "glove leather" was a sufficient designation. One of these gentlemen of whom I asked the question was a former Member of this House and a well-known authority on the subject. He said there could be no question about that designation.

Mr. GARDNER. Still, as a matter of fact, there is a difference of opinion. The former Members of Congress whom the gentleman and I have consulted undoubtedly agree with each other as to the matter. The point is that other manufacturers do not take the same view.

In this bill you have put most leathers on the free list. Probably you desire to make some compensation to the shoe manufacturer for the loss of the duty on boots and shoes. Probably you feel that you are justified in your course because leather is exported in such very great quantities. It is true, of course, that we exported $40,000,000 worth last year, while only $7,000,000 worth was imported. From the Democratic point of view I can understand why you should put upon the free list the kind of leathers we export in quantity. What I do not understand is why you should cut the duty off practically all leathers, whether or not they are of the kinds which are exported. For instance, out of our $40,000,000 leather export, just about one-half is glazed kid. Half of the remainder is sole leather.

On the Democratic theory of lowering duties, I can understand your action on glazed kid and sole leather, but I can not understand why you removed all duties from patent leather and calfskins.

We export a small quantity of patent leather—perhaps to the amount of a million and a half of dollars. We import a trivial amount of patent leather. The fact is that patent leather manufacture in its present form is a comparatively new industry in this country. I doubt whether it has been oversuccessful. Patent leather to-day carries a protective duty equivalent to from 25 to 30 per cent. No one can claim that patent leather is a luxury. Even supposing that the negligible amount of importations indicates too high a rate of duty under the present law, is that any reason for cutting the whole structure away with an axe instead of lowering it with a jackscrew, as your chairman put it?

Now, as to calfskins. I understand that we export a few specialties, but that our great staple lines can not be exported. As a matter of fact, our calfskin leather export amounts to one million and three-quarters dollars' worth annually. A little calfskin leather is imported. The significant matter about calfskin leather is this: We used to be able to sell calfskins in the English markets, but the Germans have come along and driven us out.

There are likely to be serious results if you give the German calfskin manufacturers the free run of our market. Skins for morocco, tanned and unfinished. There are $2,000,000 worth of those skins imported. I do not criticize the Ways and Means Committee for putting them on the free list. As a matter of fact, those skins for morocco, tanned but unfinished, are what we call "India tan." They are raw material for our morocco factories. I doubt whether they compete with any American product of like sort. What I especially criticize is the free admission of calfskin leather and patent leather; perhaps also of sealskin leather, pigskin leather, colt, and kangaroo. I know mighty little about the last-mentioned leathers. Granting that it is right from the Democratic point of view to put leather on the free list, is it fair for you to require these leather manufacturers to purchase their raw materials in a protected market? To be sure, you have put bark tannages on the free list. You have also put indigo on the free list, but there are plenty of articles used in tanning and currying which are not put on the free list. In my district nowadays calfskins are tanned by the chrome process. It does not do the manufacturers the slightest good in the world to take the duty off of tan bark. Bichromates are used on calfskins to-day, bichromates of soda and potash being the largest item in tanning at present.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Of course the duties on bichromates of potash and soda are very much reduced, and as a practical question does the gentleman from Massachusetts know that to-day bichromates are selling cheaper in the United States than they are abroad?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I did not know it; but that would seem to require some explanation from the walking delegate of the husbands' union as to what the duty is retained for. Bichromates at all events are taxed at a rate equivalent to 15 per cent ad valorem. Dyes are largely used in the manufacture of leather. Ordinary dye woods are taxed at three-eighths of a cent a pound. Sulphonated oil is the next largest item, and that is taxed at 15 per cent ad valorem. Coal-tar dyes are taxed at 30 per cent ad valorem. Blue vitriol comes in free. Borax is taxed, bichromate of soda is taxed, sumac comes in free, linseed oil is taxed, sal soda is taxed, sponges are taxed, degras is taxed, sulphuric acid comes in free. Soda sulphite is taxed, bichromate of potash is taxed, soap is taxed, fusel oil is taxed, and sulphonated oil is taxed. So you see that while the upper-leather manufacturers are obliged to purchase in a protected market, you throw wide open to the world the market in which they are obliged to sell.

As I have pointed out to you, the foreigner to-day, even over a duty of 15 per cent on calfskins and over a duty of from 25 to 30 per cent on patent leathers, can send a certain amount of leather into this country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, all Members, after the briefest session since the tariff bill has been under consideration, recognize the futility of any amendment offered here being adopted unless it originates with the Ways and Means Committee, and so I shall withhold submitting any formal amendment covering the leather schedule. The briefest examination of this schedule proves the necessity of an expert, nonpartisan tariff commission to ascertain the difference in the cost of production here and abroad and conditions of manufacture generally in the different industries. Here leathers are reduced from ad valorem duties ranging from 5 to 25 per cent without any data whatever as to cost of production and placed on the free list. All that is at hand is the extent of exportations and importations, and this not as to the respective characters of leather. In fairness to a great industry, where competition is keen and prices are uncontrolled by any artificial agency, I claim that these duties should not be abolished entirely and leather put on the free list.

Considerable mention has been made in this debate from time to time of putting hides on the free list in the Payne Act and the increase in the price of hides that followed. But that was the result of an increasing demand for hides in the world's market and a want of a commensurate supply to meet that demand. Those of us who served here four years ago recall well the efforts of President Taft, as a result of placing hides on the free list, to secure the very lowest reductions in the leather schedule. The leather manufacturers reduced their schedules as a result of this reduction from 30 to 75 per cent in different items. Heavy leather, such as sole and belting leather, was reduced from 20 to 5 per cent ad valorem. As a result of that reduction, the importations of heavy leather have increased immensely, until during the last 12 months they have aggregated $2,000,000, where four years ago they were but $80,000. The manufacturers of heavy leathers will be handicapped if you admit this character of leather free of duty, because the tanning industry is fast developing in Canada, and the Canadian leather manufacturer has the advantage of the native hemlock bark, and not only of the native hemlock bark but of free chemicals which are necessary as a substitute in the tanning of leather. More than that, the committee in their first bill, and I take it that the schedule as found in H. R. 10 was the deliberate judgment of the distinguished majority of the Ways and Means Committee, included a certain character of leather carrying a duty of 15 per cent, namely, kangaroo, sheep, and other skins, but these skins were eliminated in the second bill, which is now before the committee. But in both bills they failed to include patent leather, which has been referred to by my colleague [Mr. GARDNER], and which requires double the amount of labor than that employed in other kinds of upper leather.

Patent leather not only requires the tanning process which is necessary in other leathers, but it requires the japanning or enameling process. Though under the present tariff act that schedule has a tariff the equivalent of about 25 per cent ad valorem, that is all eliminated here. Now, the mere fact that we are exporting large quantities of these leathers is no absolute criterion, I maintain, that the industry is so established that we can compete with the world. There may be exigencies in the commercial world whereby there may be extraordinary demand for one character of leather which the manufacturers of the world may not be able to meet, and this country, being more able perhaps for the time being to produce that character of leather to meet the world demand, would export it for the time being. It is true we have exported one million and a half of patent leathers. But Germany is making fast inroads with their improved machinery into the manufacture of all kinds of leather and competing with the American leather manufacturers in the control of the world's trade. The distinguished chairman said to-night he does not wish to do anything to destroy legitimate industry. But with the cost of labor in Germany one-half of that which is required to produce leather in this country, with improvements going on rapidly in the industry there and in other countries, I claim there is continued need of a duty on leather, and particularly on the highly manufactured leather, such as patent and upper leathers. I ask the gentleman who has this bill in charge why it was that in this industry all tariffs were taken off and the industry exposed to the competition of the world? It is not sufficient to say that there has been large exportations before, because if the labor market is so much lower abroad than here, naturally it will be necessary to meet that by some compensatory tariff when the industry becomes established abroad, and the only available data we have shows that our exports are diminishing already, and those of other countries, particularly Germany, increasing. So, Mr. Chairman, representing a city which produces more leather than any other city in the United States, I feel constrained to raise objection to this radical cut in the schedules, which, while it may be justified, or the industry may be able to adjust itself to the changed duty so far as heavy leathers are concerned, as to the other leathers, places the manufacturer in an unfair position in meeting foreign competition here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the question that is raised as to glove leather, after hearing what the importers and the Treasury experts have to say about it, I am fully satisfied that this language fully describes the leather used for gloves. There is ordinarily no question about this leather, because ordinarily leather that is finished in the rough is not a domestic production, although there may be a small amount of glove leather that is made in this country. But the principal glove leather that is made in this country is a product that is not finished in the rough. The balance of it is an imported article that is not made here at all. I have no serious question in the world as to the effect of this paragraph.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

371. Bags, baskets, belts, satchels, card cases, pocketbooks, jewel boxes, portfolios, and other boxes and cases, made wholly of or in chief value of leather, not jewelry, and manufactures of leather, or of which leather is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section; all the foregoing, whether or not permanently fitted and furnished with traveling, bottle, drinking, dining, or luncheon and similar sets, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, again I am constrained to voice my feeble protest against the passage of this unfair bill, and by reading the following letter from a manufacturing establishment in my district I feel that I am appealing strongly for an amendment to section 371, which should provide at least the same rate of duty as is carried in the Payne Tariff Act:

APRIL 29, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING,
Representative First District, New Jersey.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 8th, in which you want to know the effect of the reduced tariff on our industry, we can see no bright prospects. We have this week had our first serious rebuff, which is only a forerunner of many more to come. We mention the following incident:

In a leading Philadelphia department store, which places orders for fall delivery in April, our representative approached the buyer of a certain department with a request for the usual order, and the answer was, "We have strict orders not to buy anything for future delivery until the tariff question is settled." Then he added: "You can not expect us to buy goods from you, when we will be able to get them so much cheaper from Europe."

The above goods consist of school bags and are now being imported in large quantities under the present tariff.

Very truly,

CAMDEN KNIT GOODS CO., INC.
LOUIS ENGLE, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will offer an amendment that will properly protect this industry.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

372. Gloves, not specially provided for in this section, made wholly or in chief value of leather, whether wholly or partly manufactured, shall pay duty at the following rates, the lengths stated in each case being the extreme length when stretched to their full extent, namely:

373. Men's, women's, or children's "glacé" finish, Schmaschen (of sheep origin), not over 14 inches in length, $1 per dozen pairs; over 14 inches in length, 25 cents per dozen pairs for each additional inch in excess of 14 inches.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in this paragraph relating to "Men's, women's, or children's 'glacé' finish, Schmaschen (of sheep origin), not over 14 inches in length," the term "sheep origin" is new, and I take it that it is intended to take the place of the language formerly used, "lamb or sheep." Has there been any construction to the effect that the language "of sheep origin" covers lamb or sheep gloves? I ask that question because a number of people interested in the trade have asked me in reference to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the present law reads, "Women's or children's glacé finish, Schmaschen (of sheep origin), not over 14 inches in length."

Mr. MANN. The present law reads, "'glacé' finish, of lamb or sheep, not over 15 inches in length." Is that paragraph 455?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Paragraph 454.

Mr. MANN. I have not got that. Yes; paragraph 455 is "Women's or children's glacé finish, lamb or sheep, not over 15 inches in length." That is what I wanted to inquire, whether the term "of sheep origin" covers what is covered in paragraph 455, because this paragraph, I take it, is intended to cover it all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand it covers the whole proposition. It is an imported glove, as a matter of fact. There are no Schmaschen gloves manufactured in this country.

Mr. MANN. The point I was getting at was whether the term "of sheep origin" would cover gloves of lamb origin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should think it would.

Mr. MANN. I make the inquiry because several gentlemen who are interested in the importation of these gloves on a large scale called my attention to this matter, and they were unable to say from the trade term whether that would be included or no. If not, it is quite important, and I did not know whether the Treasury Department had rendered an opinion or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This amendment went to the Treasury Department, and I also talked over this paragraph with some of the leading glove manufacturers of the United States, some of whom are known to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would make an inquiry about this.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have already done so.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether the gentleman has made the inquiry from the Treasury Department as to whether there would be any question that the term "of sheep origin" would include gloves made from lambskin.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I did inquire of a glove manufacturer, who stated that this proposition would cover it. And then, on the other hand, the amendment which has been submitted, changing the classification, has been submitted to the Treasury authorities and no comment made on that language.

Mr. MANN. On the other hand, I will say to the gentleman that several of the largest importers of gloves in Chicago—where they import large quantities—have expressed the opinion to me that it probably would not cover lambskin gloves under the ruling heretofore made. I am sure that the gentleman from Alabama does not want that construction put upon the bill, and if it is necessary to change the language, I would be glad to change it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure that the gentleman understands that Schmaschen was originally supposed to be made from the stillborn lamb, but that there are now some other lambskins used in the manufacture of these gloves, although originally that was not so. The orginal proposition was to cover the other class of gloves. So I am satisfied that the words "of sheep origin" will cover the Schmaschen glove.

Mr. MANN. But if the gentleman will note, in the existing law, paragraph 454, women's or children's glacé finish Schmaschen (of sheep origin) not over 14 inches in length, are $1.25 per dozen pairs, while women's or children's glacé finish lamb or sheep not over 14 inches in length are $2.50 per dozen pairs. The only difference between those is that in one place it says "(of sheep origin) $1.25 per dozen," and in the other it says "lamb or sheep, $2.50 per dozen." I think the first, "Schmaschen (of sheep origin)," probably only includes the stillborn lamb.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It originally did, but subsequently Schmaschen gloves, according to my information, included some leather that was made from other lambskins besides stillborn lambs.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but the present law makes the distinction. In the case where it is made from the skin of stillborn lambs, it says, "of sheep origin." Where it is made of lamb or sheep skins, it says, "lamb or sheep," and the rate is different in the existing law. The question is whether, under the language here, you do not confine your rate to the gloves made from the stillborn lambskins. I wish the gentleman would inquire about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make further inquiries into it; but I will say to the gentleman that I had already discussed the question with a man whom I considered was informed on the glove schedule.

Mr. MANN. The only reason I call it to the attention of the gentleman is that the people who wrote to me about this are as well posted as anybody in the country on the subject. I do not know anything about it, and they were not prepared to say definitely about this, but they were very much afraid of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

377. Harness, saddles, saddlery in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 377, lines 18 and 19, by striking out the words "not specially provided for in this section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "composed wholly or in chief value of leather."

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I submit restores the language of the existing law, and in terms provides for a 20 per cent ad valorem on leather goods such as harness and saddlery, which has been the rate for many years and under which a large business was developed. There seems to be confusion in your bill which I have endeavored to clear by my amendment.

Paragraph 377 provides as follows:

377. Harness, saddles, saddlery in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem.

While on the free-list paragraph 535 reads as follows:

535. All leather not specially provided for in this section and leather board or compressed leather; leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms suitable for conversion into boots or shoes; boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather; leather shoe laces, finished or unfinished; harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather.

Now, there is a possible inconsistency, and my amendment seeks to clear the difficulty by striking out the words in paragraph 377, "not specially provided for in this section," and hereafter I will offer one to paragraph 535, placing a period after the word "unfinished" in line 19 and striking out the words "harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather."

This will completely dispose of any possible confusion and will correct any possible injustice.

I know there is some confusion in the minds of others as to exactly what is the provision of the pending bill, but I have submitted the amendment in this form so that the rates now existing shall continue.

As a reason for the adoption of this amendment I have ventured to submit to the committee, and ask to have read from the Clerk's desk, a letter from one of the leading citizens of my city, Mr. William A. Hardenbergh. He is head of the firm of P. R. L. Hardenbergh & Co., and probably is the leading Democrat of my section. He is at present the Democratic member of the St. Paul police commission and may be selected to head the hosts of the Democracy in the next contest we will have in my city. He is a man of the very highest character, of the broadest intelligence, and highest standing, and I am sure that you will be proud of your leading representative in that part of the country when you shall listen to his letter, and I respectfully commend it to the serious consideration of my Democratic brethren. I have omitted all personal references.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., April 10, 1913.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEVENS: I note that the Ways and Means Committee have placed harness and saddlery on the free list in the tariff bill which they have introduced, and while I know from my experience of the past two years as a minority member of the St. Paul police board that a rank outsider finds it very difficult to help out any of his friends, I am nevertheless writing to you to solicit your good offices even if you are no longer of the dominant party.

When I went over this bill and found that the tariff on most of the schedules from which vast fortunes have been made during the past generation had been reduced, and in the case of saddlery had been entirely removed, it seemed to me that they had picked out our industry because it was so small in volume that it had no friends.

I have, perhaps, as wide an acquaintance with the conditions surrounding this industry as any one man in the country, and I ask you to accept my word for it that during the past 30 years in which I have been connected with it there has not been one single saddlery manufacturer who has retired from his business on a competency, nor is there now any one man engaged in it who might be called rich. With these two facts in mind it seems preposterous to me that only a portion of the protective tariff should be removed from other schedules while on our schedule the present tariff, which only represents the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad, should be entirely abolished.

The saddlery industry has not in the past fattened on a protective tariff, or, in fact, on anything else, and it does seem to me that even with the radical legislation which is now proposed our little industry is being made the goat.

With saddlery on the free list those cities near the Canadian border are going to suffer tremendously from competition from that country, and as far as the Twin Cities are concerned, which, taken together, is the largest saddlery manufacturing center in the United States, it is going to put some of us out of business. The largest saddlery manufacturer in the world is in Winnipeg, and the Canadian houses are already approaching the salesmen of ourselves and neighbors with a view of putting their men into Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana. If we could get into Canada without duty, this would be entirely satisfactory to us, but as it bids fair to be, Canada will dump a tremendous surplus of manufactured stuff into our territory and we will be utterly powerless to strike back.

Under the very best conditions our industry is suffering from the automobile and gas tractor development, and during the past year seven large manufacturers have voluntarily liquidated and gone out of business, and there is a country-wide movement to consolidate those remaining into a less number of units, as with the decreased volume of business the cost of distribution is becoming oppressive, and in every saddlery center in the country the manufacturers are working to cut down the number of houses, either by purchase or consolidation.

Anyone who has observed the growth of motor vehicles and motor tractors must appreciate that our industry is having a hard time, but what we have encountered in this respect is trifling when compared to the results that will follow the placing of our product on the free list. I would like to impress upon you—and if you can consistently bring the matter to the attention of any of your Democratic colleagues I will appreciate it—the one fact that during the past generation there has not been one man who has been made rich in the manufacture of harness, and that Canadian competition is going to seriously affect an industry which is already fighting for its life by reason of the development of power vehicles. I feel that this industry has been selected for slaughter because it is so small, and therefore has but few friends in Washington and its well-being is of interest to but very few people; but to me and my associates in the Twin Cities it is a tremendously vital matter, and I sincerely hope that you may be able to interest some of your Democratic friends so that we may have a good word spoken for us when the consideration of that schedule comes up.

With kindest personal regards and trusting that I have not consumed too much of your time,

Yours, very truly, W. A. HARDENBERGH.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

379. Manufactures of bone, chip, grass, horn, india rubber or gutta-percha, palm leaf, quills, straw, weeds, or whalebone, or of which any of them is the component material of chief value, not otherwise specially provided for in this section, shall be subject to the following rates: India rubber or gutta-percha, 10 per cent ad valorem; palm leaf, 15 per cent ad valorem; bone, chip, horn, quills, and whalebone, 20 per cent ad valorem; grass, straw, and weeds, 25 per cent ad valorem; combs composed wholly of horn or of horn and metal, 25 per cent ad valorem. The terms "grass" and "straw" shall be understood to mean these substances in their natural state, and not the separated fibers thereof.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 95, line 10, after the word "metal," strike out "25 per cent ad valorem" and insert "50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I propose to withhold several amendments to this schedule, for I realize that the gentleman from Alabama is under pressure. It seems to me that this amendment ought to be discussed briefly. In this instance it is proposed to restore the Payne rates on combs composed wholly of horn or horn and metal. There are very few establishments engaged in this industry in the United States. They are all of limited capacity but give employment to a number of people. The product retails at from 5 to 10 cents, and the reduction of this duty threatens the entire industry. It would seem a hardship on the men struggling all these years to manufacture combs of horn to impair or destroy what they have done. What they produce is put on the market so low that it seems almost ridiculous to ask them to sell their commodity any cheaper than now. The influx of foreign combs would not result in reducing the cost price to the consumer. It is almost absurd to think of combs being put on the market at 3 cents or 2 cents. In this case there are three or four manufactories, one or two that have been in business for 60 years, and they say that the business is positively imperiled by the reduction of the duty from 50 to 25 per cent ad valorem.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 5, 1913, at 11 o'clock a. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed Senate concurrent resolution No. 1 for the printing of 6,000 additional copies of House Report No. 1,593, Sixty-second Congress, on the "Concentration of control of money and credit."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
General Assembly, January Session, A. D. 1913.

Senate joint resolution 40.

Resolution requesting Congress to propose to the States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the election of the President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people.

Resolved by this assembly:

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to propose for ratification by the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing the office of presidential elector and substituting a mode of electing a President and a Vice President of the United States by the direct vote of all the electors in the several States, respectively; but providing that in ascertaining the choice of President and of Vice President, made by the electors so voting in all the States, the persons receiving a plurality of the votes so cast in any State for President and for Vice President shall be credited with the votes of that State for such offices; such votes of said State so credited to be the number of votes equivalent to the number of Senators and Representatives to which, at the time of such election, it may be entitled in the Congress.

SEC. 2. The governor is requested to send a certified copy of this resolution, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Passed the Senate April 9, 1913.

Passed the house of representatives April 29, 1913.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, Office of the Secretary, ss:

I, Albert Phillips, secretary of the State of Connecticut and keeper of the seal thereof, and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the General Assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of the resolution requesting Congress to propose to the States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the election of the President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people with the original record of the same now remaining in this office, and have found the said copy to be a correct and complete transcript thereof.

And I further certify that the said original record is a public record of the said State of Connecticut, now remaining in this office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 2d day of May, 1913.

[SEAL.] ALBERT PHILLIPS, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress of the United States to pass the Newlands bill, relating to river regulation.

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to enact during the extra session the Newlands bill (S. 10900) providing for the creation of a board of river regulation, and for the control and beneficial use of flood waters, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to accomplish this end. Also to secure the investigation of the Great Plains irrigation project.

MERLIN HULL,
Speaker of the Assembly.
H. C. MARTIN,
President of the Senate.
A. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
F. M. WYLIE,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a full, true, and correct transcript of senate joint memorial No. 8, of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska, at Juneau, this 19th day of April, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

IN THE SENATE. TERRITORY OF ALASKA, FIRST SESSION.

Senate joint memorial 8, relative to reduction of cable tolls.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent that—

The tolls and charges for the transmission of commercial messages over the United States military telegraph and cable lines in Alaska are considered by the people of Alaska as excessive, and thereby impose upon the people a burdensome tax; and that

It is generally understood throughout the Territory of Alaska that the Government can, without loss or inconvenience, reduce said tolls and charges to a reasonable basis and thereby eliminate the exaction of a profit by the Government at the expense of those whose business requires them to use the Government cable and telegraph lines in Alaska; and that

Your memorialists feel assured that upon a consideration of said tolls and charges the Congress of the United States would find the same to be excessive, and would afford any relief which tends to aid the further development of our Territory: Now, therefore,

We respectfully solicit your honorable bodies to take such action in the matter of the tolls and charges required to be paid for commercial messages over the United States military telegraph and cable lines in Alaska as will most readily, and in the most effective manner, afford the relief sought.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the senate April 8, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house April 17, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a full, true, and correct transcript of senate joint memorial No. 15 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 19th day of April, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate joint memorial 15.

IN THE SENATE, TERRITORY OF ALASKA, FIRST SESSION.

To the honorable the President of the United States and the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas the congressional appropriation for the payment of mileage to members of this legislature amounts to $6,500; and

Whereas payment at 15 cents per mile for the actual number of miles covered by said members in coming to Juneau, Alaska, the capital, and to be traveled by them in returning to their respective homes in Alaska after the close of the session, as fully and accurately set forth in the mileage tables prepared by the governor of the Territory, will exceed said appropriation by $2,267.20: Now, therefore,

We, your memorialists, respectfully pray that the Congress of the United States enact a deficiency appropriation bill covering the said deficiency.

Passed the senate April 10, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

Passed the house April 12, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Territorial Legislature of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY FOR THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, William L. Distin, secretary of the Territory of Alaska, do hereby certify that the annexed copy is a full, true, and correct transcript of senate joint memorial No. 6 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau this 21st day of April, A. D. 1913.

[SEAL.] WM. L. DISTIN,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate joint memorial 6.

IN THE SENATE, TERRITORY OF ALASKA, FIRST SESSION.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the residents and business interests of the town and port of Skagway, Alaska, have for more than 10 years last past been absolutely without a wagon road from said town of Skagway and without means of transportation or travel of any kind, except only over the White Pass & Yukon Railway, to any place outside of the boundaries of said town of Skagway; and

Whereas the business interests and means of travel from said town of Skagway to interior points of Alaska would be greatly benefited and expedited provided a wagon road should be built from said town of Skagway a distance of approximately 18 miles to White Pass Summit, the boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska; and

Whereas such a wagon road so constructed as aforesaid would aid the prospector and miner and be an easy means of driving in cattle and taking in supplies, etc., and not compel the prospector, miner, and shipper of supplies to rely entirely upon the White Pass & Yukon Railway, the only means at present of ingress and egress to and from the said town of Skagway to interior points: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska (the House of Representatives concurring). That we, your memorialists, would pray that an appropriation sufficient to build and construct a wagon road from said town of Skagway to the summit of White Pass, a distance of approximately 18 miles, be made therefor.

Adopted by the senate April 1, 1913.

L. V. RAY,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house April 19, 1913.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of W. H. Harries, commandant of the Minnesota Soldiers' Home, Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against reducing the number of the managers of the National Soldiers' Home to five, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Minnesota Potato Growers and Shippers' Association, remonstrating against potatoes being placed on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Staples, Excelsior, St. Paul, and Duluth, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the so-called income-tax clause of the pending tariff bill, exempting the proceeds of all life insurance policies and all life insurance funds from taxation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., and Washington, D. C., policy holders in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York; of C. S. W. Packard, of Philadelphia, Pa.; of J. E. Caldwell, of Philadelphia, Pa.; of H. A. Norton, of Boston, Mass.; of Charles H. Heath, of Newport, E. H. White of Concord, Frederick W. Ely, of Greenville, E. B. Atherton, M. D., of Nashua, Robert B. Wolf, of Berlin, and Arthur Wright of Keene, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the proposed income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Concord, N. H., and a petition of Alice C. Gilbert, of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the adoption of the clause in the pending tariff bill relating to the importation of aigrettes and feathers, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., praying for the adoption of the proposed provision in the pending sundry civil appropriation bill exempting labor and farmers' organizations from the operation of the antitrust law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of United States, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed provision in the pending sundry civil appropriation bill exempting labor and farmers' organizations from the operation of the antitrust law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Reading, Pa., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on decorated glassware, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRONNA. I have received a large number of petitions signed by citizens of my State and forwarded to me by F. C. Lowry, of New York City, praying for the removal of the tariff on sugar. I do not ask that the petitions be printed in the RECORD, but that the body of one of them be printed and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and the body of one petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the United States Senate (Finance Committee), Washington, D. C.:

Pursuant to the last election sentiment, the undersigned respectfully request a material reduction or the removal of the tariff on sugar, in the interests of the 94,000,000 consumers, including the distributing and manufacturing industries, in which it is an important item. For years the tariff has increased consumers' cost nearly 2 cents per pound, and, operating as a heavy indirect subsidy, encouraged promoters of the domestic sugar industry to float and pay dividends on watered stock. We are entitled to relief from such extortion on a necessary of life. We wish to caution you against accepting too seriously the complaints of these industries, who seek to maintain the privilege of taxing the American consumer for their especial benefit, and beg to submit that evidence shows that a heavy tax on sugar is not justified by conditions relating to the production or refining of sugar in this country. If protection to infant industries were needed, it has been bountifully given; the aim of future legislation should be "the greatest good for the greatest number" A rate equivalent to 20 per cent ad valorem (one-half cent per pound on raw sugar of 96 test) should be the maximum on this, one of the principal articles of daily food. We protest vigorously against a higher rate. The United States is singularly favored with natural and abundant sources of supply, both of cane and beet sugar, that can be produced at a low cost. In consequence, consumers should receive refined sugar cheaper than any nation in the world, and would if it were not for the high tariff which enhances the price.

The question is, Are we to receive the benefit of our natural advantages, or are they to be discriminated against, through a high tariff, for the benefit of the promoters of our domestic beet and cane sugar industry? A high tariff means the latter; a low tariff insures the former.

Mr. GRONNA presented memorials from C. W. Watson, of Fairmont, W. Va., remonstrating against any investigation being made into the labor conditions existing in the Paint Creek district in that State, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from H. F. Easton, vice president of the North Dakota Pharmacy Association, of Tioga, N. Dak., and a memorial of the Builders' Exchange, of Atlanta, Ga., remonstrating against the passage of the sundry civil appropriation bill on account of class legislation, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the International Trade Union, remonstrating against the adoption of the clause in the pending tariff bill relating to news-print paper and pulp, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the legislative committee of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, remonstrating against the importation of cigars from the Philippine Islands free of duty, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of Amalgamated Glass Workers' International Union, No. 28, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on painted and stained glass windows, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of President Ellen F. Pendleton, Prof. Mary Whiton Calkins, Prof. Adeline Belle Hawes, Prof. Emily G. Balch, and other members of the faculty of Wellesley College; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of West Acton; and James Ford Rhodes, Robert H. Richards, and sundry other citizens of Boston, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the repeal of the clause in the Panama Canal act exempting American coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls, which were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented memorials of sundry business firms of Cateechee, Camden, Greenville, Rock Hill, Union, Easley, Cherokee Falls, Columbia, Inman, Spartanburg, Clover, Anderson, and Piedmont, all in the State of South Carolina, and of Augusta, Ga., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on cotton, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Helena, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the closing of the gates of the Panama Canal Exposition on Sundays, which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Mona, Culbertson, Girard, and Sioux Pass, all in the State of Montana, praying that an investigation be made into the prosecution of the publishers of the Appeal to Reason, a Socialist newspaper, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Association of Credit Men of Peoria, Ill., praying for the enactment of certain currency legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. POMERENE. I present memorials from the city council of Cleveland, the city council of Cincinnati, the city council of Toledo, and the city council of Youngstown, in the State of Ohio, relative to the establishment of a proposed Federal telegraph and telephone system. I ask that the memorials be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorials were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the telegraph and telephone are ever-increasing public necessities; and

Whereas these services could be more certainly and more fairly rendered under a system of government ownership of these utilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the council of the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio, That it is the judgment of the council that the time is ripe for the acquisition of these utilities by the Government of the United States, and that the Congress of the United States be urged to take the necessary steps for the establishment of a Federal telegraph and telephone system rendering a local and interstate service like the Post Office Department; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the council send copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives and to the Senators from Ohio and the Representatives from the twentieth and twenty-first districts.

COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI,
OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
Cincinnati, April 28, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions therein contained, I am sending you a certified copy of that part of the minutes of the council of the city of Cincinnati of Tuesday, April 22, which relates to a report of the committee on telegraph, telephone, and conduits.

Respectfully, yours,

ARTHUR ESPY, City Clerk.

Minutes of council of Tuesday, April 22, 1913.

Council now considered a report of the committee on telegraph, telephones, and conduits, as follows:

The committee on telegraph, telephone, and conduits, to which was referred communication from city of Cleveland relative to government ownership of telegraph and telephone system, submit the accompanying resolution and recommend its passage.

Signed: Hubbard F. Reynolds, T. J. Conner, Edward Beigel, Charles A. Aull, Edward B. Imbus, committee.

The accompanying resolution reads as follows:

A resolution relative to public ownership of Federal telephone and telegraph system.

Whereas the telegraph and telephone are ever-increasing public necessities; and

Whereas these services could be more certainly and more fairly rendered under a system of government ownership of these utilities: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the council of the city of Cincinnati, State of Ohio, That it is the judgment of the council that the time is ripe for the acquisition of these utilities by the Government of the United States, and that the Congress of the United States be urged to take the necessary steps for the establishment of a Federal telegraph and telephone system rendering a local and interstate service like the Post Office Department; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of council send copies of this resolution to the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Senators from Ohio and Representatives from the first and second districts.

Mr. Mullen moved that the report be laid upon the table, which was lost by the following vote Mr. Peck was excused from voting on this matter.

Yeas: Messrs. Asmann, Ast, Berning, Cook, Deal, Heilker, Kleemeier, Martin, Mullen, Schneller, Scully, White—12.

Nays: Messrs. Aull, Beigel, Butterworth, Conner, Davis, Dieringer, Eckert, Haberkorn, Howard, Imbus, Knueven, Koch, Meyer, Nusekabel, Reynolds, Sawyer, Willenborg—17.

The question being upon the adoption of the report of the committee, it was adopted by the following vote:

Yeas: Messrs. Ast, Aull, Beigel, Butterworth, Conner, Davis, Dieringer, Eckert, Haberkorn, Howard, Imbus, Knueven, Meyer, Nusekabel, Reynolds, Sawyer, Willenborg—17.

Nays: Messrs. Asmann, Berning, Cook, Deal, Heilker, Kleemeier, Koch, Martin, Mullen, Schneller, Scully, White—12.

COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, STATE OF OHIO, Clerk's Office, City of Cincinnati.

I hereby certify that the foregoing transcript is correctly copied from the books, papers, and journals of the city of Cincinnati, kept under authority and by direction of the council thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my name and affixed the seal of the clerk's office this 28th day of April, in the year 1913.

CITY OF YOUNGSTOWN, OFFICE OF CITY CLERK,
Youngstown, Ohio, April 30, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE, Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By direction of city council I herewith inclose copy of a resolution passed by council at its session April 28.

Respectfully,

M. F. HYLAND, City Clerk.

A resolution declaring the necessity of national ownership of telegraph and telephone systems.

Whereas the telegraph and telephone are ever increasing public necessities; and

Whereas these services could be more certainly and more fairly rendered under a system of Government ownership of these utilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the council of the city of Youngstown, State of Ohio, That it is the judgment of the council that the time is ripe for the acquisition of these utilities by the Government of the United States, and that the Congress of the United States be urged to take the necessary steps for the establishment of a Federal telegraph and telephone system rendering a local and interstate service like the Post Office Department; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of council send copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives, and to the Senators from Ohio and Representatives in Congress from this district.

Passed this 28th day of April, 1913.

SOL S. DAVIS,
President of Council.

Attest:

M. F. HYLAND, Clerk.

Approved.

F. A. HARTENSTEIN, Mayor.

I, M. F. Hyland, clerk of the city council of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed by the council of said city of Youngstown, Ohio.

[SEAL.] M. F. HYLAND, City Clerk.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented a memorial of the Board of Aldermen of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of Schenectady, N. Y., favoring the establishment of a Federal telegraph and telephone system, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Maine, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Joint resolution by Senate and House of Maine Legislature, seventy-sixth session.

Whereas the tariff bill now pending in the National House of Representatives makes reductions in the tariff which seriously affect the products of the land, forests, and manufactories of Maine; and

Whereas in the opinion of the legislature the effect of such bill, if passed in its present form, will be to seriously injure the business of the State, and in effect is an unjust and unfair discrimination against its business interests: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Maine protests against the present rate of reduction in the proposed tariff bill as an unfair and unjust discrimination against the State of Maine and its business interests; And further

Resolved, That we urge upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress that they use their best efforts to secure such modification in the proposed schedule as will put the business interests of this State upon an equal footing with those of all other States affected by the reductions in the tariff schedule; And further

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

CARL E. MILLIKEN, President.
JOHN A. PETERS, Speaker.

IN SENATE CHAMBER, April 12, 1913.

Read and passed in concurrence.

W. E. LAWRY, Secretary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 11, 1913.

Read and passed. Sent up for concurrence.

W. R. ROIX, Clerk.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
STATE OF MAINE,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, J. E. Alexander, secretary of state of the State of Maine, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled with the original thereof as filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Maine, on the 12th day of April, 1913, and that it is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Given under my hand at Augusta, this 14th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1913, and in the one hundred and thirty-seventh year of the independence of the United States of America.

[SEAL.] J. E. ALEXANDER, Secretary of State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine presented a memorial of Cigar Makers' Local Union No. 273, of Rockland, Me., remonstrating against the admission free of duty of cigars from the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Commercial Engraving Co., of Sheboygan, Wis., of the Heitmann Lithograph Co., of Chicago, Ill., and of Stromberg, Allen & Co., of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the proposed reduction of the duty on lithographic products, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 138, Patrons of Husbandry, of Caribou, Me., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on potatoes or potato starch, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Albion, Waterville, Auburn, Farmington, Bar Harbor, Portland, Denmark, Mount Desert, Greenville, Saco, Liberty, Augusta, Bucksport, Houlton, Fort Fairfield, Brunswick, Oakland, Shawmut, Camden, Winthrop, Gardiner, Bangor, Rockland, Norcross, Bethel, Machias, Westbrook, Madison, Livermore Falls, Brewer, Norway, Bath, Calais, Orono, and North Berwick, all in the State of Maine, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the so-called income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill exempting the proceeds of all life insurance policies and all life insurance funds from taxation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Universal Piano Co., of New York, N. Y., and a petition of Kohler & Co., of New York, N. Y., praying that ivory be placed on the free list, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wayne, Me., remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the homestead law, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented memorials of Midway Lodge, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of East Millinocket; of Local Lodge of Androscoggin; and of Local Lodge No. 73, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Kennebec, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the removal of duty on print paper, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. BURLEIGH) presented a memorial of Local Union, International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite, and Paper Mill Workers, of Livermore, Me., remonstrating against placing paper on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, relative to the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing not only for popular election of United States district judges every six years, but also circuit court judges. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK,
Lincoln, Nebr.

Resolution.

Whereas amendments to the Federal Constitution are now pending at Washington, providing for a popular election of United States judges every six years; and

Whereas the responsibility of the courts to the people and the cause of progress is the most imperative need in our present-day legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved by this house, That our Senators and Representatives in Washington are requested to support an amendment providing not only for popular election of United States district judges every six years but also circuit court judges.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house on April 16, 1913.

HENRY C. RICHMOND,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. BURTON presented a memorial of sundry employees of the Heekin Can Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a memorial of sundry citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on lithographic products, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Superior, Wis., landowners in the Isle of Pines, praying that the status of that island be determined and that sovereignty over it be retained by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Superior, Wis., praying for the appointment of a citizen of that State as collector of the ports of Superior and Duluth, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, remonstrating against the proposed reduction of the number of members comprising the board to five, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 66, International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Rhinelander, Wis., remonstrating against the removal of duty from the importation of paper, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Portage, La Crosse, Horicon, Milwaukee, Sparta, and Westfield, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the adoption of that part of the income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill relating to life insurance companies operating upon the mutual plan, not for profit, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Hartford, New Haven, New Britain, Meriden Middletown, Torrington, Waterbury, Stamford, Bridgeport, Winsted, Jewett City, Unionville, and Hazardville, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the adoption of the income-tax provision in the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Turners Falls, Mass., remonstrating against the adoption of the paper schedule in the pending tariff bill, which was referrred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Home Market Club of Boston, Mass., and petitions of sundry citizens of Woburn, Mass., praying for the maintenance of a protective tariff, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Henry Abrahams, secretary of the Central Labor Union, and 1,674 other citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the admission free of duty of cigars from the Philippine Islands, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STONE presented memorials of the Foundry Men's Association, the Citizens' Industrial Association, the manufacturers' membership of the Furniture Board of Trade, the committee on national legislation of the Business Men's League, all of St. Louis; of the Employers' Association of Kansas City, and of the Kansas City Association of Credit Men, of Kansas City, all in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against the adoption of the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill exempting labor unions from the operation of the antitrust law, which were ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRICT COURT IN ARIZONA.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 99) to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona and creating divisions thereof, and I submit a report (No. 31) thereon

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill, which is very short, may be read in full, and then I ask for its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection——

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the request of the Senator from Arizona. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee reports to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the State of Arizona shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Arizona.

SEC. 2. That terms of the district court shall be held in Tucson on the second Tuesdays in January and June; at Tombstone on the second Tuesdays in February and September; at Phoenix on the second Tuesdays in March and October; at Prescott on the second Tuesdays in April and November; and at Globe on the second Tuesdays in May and December. Causes, civil and criminal, may be transferred by the court or judge thereof from any of the aforesaid places where court shall be held in said district to any of the places hereinabove mentioned in said district when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer; and any interlocutory order may be made by the court or judge thereof in any of the hereinabove mentioned places.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona."

INVESTIGATIONS OF BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate resolution 66, submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] on the 24th ultimo. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make investigations of banking and currency matters and to compile and prepare statistics relative thereto such as may be necessary, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the sessions of the Senate or recesses thereof at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic and clerical assistance, or otherwise, as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid for from the contingent fund of the Senate, and the committee is authorized to pay for such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are several amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the amendments had better be stated. I desire to ask the Senator a question; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, before the word "assistance," strike out "and clerical," and after the word "assistance" and the comma insert "at a cost not to exceed $1 a printed page."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 14 and 15, to strike out the words "and binding," and in line 15, before the word "use," to strike out the word "its" and insert "the," and after the word "use" to insert the words "of the committee."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Mississippi or the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency whether or not it is contemplated to have a financial bill prepared and submitted to the Senate or to the other branch of Congress during the present session?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking and Currency has taken no action with regard to the matter that would justify the chairman in stating what the action of the committee will be. It has simply desired to consider the matter and has taken the preliminary steps suggested in the resolution with a view to considering it, leaving the action of the committee open after the matter shall have been considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma, as some of us feel that we ought not to remain here until snow flies, whether or not it is reasonably safe for us to assume that this is a preliminary investigation with a view to considering currency legislation at the next regular session?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I can only speak for myself. I am of opinion that the matter ought to be considered at this session, but the committee has not expressed itself in any way, and I really do not know what attitude it will take when it considers it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is clear to my mind, Mr. President, though I may be wrong about it, that having been called here for the consideration of a great question, that is going to engage the attention of the Senate, I apprehend, for two months at least, it would be unwise for either branch of Congress to take up another great question such as the currency question, which we all know will lead to almost interminable debate. That it should be investigated, that the preliminary work should be done, appeals to me, and I have no objection to the resolution, but I for myself would like to have some kind of assurance, if I could get it, that we are going to devote ourselves assiduously and industriously to the consideration of the tariff question, which to my mind is going to make trouble enough for us during this session and after the session closes, and that it shall not be complicated with this other great question upon which scarcely two men in the country that I meet agree, and which to my mind, if it is taken up, will keep us here until the beginning of the next regular session of Congress.

Now, Mr. President, having made that inquiry, and not having received a very satisfactory reply, I leave the matter with the committee. I am quite willing——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has received a very frank reply.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire is satisfied with the reply, and assumes that the Senator from Oklahoma could not have put it in any more definite form. But I will repeat that I hope the Senator in his enthusiasm and his great desire to legislate on this question, which is an important one, will not hurry it unduly, that he will give the country time to think it over, give Congress time to think it over, give the Chief Executive time to think it over, and see whether or not it may not well be postponed until at least the next session.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply wish to say for myself—I am not on the committee, but, of course, I feel the interest in it that every Senator must feel—that I think the private convenience of Senators should be subordinated to a great public interest if there is such an interest.

There is a very large element of opinion in our business community that this is a matter of urgency, that the present law is one which is liable at any time to cause the country to be plunged into great financial trouble and difficulty, entailing great disaster. I do not profess to be very skilled in that branch, but I listen to those who are very deeply interested in it, and I think that the matter is so important as to require as early attention as it is practicable to give to it. Whether it will be practicable to conclude it at this session I am not prepared to say, but I think, if it be true that our financial system is one which keeps the country in constant peril, then it is one which demands immediate attention and as speedy action as possible.

It may be that the tariff is going to make trouble, not only during its consideration but hereafter, and I am inclined to think that if that be true and we can give any compensatory good, if a compensation is needed, as I am sure it is, considered from the standpoint of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], then we ought to be ready with the conferring of as much good as we can, if that which the Senator from New Hampshire considers as evil is inevitable. Therefore, Mr. President, I have no special sympathy with the idea that it is a matter for Congress to consult its personal convenience rather than the question as to whether or not it is within the power of Congress to accomplish something which may be of great practical good. I am very much of the opinion myself that if Congress does its duty, not as to this question in particular, but as to all the great questions involved in our business here, Senators and Representatives will hereafter have to make up their minds to spend a good part of every year in session, and, in my opinion, the days of short sessions have passed if Congress does its full duty in all the matters where the legislative branch can properly exercise its legitimate and important functions.

I do not know what is the purpose of the committee or of those having some special interest in this branch of legislation, but for myself I will say that, if what these great bankers and men engaged in large business say about the peril which constantly attends us under our present financial system is true, the sooner we can get to the business of trying to provide a remedy for it and a safeguard against it the better.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, when unanimous consent was asked for the consideration of the resolution it was not indicated that amendments had been proposed. I think the resolution had better go over and the proposed amendments be printed as a part of it, so that we may know exactly what we are to consider. I object to the further consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution goes over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw his objection. All that the resolution contemplates is to give this committee stenographic assistance and the right to hold meetings, to have hearings, and to print for its use hearings had before the committee. Nobody has any objection to its consideration. I am, of course, sorry, as is the Senator from Arkansas, that it should have precipitated debate, not upon the subject matter of the resolution at all, but upon other matters; and I hope that the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw his objection and let the resolution be considered. It is of a good deal of importance that the committee should be hearing testimony, investigating, and getting ready for action at a succeeding session of the Senate, whether it does anything at this session or not. I repeat, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection and let the resolution be considered.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the presentation of the objection at this time would prejudice the substantial interests involved, I of course would not insist upon taking advantage of the right to make an individual objection, thereby withdrawing from the Senate the power to consider the resolution, but I do not so understand the situation. The proposed amendments can be printed, and we can better consider the resolution to-morrow morning than we can now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee wants to begin the hearings to-morrow.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will not hurt seriously if the committee do not hold hearings to-morrow, and I must persist in the objection, although I should be very glad to accommodate the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely want to say that this is just exactly the same resolution that has been passed on behalf of every other committee of the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I understood that unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution had been given.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it had been granted, then the objection comes too late.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken in that. Pending the request for unanimous consent I took occasion to address the Chair and to make an inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, as I understood, the Chair had progressed beyond the stage of requesting unanimous consent for consideration, and the Secretary was reading the amendments to the resolution when the Senator from New Hampshire rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The recollection of the Chair is that the Chair inquired whether unanimous consent would be given, and at that point the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] asked for the reading of the resolution that the Senate might know whether or not there would be objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, if that is the fact, though I did not hear it, the point of order is not well taken.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, Mr. George C. Butte has written a very instructive and persuasive article on the Panama Canal tolls question. Although the book is published in Heidelberg, Germany, I gather the impression that the writer is an excellent lawyer and a good American. I ask that the article be published as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether or not the book is copyrighted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are some reports pending before the Senate, and I ask for the regular order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In reply to the query of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I will say that the book does not appear to be copyrighted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I will say that I have the consent of the writer of the article to have it published as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for. The Secretary will read the resolution reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which has been sent to the desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the objection, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has called for the regular order, and reports of committees are in order.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope the Senator from Mississippi, who is always indulgent, will not interpose any objection to this contribution to a very important subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the proper time, I shall not; but I want reports of committees considered, so that we may have them out of the way.

Mr. O'GORMAN. This can not delay the Senator from Mississippi, and I hope he will be as indulgent as he usually is, and withdraw his objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is delaying the Senator from Mississippi right now. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that unanimous-consent requests have in the past generally been made at this particular stage in the proceedings, and I think the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is in order in asking unanimous consent; but if the Senator from Mississippi insists on his objection, then the matter passes over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Senator from Mississippi has the floor and was making a report. The Secretary will state the report.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has stated that he makes no objection to the consideration of the request which I present to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi has called for the regular order and has announced that at the proper time he would make no objection.

Mr. O'GORMAN. When is the proper time, Mr. President? I make that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After the report made by the Senator from Mississippi has been acted upon.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 67. I ask for the consideration of the report, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution reported by the Senator from Mississippi which has been sent to the desk.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 67, submitted by Mr. OWEN April 24, 1913, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk to the Committee on Banking and Currency, whose employment was authorized by resolution of March 17, 1913, be paid at the rate of $3,000 per annum from miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS (S. DOC. NO. 19).

Mr. O'GORMAN. I rene[illegible] my request that the article on the subject of Panama Canal tolls, and to which I have referred, be published as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York requests that a certain document touching upon the subject of Panama Canal tolls be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Rules I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 4, providing for a legislative program during the extra session, and I submit a report (No. 32) thereon. At the request of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], I ask that the resolution and accompanying report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The resolution and report submitted by Mr. OVERMAN from the Committee on Rules this day are as follows:

Senate resolution 4.

1. Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that during the approaching extra session for the immediate revision of the tariff Congress should not only consider and pass comprehensive legislation regarding all the schedules of the tariff, but should also, through the appropriate committees, consider other subjects of needed legislation, to be taken up for final action at the next regular session of Congress.

TARIFF AND TAXATION.

2. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Finance report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether the prices of any farm products in the United States are raised above the international level of prices by the duties now imposed on such products, and if so, what products, and whether such duties on such products can be abolished or materially reduced without injury to American industry, and to what extent. In such inquiry shall be included meats, cheese, wool, sugar, tobacco, wines, citrus fruits, and dried and preserved fruits.

(b) What products now on the dutiable list should be put on the free list.

(c) Whether it is practicable and advisable to change all duties from specific to ad valorem duties.

(d) The average percentage of the duties imposed by the existing tariff, and the average percentage to which it is desirable to reduce the duties imposed under the proposed revision of the tariff, and the maximum and the minimum duties which it is desirable to impose.

(e) Whether it is practicable and desirable to distribute the proposed reduction over a period of four years.

(f) Whether it is practicable and advisable, after making the contemplated reduction in the tariff, to organize an administrative tariff board, which, acting under rules fixed by Congress, shall have the power, either upon its own initiative or upon the initiative of any importer, producer, or consumer, to further inquire into complaints of excessive duties prohibiting or unduly restricting importations, or of diminished duties permitting excessive importations to the prejudice of existing domestic industries and to the injury of the capital or labor employed therein, or of excessive duties prejudicial to domestic consumers, such board to present to the President and to Congress such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

(g) Whether it is practicable and advisable to give such tariff board after full investigation and hearing, the power, with the approval of the President, to make reductions or increases in duties, within certain limitations and under rules prescribed by Congress; and if so, what limitations and rules should be prescribed.

(h) Whether it is practicable and advisable to make such rules and regulations for the action of such a tariff board as will enable the Government to feel its way gradually from a high protective to a revenue basis without readjustments prejudicial both to domestic labor and capital, and without denying to the consumers needed relief from the imposition of excessive taxes upon foreign imports and excessive prices for domestic products.

(i) Whether it is advisable to provide a graduated income tax and a graduated inheritance tax with a view to making up any deficit in revenue caused by a reduction in customs duties, and also with a view to extending the operations of the National Government in cooperation with the States in the improvement of post roads, the regulation of rivers in aid of navigation, irrigation, water-power development, and swamp-land reclamation, and also in cooperation with the States in the advancement of vocational education.

(k) Whether it is practicable and advisable to appoint a budget committee, of which the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the chairmen of the other supply committees shall be members.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

3. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether it is advisable to supplement the existing Sherman Antitrust Act by legislation which will more specifically define restraints of trade, including therein the prevention of unfair competition, stock watering, overcapitalization, excessive size, interlocking directors, and the holding by one corporation of the stock of another.

(b) Whether it is advisable to substitute for the present system of holding companies, by which a corporation organized under the laws of a single State is made the means of federating corporations organized under the laws of other States for the purpose of interstate transportation, a national act for the incorporation of holding companies, under which railway companies organized under the laws of different States may be federated for interstate transportation, such holding companies to be subject in their general conduct to the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(c) Whether it is advisable to organize an interstate trade commission, in which shall be merged the officials, powers, and functions of the Bureau of Corporations, with powers of publicity, investigation, correction, and recommendation regarding corporations engaged in interstate trade similar to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding corporations engaged in interstate transportation, but without the power to fix prices; such interstate trade commission to have the power to aid the courts in the administration of the Sherman Act and other legislation supplementary thereto.

(d) Whether it is advisable to provide for the creation of a board of river regulation which shall bring into cooperation the departments and services of the National Government whose duties in any way relate to waterways in devising and carrying out comprehensive plans for the promotion of interstate commerce by the regulation of river flow, the mitigation of destructive floods, by the promotion of storage above and of bank and levee protection below, the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities, the coordination of rail and water carriers, and the cooperation of the Nation with the States, each within its jurisdiction, in plans and works for the full and, so far as practicable, compensatory development of the rivers for every useful purpose, and the establishment of an ample fund for continuous work during a period of 10 years.

(e) Whether it is practicable and advisable to bring into coordination under the Interstate Commerce Commission the related subjects of interstate transportation, interstate trade, and interstate exchange, by the creation of three boards in such commission, one relating to interstate transportation, one relating to interstate trade, and one relating to interstate exchange, the present Interstate Commerce Commission to constitute the board of interstate transportation, the proposed interstate-trade commission to constitute the board of interstate trade, and the proposed banking commission to constitute the board of interstate exchange, merging into the board of interstate trade the present Bureau of Corporations and merging into the board of interstate exchange the comptroller's office.

INTERSTATE EXCHANGE.

4. Resolved, That the proper Senate committee report as soon as possible during the extra session upon the following question:

(a) Whether it is practicable and advisable to organize under national law in each State a national reserve association, in which the State banks engaged in interstate exchange and complying with the national legislation as to capital and reserves shall be united with the national banks as members, such associations to have the powers of issue relating to emergency currency now enjoyed by the constituent national banks; such associations to have such of the powers proposed by the National Monetary Commission to be conferred upon a central national reserve association as are necessary and advisable; such State associations to have the powers of investigation and correction regarding the affairs of the constituent banks; such State associations to be brought into federation for the protection of interstate exchange and the prevention of bank panics through a national banking commission fairly representative of the different sections of the country, part of which shall be selected by such associations and part by the President of the United States; such national banking commission to have powers of investigation and correction over the State associations, and to report to the President and Congress annually such recommendations as it deems advisable regarding legislation and administration concerning monetary affairs.

PUBLIC LANDS AND NATURAL RESOURCES.

5. Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Public Lands report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) Whether it would be advisable for the National Government to promote the development of Alaska by the construction of a railroad or railroads; and, if so, the probable cost and plans for construction and operation.

(b) Recommendations regarding the protection of our natural resources in timber, coal, iron, and oil against monopolistic control.

(c) The applicability of the land laws of Canada to the conditions of our public domain, and particularly those provisions regarding the grant of the surface to settlers, excluding from the operation of the grant timber, coal, iron, oil, and water-power sites.

MILITARY EXPENSE AND AUXILIARY NAVY.

6. Resolved, That the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

(a) The preparation of a plan for the more efficient administration and cooperation of the Army and Navy and the reduction of the total Army and Navy expense for the next four years to not exceeding $225,000,000 annually, with the aid of a board of Army and Navy officers to be selected by the President.

(b) A plan for the construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing necessary service through the Panama Canal and new routes of commerce to foreign countries through lease to shipping companies; such legislation involving the temporary diminution of the construction of fighting ships and the substitution of auxiliary ships with a view to the organization of a well-proportioned and efficient Navy.

[Senate Report No. 32, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM DURING THE EXTRA SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate resolution 4:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred Senate resolution 4, having considered the same, report the resolution back to the Senate with the recommendation that each subhead contained therein be referred for consideration to the proper committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, to wit:

That all of section 2 except subdivision (k) be referred for consideration to the Committee on Finance.

That subdivision (k) of section 2 of said resolution, which relates to a budget committee, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) of section 3 of said resolution, relating to interstate commerce, be referred for consideration to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That so much of subdivision (d) of section 3 of said resolution as relates to the physical improvement and development of rivers shall be referred for consideration to the Committee on Commerce, and that so much of subdivision (d) of section 3 as relates to the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities and the coordination of rail and water carriers shall be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That subdivision (e) of section 3 of said resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

That section 4 of said resolution, relating to interstate exchange, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That subdivision (a) of section 5 of said resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

That subdivision (b) of section 5 be referred for consideration to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

That subdivision (c) of section 5 be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

That subdivision (a) of section 6 be referred to the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs.

That subdivision (b) of section 6 of said resolution be referred to the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the resolution reported by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] from the Committee on Rules regarding a legislative program be considered. It simply provides for the reference of the different subjects to appropriate committees.

Mr. ROOT. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON TARIFF BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with an amendment House concurrent resolution 7, and I submit a report (No. 33) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 20,000 additional copies of the report of the Ways and Means Committee on House bill 3321—15,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, to be apportioned as follows: Two thousand to the Committee on Ways and Means, 1,000 to the House document room, 12,000 to the House folding room; and 5,000 for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add, after the word "Senate," in line 9, the following:

To be apportioned as follows: Two thousand to the Committee on Finance, 2,000 to the Senate document room, and 2,000 to the Senate folding room.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I recollect rightly, the Senate a few days ago authorized the printing of 4,000 extra copies of the tariff bill for the use of the Senate. That would be the equivalent of about 40 copies for each Senator, if my figures are correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that those copies went to the Senate document room instead of to the folding room, and are there at the call of Senators.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that; but what I was about to suggest is this: If I recall correctly the language of the resolution just reported, it provides that 20,000 copies of the report upon the bill shall be printed. My experience has been that there is a much larger demand for copies of the bill itself than for copies of the report. If I have understood correctly the terms of the resolution, I desire to propose an amendment to the effect that 10,000 additional copies of the bill also shall be printed and placed in the Senate document room for the use of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution, as amended, the following:

That there also be printed 10,000 additional copies of House bill 3321 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it not be wise to defer this printing until the Finance Committee of the Senate gets through with the bill? No doubt there will be a great many changes made in it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The reason I made the suggestion was that the demand is to see the bill as it is passed by the House. I assume that if amendments are put on by the Senate Committee on Finance there will be a reprint of the bill as reported, and there will have to be extra copies of that printed also.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think probably it would be better to wait until the bill has passed the House and has been received by the Senate before we authorize the printing of extra copies. My understanding is that the probabilities are that the bill will pass the House some time during the present week.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of the Senator's suggestion, and I will wait until the bill has actually passed the House before asking for the printing of additional copies.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I would suggest that probably the Finance Committee had better consider how many copies will be needed, and let the request for the number of copies that shall be printed come from that committee. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will withhold his amendment for the present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have already stated that I withdrew the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. OLIVER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KERN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,000 for traveling and other expenses incident to the transfer of the clerks of the various pension agencies to Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADMINISTRATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 77), as follows:

Whereas in the administration of the civil-service laws it has been and now is repeatedly charged that they have been disregarded in the interest of and by the party at the time in power; and

Whereas it is the desire of the Senate to have said laws administered in accordance with the letter and spirit thereof, where that is practicable, and to amend them, if, in their present form, it is impracticable to enforce them according to the tenor thereof; and

Whereas it is necessary to know the real facts relating to the present laws or the administration thereof in order to determine whether there should be new or additional legislation, or what, if any, changes should be made in the present administration thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved, First, that the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor be, and they are each hereby, directed to prepare and present to the Senate of the United States the names of all appointees in each branch or bureau of his department; their addresses at the time of the appointment; the date thereof; the length of residence in the State, Territory, or District to which accredited at the time of said appointment; their politics at the time of said appointment and now; whether in the classified or unclassified service and when so placed; their promotions, if any, and the cause therefor and date thereof; their demotions, if any, and the cause therefor and date thereof; also give copies of any Executive orders which may have been made extending the classified service, together with the dates thereof; also a statement giving the names and addresses and politics of the employees thus included in said classified service by said Executive orders, and a statement as to whether or not they were required to pass any examination before being placed therein; also state what changes, if any, he suggests either in the administration of the present laws or in the enactment of new or additional legislation.

Second, that in order to insure accuracy in said reports, the members of the Cabinet, through the several bureaus or branches of the service under their control, shall require from each appointee a report in writing on blanks prepared for that purpose, over his or her own signature, stating his or her name and address at the time of appointment, date thereof, length of residence in the State, Territory, or District in which accredited at the time of appointment; politics at the time of said appointment and now; whether in the classified or unclassified service and when so placed; the salary at the time of appointment and present salary; promotions, if any, and the cause therefor and date thereof; demotions, if any, and the cause therefor and date thereof; also whether said appointments, promotions, or demotions were the result of examination, Executive order, or other cause, and if so, state the cause.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator in charge of the resolution will agree to one amendment that is very essential if he desires to get at the truth in this investigation. I would ask to have it amended in two places. I can not give the page or the line; but wherever the expression "length of residence in the State" is used, I suggest striking it out and inserting in lieu thereof "length of actual domicile."

The reason for asking this is that residence is not always a question of domicile. There are persons in the departments here in Washington that are charged to States in which they have never had any actual domicile. Perhaps the father or the grandfather of the person at one time lived in the State and accepted a position in the city of Washington as a resident of that State, and his children and children's children have been accredited to that State, although they have never been there. It may be that under a fiction of law they may be regarded as residents if the parent still claims a residence in the State, although accepting a life office out of the State and with no intention of ever returning to it. But if we wish to get at the real facts in the case, to know whether or not these appointments have been properly accredited to the States, we ought to ascertain the actual domicile in the State and not leave the matter to a question simply of residence.

I make the suggestion with the hope that it will be accepted, so that we may get the facts before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I appreciate the force of the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota, and I believe it to be a wise one. I wish to say that I have no desire to do anything save to get at the facts in this matter, and I have tried to frame the resolution with that end in view. I have no doubt that after it is taken up and considered by the committee, and later by the Senate, there will be other suggestions made, and I shall be very happy to receive them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if his proposition is to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment?

Mr. POMERENE. That was my request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly have no objection to that. I do not want to have it considered this morning, however.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; I do not ask that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, PORT OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 76), as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate all papers and other information in his possession or in the possession of the Treasury Department relating to the demand of the Secretary of the Treasury for the resignation of Chester W. Hill, collector of customs of the port of Philadelphia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that the resolution lie over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

THE DEMOCRACY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN (S. DOC. NO. 18).

Mr. ROOT. I ask unanimous consent that an address delivered to the students of the Boston University School of Law on the 14th of March last by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], entitled "The Democracy of Abraham Lincoln," be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Virginia if this bill is identical with the bill that was passed at the last session?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is, with one small exception, in respect of the governors of soldiers' homes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I apprehend there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill; and I suggest to the Senator that he might ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, it having been read and having passed the Senate in the same terms heretofore.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that it was my purpose to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] wishes to address the Senate, and has given notice to that effect. With the appropriation bill now before the Senate, I am very glad to let it be temporarily laid aside to enable that Senator to proceed with the speech which he gave notice he would desire to make to-day.

Mr. WORKS. I thank the Senator from Virginia for his courtesy in allowing the appropriation bill to be laid aside temporarily on my account.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Sherman antitrust law has been in force now for over 22 years. It was intended, doubtless, to prevent the accumulation of large fortunes in the hands of a few by the oppression of the smaller lines of business by the larger. Its ostensible object was to maintain competition and to prevent contracts and combinations in restraint of trade. It has effected neither the one nor the other. As a practical remedy it has been a complete failure. Its object was wholesome and beneficent, but such legislation and efforts to enforce it do not reach the evils which result in these unlawful contracts and overpowering combinations of wealth. It simply scratches the surface of the evils of selfishness, greed, and avarice so largely ingrained in human nature, and which so almost wholly rule and govern the actions of men in business transactions. The fear of the law and the punishment which may result from it may, in individual instances, prevent the more timid or the more law-abiding from entering into unlawful and injurious combinations, just as individuals may by the same influence be prevented from committing murder or other crimes. But men can not be made honest or unselfish by law. Something greater and higher than this is necessary to prevent men from wronging their fellow men. In the effort to amass wealth they forget the rights of others and trample them under foot. They exact long hours of labor from their underpaid and underfed employees and the highest prices from their customers. Immense fortunes are amassed by the most cruel and inhuman injustice to thousands and thousands who labor for the simple necessaries of life. They begin wrong in this respect and continue in that way to the end. Their children are educated to be selfish. The one thing uppermost in mind in the education of the young is to enable them to succeed materially and to make and accumulate money. The good which they might do with their education to their kind is in most cases unthought of. Their success in future life is judged by the money they make and save, and not by the good they have done their fellow men.

It seems to be human nature to seek and strive for the acquisition of more of this world's goods. Where it comes from or who may be injured or deprived of his rights by its getting is, with a good many people, a matter of no consequence. From the cradle to the grave man is taught, and practices, this rule of selfishness which has brought sorrow to thousands and thousands of people. The accumulation of the millions of dollars now resting in the hands of a comparatively few people in this country has, in the main, been accomplished through the toil of the many underpaid employees who are still struggling on for a mere existence. Investigations have been going on, notably in the great city of Chicago, to determine the wages paid, especially to women and girls, for their labor, and testimony has been taken to determine whether such an employee can live on $8 a week. With them it is not a question of the accumulation of money. That is not thought of. It is only a question of existence. Incongruous as it may seem, the distinguished gentlemen who carry on these investigations and the witnesses who are called upon to testify often spend more for one meal than the weekly allowances of many such employees. Thousands of these unfortunates are not paid even $8 a week. Indeed, the evidence tends to show, and I think it is a fact, that in this country the average wage for such employees does not exceed $5 a week. Take, for example, the department stores throughout the country. What I have said about the average wages paid applies to that industry. Women and girls labor for long hours for wages upon which it is almost impossible for them to subsist, while many of the proprietors of such establishments grow rich in money if not in good deeds. If any attempt is made to reduce the hours of labor of such employees or to increase their wages, the employers rise up as one man and declare that the wages are sufficient and the hours reasonable, and that to reduce them will ruin their business; and while we are passing laws and making long speeches about contracts and combinations in restraint of trade the injustice of the employers toward the helpless employees receives but scant attention.

In the adjustment and payment of wages women and children are the greatest sufferers. A woman equally competent with a man, who does equally good and efficient service, can not command the same wages a man receives. This is so not only in the management of private corporations, but the same discrimination is made, I am sorry to say, in public employment. What are we to do, then, to remedy these pressing evils? First, stringent laws adequately enforced must be provided to exclude vicious, ignorant, and otherwise objectionable immigrants. Second, the livelihood and independence of citizens already here must be protected by securing to them reasonable wages and hours of labor. Third, the National Government must regulate both prices and wages of corporations and individuals doing an interstate business. Fourth, these laws must be supplemented by State laws of a like kind regulating prices, wages to be paid, and hours of labor.

The future prosperity of this country and the perpetuation of its institutions depend in a large measure upon maintaining the prosperity and independence of the wage earners. Of late years we have been fast falling into an unfortunate division of the people into classes. The laboring man has accepted his position in one class, I am sorry to say, and the employer and so-called ruling class of the country are set over against him. Nothing could be more unfortunate. There should be no classes in a free Republic like ours. Every man should be equal with every other man, no matter what his calling may be. The ruling class in this country is the money class. Wealth and power and position are arrayed against the men and women who toil for a livelihood. They look upon themselves as superiors to what they are pleased to call the "lower classes."

The effective way to overcome this evil is to bring these classes nearer to an equality. This can be done only by elevating the station of the wage earners and by curbing the power of the employer class. No better way occurs to my mind to accomplish this result, so far as the making of laws is concerned, than regulation of prices, wages, and hours of labor. There is something wrong in the economy of things when the employer can live in luxury and enjoy unlimited wealth, while the country is speculating upon the question as to how low a wage is sufficient to maintain the wage earner with the necessaries of life. Acknowledging to the fullest extent the power, capacity, and ability of one man to earn and save money to a greater extent than another, this does not account for the differences in station between the employer and the employee. Many of the skilled wage earners who are making a bare living for themselves and their families are just as capable of earning and amassing wealth as their employer. There is something else besides capacity and earning power which makes the great difference between the two. Sometimes it is opportunity, but that alone can not account for it. What is it, then, that makes this enormous difference between the man who rolls in exorbitant and useless wealth and the equally capable, honest, and efficient man who toils day in and day out for a mere subsistence? There must be something radically wrong in the laws and the sentiments of a country that will permit this distressing state of inequality between men who are equal with each other by the fundamental laws of the country.

But, Mr. President, something more than the making of laws is necessary to wipe out the class lines that are dividing our people. We must learn to know each other better and to understand, appreciate, and sympathize with the trials, the problems, the sorrows, and afflictions of all classes, and, above all things, to see the good that is in all men, and to strive to make all men and all women understand and appreciate and to strive to cultivate the good that is within themselves. This higher duty that rests upon each one of us was brought forcibly to my mind in an Easter Day editorial in the Philadelphia Times. It was a sermon in itself, that I wish all men might read and practice its precepts. I give it here in full, because of the lesson it teaches:

"WHO SHALL ROLL US AWAY THE STONE?"

"And they said among themselves, 'Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher? And when they looked they saw that the stone was rolled away.' (Mark xvi, 3–4.)"

What could be more commonpl ce than a sordid boarding house managed by a cheating landlady, who is assisted by a sloven who is also a social outcast? Who could be more ordinary than the patrons—the painted lady, the shrew, the snob, the bully, the man of the world, the coward, the hussy, the sneak?

Into these meanest of surroundings and among these meanest of people comes the passer-by. He rents the back room on the third floor, associates with the motley lodgers. A change takes place. The influence of the stranger underneath the troubled roof touches every life. He is first scorned, then ridiculed, then trusted and loved.

He does not preach. He expounds no creed. He never mentions himself. He dresses as becomes a man of modest purse and quiet disposition; his bearing is that of gracious dignity; his voice is gentle but searching, betraying great strength of character. His knowledge of men is penetrating, going through the weaknesses and sins and back of them to the noble, the upright, the generous, the saving quality that every human being has. Here is the theme.

The passer-by accomplishes the reformation of the lodgers by his appeal to their better nature—not a verbal appeal, but a silent appeal, in which he recognizes the divinity within them, the real behind the false, the man beneath the shell. More than merely recognizing the good within each of the despicable characters, he serves that good. His treatment of the hussy as a lady makes her aspire to be one; his confidence in the integrity of the sneak begets the quality he recognizes; his belief in the purity of the sloven resolves her to be pure; his salutation of the real and true in the painted lady shows her the greater beauty of genuineness.

He lived a life of service, of unselfishness, but it was service rendered to—

"whatesover things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report.

And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher? And when they looked they saw the stone was rolled away."

The passer-by who takes the back room on the third floor is the Savior of men. He it is whose appeal to the better self rolls away the stone while learned savants are discussing the means of removing it by formulas, or even questioning if it can be rolled away at all.

Christ it was who set the example. His whole life on earth was service; his whole appeal was to the better self. He delivered no lectures, gave no dogmas, outlined no creed. "Go; thy faith has made thee whole," is the burden of his teaching. He rebuked not the harlot, but those who had contributed to her downfall and sought to remind her ever of her condition he denounced. It had been a world of selfishness; Christ set a new example of service.

This golden thread runs through all literature, art, music, and history. It is the only golden thread we have in the grimy garment that clothes the world.

It is the theme in the quest of the Holy Grail; by contemplating the great stone face we unconsciously grow like our ideal.

The good bishop declared his faith in the better self of the galley slave, and gave us Jean Valjean, mounting toward God upon the stepping stones of his dead self.

Parsifal, Mary of Magdala, The Servant in the House, The Message from Mars tell the same story. Always it is that of service or loyalty to one's better self and the recognition of whatever there is of good in others.

"Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher?"

President Woodrow Wilson, during his work as governor of New Jersey, said:

"It is safe to take the advice and counsel of the common man. He understands life. He knows what it means to be close to the people. He understands what the people need, because he is one of them himself and feels what they feel. He is in the current, and he knows the current and feels it and understands it better than the man who stands on the bank.

"I have noticed that since I was inaugurated governor of New Jersey, that when men come before me on hearings on matters of legislation most of them know the legislation only as it affects them or their business. They don't know anything about the legislation as it affects the entire community. Now, these are not the men to depend on for advice in framing legislation. What we need is men who are interested in legislation for the general people.

"I noticed in my campaign in New Jersey that when I spoke to a crowd of workingmen—the men who are on the make—I could get along faster with my speech than when I addressed men of leisure. The former understood at once what I was telling them, while I felt when addressing the latter that I had to explain to them the rudiments of what I was telling them. There you have the difference."

This proves Woodrow Wilson a leader of men in the noblest sense of that word. He did not discover any truth. The truth of all ages merely discovered him.

Christ picked his disciples from the humble workingmen because they understood. He spoke from the hillside to the multitude in simple words, because his message was to humanity and the heart of things. Back even of Christianity, in other religions, we are taught the same lesson.

Buddah had to escape, so runs the story of that "heathen" faith, from the thrall of loyalty and become a menial that he might save the people and preach the true gospel. Tolstoi learned the lesson and wore the garb and lived the life of a peasant. Victor Hugo, the most inspired interpreter of democracy, sought the ranks of labor to get the lesson he would impart to others. When Millet put on canvas the beauty of the sky at evening and depicted the better self returning thanks to its Maker, it is with the common people in the field that we bow our heads in worship, and with them we hear the music of the angels.

From the loins of the common people have sprung the leaders of all nations, the master minds of all times, the directing hands in every crisis. This is the lesson needed to-day.

"Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher?"

Not the church as it is to-day, neither the political parties, but service of the better self, the passer-by who is the type of the common man.

The world does not need more wealth; religion does not need more churches; humanity does not need more creeds and parties. A guidebook is not scenery. A cookbook is not nourishment. A fashion plate does not protect against the elements.

Why do we have socialism? Because it is the solution of the evils that canker our industrial system? No. It is merely a protest, a groping for a solution, a cry in the night. Nay, more. It is an indictment of the church as the church is; an exposure of the thing we set up and call democracy.

Socialism appeals to man only because it promises equality. Yet equality is what Christ taught, and equality is what democratic institutions should establish. The workingman is not irreligious—quite the contrary. But why must he go to the lodge room, the labor union, or the saloon in order to find equality? Why the social settlements, the charitable organizations, the Salvation Army?

"Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher" of child labor, of the dark and disease-infected tenement houses, of the overcrowded fire traps where men, women, and little children must work for a pittance in order to exist?

"Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher" of women forced to prostitution by poverty, that worst of poverty known as profitable business, a poverty that is based on an inadequate wage system, in order that those higher up may live in luxury?

"Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher" that contains children wasted by disease, perishing for want of pure water, pure air, pure food, and God's sunlight—four things that should be most free, yet four things that are most rare in our industrial centers?

Has the frocked minister and the vested choir who entertain the stylishly clad congregation to-day, while the automobiles and carriages await outside, any message to furnish concerning evils of child labor, sweatshop conditions, the housing problems, starvation wages, the scarlet woman? Do they offer any solution of the wrong that makes it possible for the granaries that dot the prairies to be filled with wheat while thousands form bread lines in our cities?

Easter Sunday! And we turn our backs upon the poor because a system of our making and toleration has made them poor and keeps them poor. We scorn the ignorant who have been deprived of education because our system has forced them to spend 12 hours a day in hard labor in order to live. We hold in contempt the criminal and harlot, both by-products of our democracy and our Christianity. We forget the sick and afflicted and, arraying ourselves in purple and fine linen and frock coats and hobble skirts, traverse the peacock alleys in our tabernacles and thumb the gilt-edged prayer book—all to what purpose?

To worship Him who was a carpenter's son and rode into Jerusalem upon an ass's colt, who forgave the prostitute, drove out money changers from the temple, and preferred to associate with fishermen? To Him who gave a life of service and bade his disciples to do likewise?

No. We go through the ritual and genuflexions and make a little larger contribution to the plate as a celebration over the fact that Lent is over, because on Monday we may throw off even the guise of service in His name and openly play the shrew, the snob, the bully, the man of the world, the cheat, the coward, the hussy, and the sneak.

"And they said among themselves, 'Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher?' And when they looked they saw the stone was rolled away."

The power of service, the love for the common man, had rolled it away.

Does Easter mean this to you? Is it a resurrection of your better self?

Will this Easter cause any Hugo, Tolstoi, or Lincoln to gaze out into the future and, by the eye of faith and dedication of himself—another passer-by on the third floor back—to see the day—

"When all men's good shall be every man's rule, and universal peace lie like a shaft of light across the land and light the lane of beams athwart the sea through all the circle of the golden year?"

Mr. President, even the charities of the present day have become commercialized. They are carried on as a business. They are doing more, perhaps, than almost any other influence to make this Nation a country of mendicants and beggars. Take a concrete example: One of the millionaires of the day conceived that an easy and convenient way of ridding himself of some of his useless and burdensome millions and at the same time exalting himself would be the giving away of public-library buildings. They are always distinguished by having his name attached to them. These libraries have been constructed in cities and towns without number all over the country. These municipalities have made themselves the objects of charity, and more of them are begging for like favors. Any self-respecting community should be ashamed to accept charity of this kind under any circumstances. Much more should they refuse to accept it as coming from such a source. As a matter of simple justice and right the money thus accumulated belongs not to the dispenser of these charities but to the men, women, and children whose underpaid toil accumulated the fund.

The extent to which this idea of commercializing charity has gone is well exemplified in a bill which passed one House of Congress at the last session entitled "A bill to incorporate the Rockefeller Foundation." It is a marvelous thing that the idea of incorporating such an institution for charitable or educational purposes could have been considered by Congress for a moment. The trustees were named in the bill and included John D. Rockefeller and John D. Rockefeller, jr. It is perfectly understood that the money to be devoted to the carrying out of the objects of this corporation will be the money of Mr. Rockefeller, accumulated through the Standard Oil Co. So Congress is putting itself in the attitude of incorporating a company by law to dispense the millions accumulated by the Standard Oil Co., not alone for purposes of charity, but for the purpose of educating the people of the country. The bill provides:

That the object of the said corporation shall be to promote the well-being and to advance the civilization of the people of the United States and its Territories and possessions and of foreign lands in the acquisition and dissemination of knowledge; in the prevention and relief of suffering; and in the promotion, by eleemosynary and philanthropic means, of any and all of the elements of human progress.

Just think for a moment of the extent to which these millions are to be used to educate the public mind. One of its objects is to disseminate knowledge. Another is to promote any and all of the elements of human progress. The bill further provides—

That for the promotion of such objects the said corporation shall have power to establish, maintain, and endow, or to aid others, whether individuals, associations, or corporations, to establish, maintain, and endow institutions and other agencies for carrying on said objects, and any of them; to purchase, hold, sell, and convey real estate necessary for the said corporate objects, and to erect, improve, enlarge, and equip buildings or other structures necessary or convenient for said objects, or any of them, and to acquire, make, and furnish all necessary or convenient apparatus and other accessories; to employ and aid others to employ teachers, lecturers, assistants, and agents; to donate to any individual, association, or corporation engaged in similar work, money or property, real or personal, which shall at any time be held by the said corporation hereby constituted, subject to the terms of any gift, grant, bequest, or devise by which the said corporation shall have received the same.

The enormous amount of money allowed to be expended for these purposes may be gathered from a proviso of the bill, as follows:

That the total amount of property held at any one time, including that which is held absolutely as well as that which is held in trust, shall not exceed the value of $100,000,000, exclusive of increases in the value of property subsequent to its receipt by said corporation.

It must be understood in connection with this proviso that it does not limit the amount of money which may be used or controlled by the corporation for the purposes mentioned in the bill, or the amount of property which it may vest in other corporations or persons under such conditions as it may impose, which may run into many hundreds of millions of dollars, but only limits the amount of property in value which the corporation may hold at any one time, and it carefully excludes the increase of value after the property is acquired, which may run into many millions. The bill provides specifically for the right of the corporation to convey property to other persons or corporations, as follows:

To donate to any individual, association, or corporation engaged in similar work, money or property, real or personal, which shall at any time be held by said corporation hereby constituted, subject to the terms of any gift, grant, bequest, or devise by which the said corporation shall have received the same.

So we are asked to enact a law that will to a great extent vest in this great corporation the power to educate and direct the sentiment of the people of the country, as it may see fit, with money accumulated by criminal means. In other words, we are proposing to "farm out" to John D. Rockefeller and his associates the right and power to educate the people of the country. The extent to which this may be carried out is practically unlimited. The corporations and institutions of learning which may be established throughout the country in the hands of people who will be subservient to the interests and views of Mr. Rockefeller and his associates are without number or limitation.

We do not want our children to be taught the ways nor the methods of John D. Rockefeller or his kind, nor to be generous with ill-gotten gains, nor to touch, handle, or profit by gold that should blister the fingers of the man who has accumulated it by extortion, oppression, and crime, and is now attempting to rid himself of it by giving it away, nor to become the receivers of stolen goods in the name and under the guise of charity.

The corporation itself may not hold property worth more than a hundred million dollars at any one time, but it may control in the hands of others an unlimited amount. In addition to this, the corporation is authorized, after 50 years, to distribute this vast fund, to whom is not provided, and all personal property and funds of the corporation are made free from taxation by the United States or any Territory or District thereof; and in some of the States where property used for educational purposes is not taxable the whole of the property, real as well as personal, will be exempt from taxation.

Mr. President, I have said that in its practical results, as a protection to the people, the antitrust act has proved a failure. I desire to reiterate and emphasize that statement. It provides as follows:

SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract, or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The first section of the act forbids only contracts, combinations in the form of trusts, or otherwise, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. It does not make criminal any act of one individual or corporation against another, however oppressive or injurious, although the specific wrongful act in itself may be in restraint of trade or commerce. Such wrongful acts, that should be themselves made criminal, may be proved only to establish the ultimate fact of an unlawful contract, combination, or conspiracy. If this ultimate fact is not established, the wrongful acts committed in restraint of trade must go unpunished.

The second section is subject to the same criticism. It is directed wholly against monopolies and not against acts of wrong or oppression, however much or how directly such acts tend to restrain trade or commerce. The wrongful acts are not an offense against the statute and proof of them can be made only to establish the ultimate fact of a monopoly or attempt or conspiracy to establish a monopoly. The acts themselves, some of which may be directed at one person or corporation and some at another, are not punishable under this section. There can be no doubt that the sole object and purpose of the act was to prevent contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade and nothing else. It was not intended to and does not forbid or render criminal specific acts in restraint of trade or commerce. This is just as true of the section against monopolies as it is of the other. In the Standard Oil case (221 U. S., 1) the Supreme Court said:

There can be no doubt that the sole subject with which the first section deals is restraint of trade, as therein contemplated, and that the attempt to monopolize and monopolization is the subject with which the second section is concerned.

The court might have gone further and said, "And the only offense against the statute by its very terms is the contracting, combining, conspiring, or monopolizing to restrain trade." Contracts in restraint of trade were regarded, at common law, as unlawful as against public policy. Monopolies by individuals were not considered or prohibited. Such monopolies as were known in earlier days were created by act of the sovereign power. In these later times a king's patent is not necessary to create a monopoly. They are created by a power greater than that of kings. In England monopolies by individuals were not forbidden, but specific wrongful acts, engrossing, forestalling, and so forth, by which one person could secure to himself property, the subject of trade, to the exclusion of others, were provided against.

In the Standard Oil case, already cited, the court construed the second section against monopolies as only supplementary to and in aid of the first against contracts, and so forth, in restraint of trade. It is said:

And a consideration of the text of the second section serves to establish that it was intended to supplement the first and to make sure that by no possible guise could the public policy embodied in the first section be frustrated or evaded.

The court says further:

Undoubtedly the words "to monopolize" and "monopolize," as used in the section, reach every act bringing about the prohibited results. The ambiguity, if any, is involved in determining what is intended by monopolize. But this ambiguity is readily dispelled in the light of the previous history of the law of restraint of trade, to which we have referred, and the indication which it gives of the practical evolution, by which monopoly, and the acts which produce the same result as monopoly—that is, an undue restraint of the course of trade—all came to be spoken of as and to be, indeed, synonymous with restraint of trade. In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section—that is, restraints of trade—by any attempts to monopolize, or monopolization thereof, even although the acts by which such results are attempted to be brought about or are brought about be not embraced within the general enumeration of the first section. And, of course, when the second section is thus harmonized with and made, as it was intended to be, the complement of the first, it becomes obvious that the criteria to be resorted to in any given case, for the purpose of ascertaining whether violations of the section have been committed, is the rule of reason, guided by the established law and by the plain duty to enforce the prohibitions of the act, and thus the public policy, which its restrictions were obviously enacted to subserve. And it is worthy of observation, as we have previously remarked concerning the common law, that although the statute, by the comprehensiveness of the enumerations embodied in both the first and second sections, makes it certain that its purpose was to prevent undue restraints of every kind or nature, nevertheless, by the omission of any direct prohibition against monopoly in the concrete, it indicates a consciousness that the freedom of the individual right to contract, when not unduly or improperly exercised, was the most efficient means for the prevention of monopoly, since the operation of the centrifugal and centripetal forces resulting from the right to freely contract was the means by which monopoly would be inevitably prevented, if no extraneous or sovereign power imposed it and no right to make unlawful contracts having a monopolistic tendency were permitted. In other words, that freedom to contract was the essence of freedom from undue restraint on the right to contract.

Thus it appears that the only things forbidden by the statute are contracts, combinations, conspiracies, and monopolies in restraint of trade. When the court came to consider the remedy to be applied in the Standard Oil case the fact that the two sections of the statute had but one object in view was thus further emphasized:

In applying remedies for this purpose, however, the fact must not be overlooked that injury to the public by the prevention of an undue restraint on or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statute rest, and, moreover, that one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property.

And the decree of the court below, which was affirmed, proceeded upon the same theory and construction of the statute. After reviewing the contracts, conspiracies, combinations, and monopolies constituting the gravamen of the offense in that case the Supreme Court said:

So far as the owners of the stock of the subsidiary corporations and the corporations themselves were concerned after the stock had been transferred, section 6 of the decree enjoined them from in any way conspiring or combining to violate the act or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize in virtue of their ownership of the stock transferred to them, and prohibited all agreements between the subsidiary corporations or other stockholders in the future tending to produce or bring about further violations of the act.

Still further, in dealing with the nature and extent of the acts done necessary to bring it within the inhibitions of the statute, the court said:

We say this since it does not necessarily follow because an illegal restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize or a monopolization resulted from the combination and the transfer of the stocks of the subsidiary corporations to the New Jersey corporation that a like restraint or attempt to monopolize or monopolization would necessarily arise from agreements between one or more of the subsidiary corporations after the transfer of the stock by the New Jersey corporation. For illustration, take the pipe lines. By the effect of the transfer of the stock the pipe lines would come under the control of various corporations, instead of being subjected to a uniform control. If various corporations owning the lines determined in the public interests to so combine as to make a continuous line, such agreement or combination would not be repugnant to the act, and yet it might be restrained by the decree.

As another example, take the Union Tank Line Co., one of the subsidiary corporations, the owner practically of all the tank cars in use by the combination. If no possibility existed of agreements for the distribution of these cars among the subsidiary corporations the most serious detriment to the public interest might result. Conceding the merit, abstractly considered, of these contentions, they are irrelevant. We so think, since we construe the sixth paragraph of the decree not as depriving the stockholders or the corporations, after the dissolution of the combinations, of the power to make normal and lawful contracts or agreements, but as restraining them from, by any device whatever, re-creating, directly or indirectly, the illegal combination which the decree dissolved.

Mr. President, what was the remedy applied or attempted to be applied in the case? It was an attempt to annul the trust contracts, dissolve the combinations, and break up the monopoly held to be in violation of the statute. In my judgment this decree was as impotent and devoid of real practical beneficial results as the statute under and by virtue of which it was rendered. It served only to sever the contractual relations by which the several defendant companies were combined and confederated together.

The numerous wrongful and oppressive acts committed by them in restraint of trade, and by which hundreds of legitimate competitors were ruined in business, went unpunished and they, whether alone or in future combinations, were left free to continue such nefarious practices at will. This was no fault of the court. The law did not forbid these acts by which competitors were driven out of business, and provided no punishment for them.

Not only so, Mr. President, but, under the express language of the opinion, any member of the subsidiary corporation might, after this decree, again combine together and do business subject only to be again dissolved, when the process could again be repeated. The subsidiary companies, according to the decree of the court below, numbered something like 46, and their combined capitalization ran up into many millions. The only effect of the decree worthy of consideration was to sever these corporations, restore to each of them its stock held by the Standard Oil Co., and annul the certificates issued to each therefor. They are probably as much in sympathy with each other as before and will likely act together as much as ever, and certainly they may with impunity make such new combinations and contracts with each other as they please, so far as any effect of the decree is concerned. The result of it all is that the stock of the Standard Oil Co., and probably that of the other corporations, has increased in value, and the public, as far as one can see, has derived no benefit whatever from the action of the court. The one great weakness of the statute is that it does not provide in specific terms what shall constitute a contract, combination, conspiracy, or monopoly in restraint of trade. No act is made unlawful or declared to be a contract or combination or monopoly within the meaning of the statute. This weakness is clearly pointed out in the opinion of the Chief Justice in the Standard Oil case. It is said:

Clear as it seems to us is the meaning of the provisions of the statute in the light of the review which we have made, nevertheless before definitely applying that meaning it behooves us to consider the contentions urged on one side or the other concerning the meaning of the statute, which, if maintained, would give to it in some aspects a much wider and in every view at least a somewhat different significance.

* * * * * * *

In substance, the propositions urged by the Government are reducible to this: That the language of the statute embraces every contract, combination, etc., in restraint of trade, and hence its text leaves no room for the exercise of judgment, but simply imposes the plain duty of applying its prohibitions to every case within its literal language. The error involved lies in assuming the matter to be decided. This is true because, as the acts which may come under the classes stated in the first section and the restraint of trade to which that section applies are not specifically enumerated or defined, it is obvious that judgment must in every case be called into play in order to determine whether a particular act is embraced within the statutory classes and whether, if the act is within such classes, its nature or effect causes it to be a restraint of trade within the intendment of the act. * * * The merely generic enumeration which the statute makes of the acts to which it refers and the absence of any definition of restraint of trade as used in the statute leaves room for but one conclusion, which is that it was expressly designed not to unduly limit the application of the act by precise definition, but while clearly fixing a standard—that is, by defining the ulterior boundaries which could not be transgressed with impunity—to leave it to be determined by the light of reason, guided by the principles of law and the duty to apply and enforce the public policy embodied in the statute in every given case, whether any particular act or contract was within the contemplation of the statute.

The construction placed upon the statute by the court in this respect has been severely criticized. I think this has resulted from a misconception of the meaning of the court. It is assumed that the court held that it was within its jurisdiction to determine to what extent the contract or other alleged act was in restraint of trade; that is to say, whether it constituted an unreasonable restaint which alone would violate the statute or only a reasonable restraint not within its terms. I have studied the opinion with care, and I do not so construe it. The court held, as I understand the language of the opinion, that as the statute dealt only in general terms and failed to provide what acts must be done in order to bring the contract, combination, and so forth, within its provisions the court must determine, in the light of reason, whether the ultimate acts of contracting or entering into conspiracies or combinations were in fact in restraint of trade within the meaning of that term as used in the statute and therefore within its prohibitions. This is quite a different thing from holding that if the court found that the act charged was one in restraint of trade it might still, in the light of reason, relieve the offending corporations from an adverse decree, because, in the judgment of the court, the restraint was not great enough to bring it within the statute. If the latter was the ruling of the court, I can not but feel that it was erroneous. The statute is intended to prevent the acts enumerated when they are in restraint of trade. The degree or extent of the restraint is wholly immaterial. It is in restraint or not. If it is, it is within the express and unambiguous terms of the statute and unlawful. But whether it is in fact in restraint of trade must be determined by the contract made, the combination or conspiracy entered into, or the acts done by the parties in carrying on trade or preventing others from doing so, or all these combined, and this, under the general terms of the statute, must of necessity be determined by the court in the light of reason and judgment.

At the last session I introduced a bill providing as follows:

Any person who shall himself, in his own name or for or in the name of any other person, corporation, association, or copartnership, by threat, intimidation, persuasion, or otherwise, prevent any other person, corporation, association, or copartnership from securing loans or credit, or otherwise securing financial aid in organizing or carrying on any lawful interstate business; or who shall by misrepresentation or otherwise destroy or attempt to destroy the credit of any person, corporation, association, or copartnership engaged in such interstate business; or who shall willfully and for the purpose of preventing or hindering the organization or prosecution of any such lawful business by another, or destroying the same, commence or prosecute any action at law or in equity in any of the courts, State or Federal; or who shall, for the purpose or with the intention of driving a competitor out of such business or to prevent competition therein, sell or otherwise dispose of goods, merchandise, or other property for less than cost or so low as to produce no profits; or who shall knowingly and willfully conspire or confederate with any other person, corporation, association, or copartnership to so or otherwise obstruct or prevent the carrying on of any lawful interstate business by another shall be guilty of a felony and be fined not less than $100 nor more than $10,000 and be imprisoned at hard labor not less than 1 nor more than 14 years.

The bill was intended to remedy, in small degree, one of the defects in the antitrust law by making unlawful specific acts in restraint of trade. To destroy the credit of a troublesome competitor is one of the worst and most common, as well as most successful, devices resorted to by big business to put him out of the way. It does not require any combination, conspiracy, or monopoly to carry it out or accomplish the desired result. It is generally the work of some bank that deals in the securities of railroad or other corporations. It may be done by one man as well as by many. It is not within the prohibitions of the Sherman antitrust law, as I have already pointed out, because that law does not provide against specific acts. The way it works is graphically shown in a book lately published entitled "Cannibals of Finance," a very appropriate title. This book is a history of the struggles of one man against competition maintained by just such practices as the bill introduced by me is intended to prevent. The book is opened by this statement under the chapter heading "The Siberia of finance":

This is a true story of 15 years of persecution; a battle day by day for the right to live and create; a battle with the unfair and destructive methods of the so-called Money Trust, and I can assure my readers that no sufferers in Siberia are more deserving of your sympathy than those who are being daily sentenced by the Money Trust to the Siberia of finance.

There may be no chain gangs. They may not travel in cattle cars nor walk thousands of miles in the snow, but the Money Trust is as autocratic and wields as great a power as the Czar of Russia, and the Siberia to which I have been sentenced at their command has given to me and many others as great mental and physical suffering as the Siberia of Russia.

Then follows a history of financial persecution that should shock the whole Nation and open the eyes of legislators who really desire to check the power of big business and unlimited capital, which holds that power by practices that makes trade and business, as conducted by such men, a by-word and reproach to the whole country. The book would be a revelation to people who do not already know something of the methods of the money kings, the "cannibals of finance." It shows how competitors in railroad building and other legitimate enterprises are ruined financially, and their competitive industries destroyed by receiverships obtained by fraud and perjury, midnight injunctions issued by subservient judges, and credit destroyed by misrepresentation, deceit, and the criminal use of unlimited financial power. It is not an unusual experience in the unsavory affairs of high finance. It is only that in this case the story has been given out to the public. Few will read it, perhaps. Of those who do some will not believe; but it will not fail to attract attention to this great evil.

The bill introduced by me was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Presumably it found no favor there, as it was never heard of again. Notwithstanding that, I have again introduced it at this session, hoping for its more favorable consideration.

If anything more were needed to prove the inadequacy of the antitrust law to accomplish beneficial results, it has been furnished by the late exhaustive hearings and investigations of the subject, and the report made thereon by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate under a resolution providing as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable.

The hearings covered weeks of time and cost the Government thousands of dollars. They consisted mainly of opinions, theories, and speculations of supposed or self-constituted experts. If anything of practical importance resulted from the hearings, it is not disclosed by the report of the committee. The majority report of the committee was prepared, it is understood, by the able and distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who has given the subject long, careful, and intelligent study; but it brings neither consolation nor hope to an overburdened and oppressed people. It is distinctly disappointing that it contains practically nothing of value as an aid to future legislation on a subject so important and far-reaching. The report says:

The committee will recur to this subject in connection with another aspect of the judicial power, and contents itself now with a statement of its conclusion that there should be further legislation specifically prohibiting certain forms of association, combination, or monopoly which admittedly restrain trade and commerce among the States and with foreign nations, but which may be held by the courts to be indirect or remote interferences.

And again:

The committee does not intend in this report to indicate the terms of the act or acts that should be passed to supply the court with such legislative tests and standards as will limit the scope of judicial discretion. To do so would be to report upon the bills now before it, and that the committee is not prepared to do. It is prepared, however, to say that Congress should, in so far as is possible, specifically prescribe certain conditions upon which persons and corporations shall be permitted to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations. These conditions should be of a character that will tend to preserve reasonable competition, or substantially competitive conditions, and to compel independence in both organization and conduct. They should be so clear that the business world can understand them and go confidently forward, guided by them.

Not only should such conditions be imposed upon those who are engaged or propose to engage in commerce among the States, but our legislation should further recite certain known forms of combination and declare them to be unlawful because in restraint of trade. With respect to other forms, we should declare that if restraint is established the burden of proof is upon the persons or corporations involved to show that the restraint is reasonable.

* * * * * * *

The committee does not conceal the difficulty of reaching an agreement concerning the details of the legislation just outlined, but it has no hesitation in reporting that legislation of the general character pointed out is both wise and necessary.

It will be seen that the committee is inclined to follow in the line of the present antitrust law and confine legislation to "forms of combination supposed to be in restraint of trade," and not to specific acts certainly and obviously having that effect. This is evident from the recital in the report that legislation should "further recite certain known forms of combination and declare them to be unlawful because in restraint of trade." In other words, it is proposed not to make specific acts in restraint of trade unlawful and punish them but to render it illegal to form a combination by and through which such acts may be better and more successfully committed. To illustrate what I mean, let me take a story said to have been told by one of the high officials of the Standard Oil Co. of the means used by that company to dispose of one of its competitors:

Well, it is quick work putting them asleep. I had a man in our Cincinnati office who had saved about $100,000; he found out that the Standard Oil had practically no trade in one of the Southern States. He resigned from our employ, moved down there, and in three years built up a business that netted him between forty and fifty thousand dollars per year. Oh, he was a good hustler, and we made up our mind that we wanted his business. I offered him $200,000 to sell out, and what do you suppose? He had the nerve to refuse it.

Well, I put in a system of oil wagons and sold oil at 1 cent per gallon less than it cost him to get it. The next year I sold at 2 cents less than it cost him to get it. He was a good fighter and met our prices, but it was useless. No one would lend him money or help him, although he tried in every way to get financial aid. They knew we were after him and would get him in time. We cleaned him out in a little over two years. Such a fool not to sell out for the $200,000 that I offered him!

There could be no more direct or effective means than this of destroying competition and restraining trade. It required no combination, no contract, no conspiracy to carry it out. It could be done by one company or one man as well as a dozen. That just such acts have been done in hundreds of cases to the destruction of competitive business by the Standard Oil and other corporations there is not the slightest doubt. But they are not within the Sherman antitrust law. They would not be within it if every amendment of or change in that law suggested by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in its report were enacted into law. The trouble is that we are legislating against the shadow and not the substance of the offenses that are so seriously affecting the people. If we are going to accomplish anything worth while, we will have to change front entirely and commence to make specific acts in restraint of trade unlawful and punish them accordingly.

Mr. President, what we want in the great struggle that is going on between the trusts and other forms of the money power is not mere theories or theorists, but common sense and practical knowledge. We do not need an expert to tell us that to destroy the business of a weak competitor by a powerful corporation, by selling for less than cost, is a great wrong and in restraint of trade. The destruction of a man's business by depriving him of credit to remove him from competition is not a theory, but a fact. The man who does these things deserves to be in the penitentiary as much as the thief or the burglar; but we have made no law against such acts, but allow them to go unpunished.

Mr. President, laws enacted to make men fair and honest in business are generally unsatisfactory and disappointing when it comes to their enforcement. We passed a law at the last session which I am afraid will fall within this class. It is the law providing for the physical valuation of railroad properties. I was glad to support the bill because, in principle, it is right and just. But it will, I am sure, fail to accomplish beneficial results to any such extent as is expected of it. The prime objects of such valuation are to determine the question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the issue of stock and bonds of the corporation and to arrive at the rates such companies may justly impose. But without additional legislation it will fail of its purpose. If the value of the corporate properties could be ascertained with reasonable accuracy and how much of this value had been paid for by the stockholders, and is legitimately a part of the investment of the company of its own money, something practical and tangible might result. But unless this is done the immense values of railroad property will be ascertained and a great part of that value will have been contributed by shippers and other patrons of the corporations. It will not disclose the capital or investments of the corporations.

They will get the advantage, in such a valuation, of property paid for by the patrons of the roads in unreasonable and excessive rates; and, if future rates are fixed, in whole or in part, on such valuations the shippers will be paying rates on their own investments and not on that of the company. The only just thing to do, in ascertaining such value, is not only to find the actual worth of the property, but to deduct from it the amounts paid for it out of the earnings of the corporation. In other words, the right of the corporation to issue stock and bonds and charge rates, especially the latter, should depend upon the property owned by it and paid for with its own money. The amount of bonds issued, or money borrowed, is not a safe guide in determining the amount of a company's investment by any means. Stocks and bonds issued, and the funds realized from their sale, do not accurately indicate the amount invested ostensibly for construction or improvements. They too often find their way into the pockets of the promoters, officers, and stockholders of the company, while its property is being paid for out of earnings derived from rates paid by shippers. The rights of such corporations to charge rates or to issue stock or bonds can never be fairly based on property valuations until you can segregate the amount paid therefor by the company. The patrons of a public-service corporation should not be required to pay rates based on the value of property that they have paid for. The company is entitled to a reasonable return on its own investment and nothing more.

One conspicuous exception to the unsatisfactory character of legislation of this kind is the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission and defining its powers. It differs very materially from the antitrust statute in that it gives the commission continual supervision over corporations under its jurisdiction and enables it to discover any unlawful or unjust proceedings on their part and provide and enforce a practical remedy. Sometimes these remedies are not as drastic as they should be, but they are always ready to be and generally are applied with promptness.

Mr. President, this same supervision should be extended to other corporations doing an interstate business, and the States should enact and enforce like remedies within their own jurisdictions. There is no reason, sir, why the powers of this commission should not be extended to the matters so feebly dealt with under the antitrust law. Let the Interstate Commerce Commission be given power to investigate any corporation or corporations charged with or suspected of contracting, combining, conspiring, or monopolizing in restraint of trade, and to dissolve the combination and place the offending corporations in the hands of a receiver, whose duty it shall be to close up the business of such corporations. It is not enough to dissolve the combination. The corporations themselves should be dissolved and their business wound up. In addition to this the officers of the corporation should, when the unlawful combination is established, be punished by imprisonment, not in the county jail, as for a mere misdemeanor, but in the penitentiary. The offense is worse than that of the thief or the burglar and should be punished accordingly. It is worse, because its perpetrator not only steals, but he violates a trust that any honorable man would regard as sacred. One of the great troubles is that both the legislative bodies and the courts deal too leniently with this class of criminals. By the antitrust law the stealing of millions of dollars and the destruction of the business of thousands of men are made mere misdemeanors punishable by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both, "in the discretion of the court," while the poor thief who steals a hundred dollars, or even less, is made a felon and sentenced to long years in the penitentiary. And yet, theoretically, all men are equal before the law. Even the mild punishment of one year's imprisonment is rarely imposed by judges. They exercise their discretion in favor of the convicted criminal, with rare exceptions. It is a matter of wonder and of deep concern, this sympathy of judges for the rich and powerful criminals.

There is nothing to be done if laws for the protection of the weaker many from the criminal oppression of the rich and powerful few are to be made effective but to take away the discretion of the weaklings on the bench, make the crime a felony, and imprisonment imperative. As I have said, this will not make honest men who commit such crimes. They may, and some of them doubtless will, continue their nefarious practices, just as others continue to commit crimes of different kinds for which severe penalties are imposed, but it will have a wholesome and deterrent effect and do substantial justice.

But, sir, while we are dealing out justice to the criminals who use their powers unjustly through powerful corporations or their own great wealth we should be equally careful in protecting honest corporations and individuals of wealth in their rights. Such as these who desire to obey the law and respect the rights of competitors in business and the general public suffer injustice as the result of the misdeeds of the unworthy. It makes no difference how big a corporation is or how wealthy the individual their rights are as sacred and should be just as jealously protected as the weaker competitor.

Mr. President, there are many reforms yet to be brought about—reforms so closely connected with each other that the achievement of one without the other amounts to but little. Regulation of wages and hours of labor, protection of the freedom of trade, and prices to be charged to consumers belong to a class, and reforms in all of these should go hand in hand. The establishment of one is important if the others are to follow, but all of them are necessary for anything like adequate protection of the people. I suppose we are likely soon to have reform tariff regulation, as the dominant party, with all branches of the Government under its control, is pledged to tariff reform.

If this means only a reduction of the tariff, it will be a delusion and a snare that will react upon the party that brings it about. There are industries in this country that are overprotected and others that are not. Overprotection, or so-called protection where none was needed, has contributed largely to the building up of immense fortunes and powerful combinations that are now throttling competition, restraining trade, and destroying legitimate and worthy competition. The high tariffs were brought about to a very great extent by the oft-repeated claim that they were necessary for the protection of the wage earners. But they have not protected the laboring men nearly so much as the greedy and often unscrupulous employers. The protected industries pay no higher wages than the unprotected ones, and the wages paid bear no fair relation to the profits of the business or the amounts pocketed by the proprietors or stockholders of the protected industries. Instead of paying higher wages because of the protective tariff, thus encouraging American citizens to become and continue wage earners, the protected trusts and other big business have imported cheap foreign labor, driven our own people away from the manufactory and the shop, and degraded the one kind of labor that should be encouraged and made respectable.

It might be an excellent thing in harmonizing the tariff and wages to allow the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine whether fair wages are being paid by any concern; and if not, to compel the employer employing foreign laborers and paying European wages to pay the same tariff on its manufactured goods that are enforced against foreign importations until its wages are increased to a fair scale for American workmen. If we are sincere in our claim of protecting our workmen from the competition of cheap foreign labor we could do so effectually in this way.

If a high tariff did in fact protect the wage earner I would cheerfully stand for its continuance, even at the expense of higher prices to the consumer; but if the laborer gets any of the benefits of a high tariff, it is infinitesimal in comparison with that of his millionaire employer. Unfortunately, the tendency of reform tariff legislation seems to be to commence at the wrong end and reduce the tariff where it will do the least good and maintain it where it does the most harm. The evident purpose of the so-called tariff experts is, so far as progress has been made, to deprive the farmers, who are themselves laboring men and wage earners in most cases, of all protection and preserve it to the trust and millionaire manufacturers. This would be a fatal mistake. The manufacturer with his millions generally needs no protection. In most cases our manufacturers and business men can compete with the world and make profits. They can and do sell their goods cheaper in foreign markets than at home. With the farmer, in many cases, it is different.

By maintaining a high protective tariff we have made trusts and combinations possible, and now we are attempting with poor success to enact and enforce laws to dissolve the powerful combinations of wealth that we by law have created. I am afraid we will make a show of regulating and reducing the tariff where it can not hurt us—in politics—and still protect the powerful influences that are now and have been for a long time ruling our politics and the affairs of government. I believe in the protection of our home industries of every kind where protection is really needed. I do not believe in tariff laws that result in abnormal profits with all their accompanying evils.

Our Democratic friends are divided into advocates of tariff for revenue only and free traders. I do not believe in either, but of the two I sympathize most with the free trader. If we are to levy a tariff only with a view of raising money to carry on the affairs of government, we had better resort to direct taxation and be done with it. It will distribute the burden more evenly, and be more just to all concerned, and tend to economy in government. If a tariff is to be levied, it should be for protection of our industries, and levied upon products that will afford that protection. The raising of revenue should be an incident only to this object, and no tariff should be levied on the theory that it will or that it is necessary to raise revenue. The Democratic Party has the power and the opportunity to so regulate, equalize, and adjust the tariff along just and right lines, as to supply the Government with the necessary revenues, protect worthy and struggling industries that need and deserve to be protected, withdraw it from the powerful industrial concerns that do not need, but have abused the power and advantage it has already given them and do no one harm or injustice. One of the first steps to this end should be the establishment of a competent and nonpartisan tariff commission and the removal of tariff legislation from the baneful influence of politics. It is a task that calls for the highest wisdom and patriotism. If it misses the opportunity or prostitutes the power the people have given it to base or partisan purposes, it will return to the oblivion from which the partisanship and folly of the Republican Party has enabled it to emerge. But to entitle it to continue in power it must do more than this. It must pass such legislation as will protect the people from the tyranny and oppression of the money power wielded by the great trusts and combinations that have grown up and prospered under the misrule of the reactionary wing of its old enemy, the Republican Party.

The wage earner must be protected in his earnings and reasonable hours of labor, the consumer in reasonable prices, and the whole people must be protected in their independence and liberty. There must be no dominating or superior class in this country. The equality of all men must be made a reality and not a theory. This must be made and maintained as a government of the people. If the Democratic Party can and will accomplish these results, demanded by the people, it may live and maintain itself in power. If it does not, its reign will be brief. If neither of the old parties can or will restore the government to the people as our forefathers handed it down, then a new party will be raised up that will do the people's will. It will not be a one-man party, or one founded on hatred and disappointed ambition, or one dominated or controlled by disappointed trust promoters and political bosses, or designing trust magnates seeking through it to advance their own interests and ambitions. It will be a party of the people's own making, founded on justice, fair dealing, and disinterested patriotism. I am ready to give the Democratic Party a fair trial. I have no political ambitions of my own. I am willing to wait and see and to lend my aid to that party or any other to bring about just and beneficent laws through and by which the whole people may be brought into their own and their just rights fostered and protected. May the day soon come when political parties will be patriotically striving for the good of the whole Nation, and not for the loaves and fishes and their own political gain and advantage; when parties will be governed by principles of right and justice, and not by ambition, self-seeking, and greed for place and power.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bradley	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	Oliver	Stephenson
Brandegee	Hughes	Overman	Stone
Bristow	James	Owen	Sutherland
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Page	Swanson
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thomas
Clapp	Kern	Pomerene	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Ransdell	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Robinson	Vardaman
Colt	Lippitt	Root	Walsh
Cummins	Lodge	Saulsbury	Warren
Dillingham	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Fall	McLean	Sheppard	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let the appropriation bill be now proceeded with. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. There is only one amendment by the committee, and I desire to have the committee amendment first considered. I ask unanimous consent that that course may be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BACON. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Virginia. I did not understand him to ask that the reading of the bill be dispensed with but that the formal reading be dispensed with. It has to be read at some time. It has never been read in the Senate, I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. STONE. And that it be read now for amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and read to line 2, on page 6, the last item read being as follows:

> Caspar, Wyo., post office: For completion of building under present limit, $25,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I call attention to a clerical error at the top of page 6. "Caspar" should read "Casper."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, strike out "Caspar" and insert "Casper."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to the correction. I do not think it is necessary, as the sound is the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was continued. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 102, after line 16, to strike out:

> Hereafter vacancies occurring in the membership of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall not be filled until the whole number of members of such board is reduced to five, and thereafter the number of members constituting said board shall not exceed five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, page 129, the last item read being the following:

> Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $10,000 for salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $300,000: Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], in charge of the bill, if he prefers that the reading be concluded before any amendment is offered?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I should prefer that the reading of the bill be finished. Any amendments that are in order may then be presented.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is quite agreeable to me.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if there is any written report upon the proviso which has just been read, as to what it means and as to what purpose is to be accomplished by it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There was no written report; only a formal report submitted to the Senate with the bill. That proviso is in totidem verbis as it was when this same bill passed through the conference committee, passed the two Houses, and went to the President at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. I so understand.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning at line 1, page 130, and continued to line 12, on page 142, the last item read being the heading: "Under the Department of Commerce and Labor."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is evident that this bill is a copy of the one that passed at the last session, and that the word "Labor" should be stricken out on page 142, as the department now is the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course, I could not say that there is no word change in the bill, but I certainly think there is no substantial change.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee, does not the bill, as we formerly passed it, provide in terms that so much of the money as has been appropriated and that shall be appropriated by this act and by the Indian appropriation act may be divided between the Departments of Commerce and Labor? Perhaps the Senator has a copy of the former bill before him.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That provision is certainly made.

Mr. WARREN. I think that is provided for, I will say to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. These appropriations are all under the head of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and, if I understand it correctly, some of the appropriations go to the Department of Commerce and some of them go to the Department of Labor. Is that correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct; simply conforming to the law creating the Department of Labor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, I suggest to the chairman that the word "Department" should be made "Departments"—that it should be in the plural and should read "Under the Departments of Commerce and Labor."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 142, in the heading, beginning in line 11, it is proposed to strike out the word "Department" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "Departments," so that it will read:

Under the Departments of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that, though I do not think it is at all necessary. I think the context of the bill makes it perfectly clear. I do not, however, make any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere unreasonably with the reading of the bill, but I desire to offer an amendment on page 181. I will offer it later, however, if the Senator from Virginia desires that the reading of the bill shall first be concluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I hope he will permit the reading of the bill to be finished. Then he can go back and offer any amendment he sees fit at any point in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to reserve an amendment to the bill to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 169, or if the Senate do not decide to strike out that clause, then I shall call up Senate resolution No. 3, which passed the Senate on March 17, 1913. I will explain it to the Senator from Virginia when we reach it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say, Mr. President, so that there may not be any further misunderstanding about it, I announced at the outset that when the reading of the bill was completed amendments could be offered; that it was not contemplated that any interference would be had with amendments by finishing the reading of the bill or with the desire of any Senator to offer an amendment to any section or clause or sentence in it.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, line 13, it is proposed to strike out all after the numerals "$300,000" to and including the word "products," in line 24, in the following words:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will excuse me for intervening at this moment, I merely wish to make a brief general statement—not a discussion of the amendment which he offers—but before amendments are taken up I should like to submit just a few words explaining the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be pleased, Mr. President, to withhold the amendment for that purpose. I think it is desirable that the bill should be explained.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I hesitated to take even the very few moments necessary for that purpose, because I felt reasonably sure that every Senator present understood the bill thoroughly well. It is verbatim et literatim the bill which passed both Houses of Congress after an agreement of the conference committee at the last session. It came back to the respective Houses and met with the approbation of both Houses. It went to the President, and when it went to the President, as I have stated, it was exactly in the same terms and phrases which are now incorporated in it. Not a single change has been made in the bill except one amendment which was made here in the Senate. That one amendment reported by the committee and approved by the Senate struck out of the bill a provision which reduced the number of the Board of Governors of the Soldiers' Homes. There were, I think, 11. They received no salary, but only actual expenses going to and from the places where the meetings of the board were held. While I was very anxious to see the bill pass just as it had been passed at the last session without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i," I felt that there could be no real harm in making this one exception rather than excluding from that board any of the old soldiers who are already on the board and who did not wish to see any change made. So the committee made that one amendment. With that exception, the bill as it stands now before the Senate is identically the bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session.

I will say, Mr. President, that my anxiety to avoid all amendments, particularly amendments increasing appropriations or covering items of appropriation not already contained in the bill, was due to this conviction on my part: If we appropriate for the expenses of conducting the Government once a year at the regular session of Congress, which meets in December each year—if we make the appropriations then that are required for the next ensuing financial year—I think we are appropriating fast enough. I believe the necessities of the public service will be amply provided for when we discharge that duty once a year. I think it is a bad practice, and I think it would be an unfortunate course, to undertake, whenever we happen to have an extraordinary session of Congress, to go into the matter of appropriations for the conduct of the business of the Government.

We hear a great deal about unnecessary appropriations and extravagance in the expenditure of public moneys; and no doubt there is some occasion for criticisms of that sort. We will never have a government that will be free from all weak points and free from all abuses; but enough errors creep into our appropriation bills when we take them up only once a year; and I feel that it is entirely unnecessary to go into these matters of appropriations for the public service at this extraordinary session of Congress.

Then, too, Mr. President, I look upon this bill as a piece of completed legislation. It had the very best care that could be bestowed upon it by the committees of the respective Houses, by both Houses themselves, and by the conference committees of the two Houses. It was scrutinized as closely as it could possibly be scrutinized; weeks were expended in hearings in the other House; and every item in the bill was not only scrutinized, but most of them were discussed, considered, and deliberately agreed upon. I believe, Mr. President, that it is as free from objections and as just and as reasonable a sundry civil appropriation bill as ever passed the Congress.

The amount appropriated by the bill, $116,795,327.01, is a large amount; but it is in round numbers about $23,000,000—I will not take the time to read the figures with absolute exactness—less than the amount estimated to be necessary by the departments of the Government; and $1,332,000 in round numbers less than the amount appropriated for the preceding fiscal year. So that the bill as now presented to the Senate appropriates $23,000,000 less than was estimated to be necessary, and nearly a million and a half dollars less than was appropriated for the preceding financial year. I think, Mr. President, that those figures justify the statement which I have made that the bill has been carefully considered and that all of the precautions that could be exercised have been exercised to keep the expenses of the Government within proper limits.

I will not take the time of the Senate to go further into details. The general statement I have made will explain to the Senate what the bill is. It is, as Senators all know, almost exclusively an appropriation for liabilities which exist against the Government under previous legislation. With few exceptions the bill simply provides for meeting the obligations of the Government as the coupons of the bonds of the Government have to be met. Under previous legislation obligations have resulted, the Government has become liable, and the sundry civil bill for the most part simply appropriates the money to meet those obligations which, under previous legislation, have become imposed upon the Government.

Now, Mr. President, if we undertake to depart from the policy which I have indicated and the policy which controlled the committee, we will open a wide field for increased appropriations. If you amend this bill in any particular to gratify a Senator who thinks he has a case differing from the general run of cases and from the items desired by other Senators, if you open the door at all, if you commence to enlarge this bill, you may find that the door will be opened so wide as materially to increase the amount carried by this bill and cause unnecessary expenditures.

There are cases, I know, which seem to be very urgent; there are cases that, I will confess, I have not been entirely able to answer when the committee has been appealed to to add items not contained in the bill, but no great injustice would be done even if those matters remain without remedy until next December. I feel that the safe rule, the wise rule, and the just rule is to let these appropriations all go over until the regular session, when the annual appropriations are taken up and when any necessary items can be provided for.

Mr. President, in addition to that, I will say that there will no doubt come to the Senate from the other House a deficiency bill. Appropriation bills, according to the recognized policy prevailing between the two Houses, must originate in the other body; indeed the House contends that it alone can originate appropriation bills; but whether or not that position be well taken—and I, myself, have never considered it well taken, although I have no purpose to revive a discussion of it at any time, and certainly not now—the universal practice is for appropriation bills to originate in the House, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House tells me that he expects later on to send to the Senate a small deficiency bill providing for some very urgent matters which were not provided for, and perhaps most of them could not have been provided for, at the last session of Congress.

If there are any items of extraordinary importance which, if not provided for at this session of Congress, will result in any very great inconvenience or injury or injustice, they can be considered in connection with that bill much more safely than in connection with a piece of completed legislation, such as the sundry civil bill. I sincerely hope that Senators who have in mind items which they would like to see appropriated for in the pending bill will not undertake to amend this bill, but will reserve their purpose until the deficiency bill comes over. If those items which they think ought to be provided for are to be provided for at all, it is much better, as I have said, to provide for them on that bill, which is not yet drafted or even considered, than to undertake to disturb the provisions of a piece of completed legislation, such as the pending bill.

For those reasons, Mr. President, I very much hope that Senators will withhold amendments. There are, I know, some appropriations for public buildings and various other objects which seem to be important, and perhaps urgent, but they have no place, in my judgment, on a piece of completed legislation such as this. If they are to be considered at all, they ought to be considered in connection with the deficiency bill, which, later on, will be brought to the Senate.

I make these general statements, Mr. President, and most earnestly hope that other Senators having in view the same object which I have, namely, the guarding of the Treasury against useless and unnecessary appropriations, will reserve for the annual session the consideration of all ordinary items of appropriation, and that they will agree with me that it is the course of wisdom, economy, and justice to leave the sundry civil appropriation bill just as it was fixed by the last Congress.

Of course, what I have said does not embrace to the fullest extent the question presented by the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, though to a lesser degree the argument does apply; and later on I shall no doubt find it necessary to give some reasons which satisfy me that the amendment should not be adopted. At present, however, I only wish to make some general statements in respect to the whole bill. I did not intend to and will not at present address myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Virginia takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. I suppose his remarks do not apply to omissions from the bill which are omissions from the estimates?

I notice that the item relating to the road from Vicksburg to the Vicksburg National Military Park, which is being constructed by the Government, and for which purpose there is a recommendation of $10,000, is left out of the bill. When we reach that particular place in the bill I hope the Senator will give that matter the benefit of the doubt as an omission from the bill. I understand it was left out by accident, though I do not know how it came to be left out.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, my remarks, for what they are worth, do apply to just such items as that. Of course every item that a Senator wants in the bill, and that is not in the bill, is an omission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no. This was at one time in the bill for $5,000, as I understand from a letter that was written me by the Vicksburg National Park people. Then, afterwards, the department estimated for $10,000; and instead of changing it from $5,000 to $10,000, it was dropped—I do not know how.

However, when we get to that place in the bill I shall probably have the correspondence, and we can enter into the matter more particularly. It undoubtedly must be a casus omissus.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There are cases just like that all over the country. There is one down in my State, I think, at Fredericksburg. They wanted some improvements made to the road from the National Cemetery to the city of Fredericksburg. It is an omission; the item was not put in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But this is a scheme for continuing work that the Government has already been doing.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Fredericksburg scheme is exactly the same thing. There was an appropriation, and the work was attempted, but not adequately accomplished. The project is in bad shape; it is not a credit to the Government, and in my judgment it ought to be appropriated for; but it was omitted from this bill just like the Vicksburg item was omitted.

There is not a Senator on this floor who has not some item in his State which was omitted from the bill. The House did not put in the appropriation which the Senator from Mississippi wanted in, and the bill came over to the Senate, and neither the committee nor the Senate put it in here. It was omitted. There were hearings on it also, but the committee did not put it in. I do not say they did right when they left it out, but I say we should do wrong if we put it in now.

It ought to wait until the December session, when matters of that sort can be taken up and considered, not only this item in Mississippi and this item in Virginia, but items all over the country.

I see the Senator from Ohio is looking over here at me in a very significant way. He has been for weeks appealing to me and urging me to help him get in this bill some omitted items. The Senator from South Carolina, whom I do not see in his seat, tells me there was a very flagrant injustice done by omitting an item for a public building in his State. I imagine there is not a Senator on this floor who does not find omitted from the bill some item which he thought ought to have gone into it. If we are to open the bill and discuss all the items which Senators think ought not to have been omitted, we will take weeks of time, and when we get through, perhaps, we will have a bill almost as big again as the one we are now considering.

I appeal to Senators to let this piece of completed legislation, which was considered and perfected and agreed upon by both Houses of Congress as a suitable bill to provide for the expenses of the Government for the financial year commencing the 1st of July, 1913, be passed without further amendment. I say it has been completed, and we ought not to open it. It would be a great mistake to open it. We had better adhere to what we did before, and let these omissions and these injustices, if they exist, be taken up and considered and disposed of next December, when we again come to appropriate for the expenses of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the amendment that I have offered is understood by every Senator, as it will be perfectly understood by the country at large. In advocating that amendment I do not propose to detain the Senate for any considerable length of time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says this amendment is understood. I am frank to say, after considerable study, that it is wholly ambiguous to me. I do not know what the purpose is, or what the language intends to convey as the purpose of the provision. If the Senator or anyone else knows precisely what it means or what it is intended to accomplish, I should like to know it. It is to my mind susceptible of an interpretation which means nothing at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what I meant to convey—I was unfortunate if I did not state it accurately—was that the purpose of the amendment I have offered is perfectly understood. It is to strike from the bill a certain provision that has had more or less consideration heretofore.

It will be recalled that at the last session, when this bill was passed in the identical form in which it is now presented to the Senate, the President of the United States vetoed the bill, and as a result it failed of enactment into law. I am going to read a paragraph from the veto message of the President.

A great deal of stress is being laid in certain quarters upon these words of the proviso:

Or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful.

I have read with a great deal of care Mr. Gompers's long letter, which I have on my desk, 13 pages in length, in which he lays a great deal of stress upon those words, arguing that no harm can be done by the proviso, because of the fact that it does not apply if the acts done are not unlawful in themselves.

The President of the United States, in his veto message, took up that matter, and dealt with it in these words:

The proviso is subtly worded, so as, in a measure, to conceal its full effect, by providing that no part of the money appropriated shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual "for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor," and so forth. So that any organization formed with the beneficent purpose described in the proviso might later engage in a conspiracy to destroy by force, violence, or unfair means any employer or employee who failed to conform to its requirements; and yet, because of its originally avowed lawful purpose, it would be exempt from prosecution, so far as prosecution depended upon the moneys appropriated by this act, no matter how wicked, how cruel, how deliberate the acts of which it was guilty. So, too, by the following sentence in the act such an organization would be protected from prosecution "for any act done in furtherance" of "the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor" not in itself unlawful. But under the law of criminal conspiracy acts lawful in themselves may become the weapons whereby an unlawful purpose is carried out and accomplished. (Shawnee Compressed Coal Co. v. Anderson, 209 U. S., 423–434; Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S., 194–206; Swift v. United States, 196 U. S., 375–396; United States v. Reading Co., Dec. 16, 1912.)

I apprehend, Mr. President, that it is perhaps on that very point that the distinguished Senator from Idaho, one of the ablest lawyers in the Senate or anywhere, is puzzled to know precisely what this provision in the bill actually means. I confess that I, as a layman, do not understand its full import, and hence I shall not undertake to interpret it.

The President concludes his veto message in these words:

It is because I am unwilling to be a party to writing such a provision into the laws of this Republic that I am unable to give my assent to a bill which contains this provision.

Mr. President, I remarked a moment ago that I did not propose to discuss this matter at length. It seems to me that the proposed legislation is bad; that it can do no good to anyone; and that it may be the means of doing much harm to important interests in the country, including labor itself.

I have been flooded with letters and telegrams on this question—most of them, it is true, from men engaged in business; in one instance I received a letter from a very intelligent laboring man, who protested in the name of labor that harm will come to labor if this should become the law of the land. That letter I have not on my desk, but it was received a few days ago.

Out of the telegrams—they have been very numerous, and I suppose every Senator has received them—I have selected two which I propose to ask to have read into the RECORD. One is from the Cadillac Motor Car Co., of Detroit, Mich. The other is from the Atlanta (Ga.) Builders' Exchange. I will ask that the Secretary read those two telegrams.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., May 2, 1913.

JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Legislation that has not sufficient merit to stand out in the open should not be smuggled through as a rider to an appropriation bill. Our wonderful history is due to the fact that all are equal before the law. The restrictive clause in sundry civil bill is pernicious discrimination. It singles out one particular class for favor before the law. The one class seeking this favor is and has been charged with heinous crimes in the name of liberty. Any investigation you may make will convince you that the entire country is watching this proposed iniquitous discrimination with increasing displeasure.

H. M. LELAND,
Cadillac Motor Car Co.

ATLANTA, GA., May 1, 1913.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We vigorously protest against the passage of the sundry civil bill, forbidding use of public money to punish violation of law. Class legislation is extremely dangerous, unfair, and unjust. We earnestly ask that you use your influence and vote against the passage of this bill.

THE ATLANTA BUILDERS' EXCHANGE.
By R. M. WALKER, President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was in session in the city of Washington. It is a great organization, composed of delegates from the various boards of trade and chambers of commerce of all States of the country. At that meeting a resolution was adopted which I will ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1913.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL (H. R. 2441).

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS.

Resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America in session in Washington, D. C., April 24 and 25, 1913:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that the provision in the sundry civil bill now before the United States Senate preventing the use of any part of the appropriation for the enforcement of antitrust laws in the prosecution of special classes is a violation of the fundamental principle of equity and law enforcement. We object to the principle of having Congress exempt from prosecution any class of possible offenders under any law, toward which this provision is, in our opinion, a definite step, and we respectfully protest against its enactment into law."

Submitted for consideration of the Members of the Senate of the United States.

By order of the board of directors.

ELLIOT H. GOODWIN, General Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what I wished to say on this question has been substantially said. Of course it will be heralded in certain quarters that every Senator who opposes this provision is an enemy of the cause of labor, and that he is opposed to legislation in the interests of the laboring man. That does not disturb me in the least. A demand has been made upon me scores of times since I have occupied a seat in the Senate, accompanied by threats, that I should support certain legislation in the so-called interest of the laboring men of the country. My reply has always been that I would give it consideration; that if it commended itself to me I would support it; otherwise I would not.

I have taken this matter under consideration in the same spirit. While I confess to some difficulty in interpreting the exact language of the bill, I am entirely clear in the conviction that it is a discrimination, and that it proposes to exempt from the operations of a general statute certain organizations in the United States. It seems to me that a statute dealing with a great question, such as the Sherman antitrust law does, should have universal application, and that if it is not good and wise legislation the original statute should be amended, and that we should not undertake to amend it through an appropriation bill such is is now under consideration.

I shall content myself, when the vote is taken, with asking for a yea-and-nay vote, in order that I may record my vote against the proviso I have moved to strike out. When that is done my duty will have been done, and whether the amendment prevails or is lost there will be no ground for complaint on my part.

That is all I shall endeavor to do. I am entirely willing that the vote shall be taken as speedily as it may be after the subject has been debated by other Senators, who will doubtless present both sides of the question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I feel that it is my duty to protest against the provision in this bill limiting the appropriation for administering the antitrust law by prohibiting the Department of Justice from using any part of it for enforcing that law against labor unions and farmers' associations. No labor or farmers' organization has asked me to permit it to do an illegal thing; no one has written me a word in reference to the matter, except that I received a letter from the head of the American Federation of Labor indorsing the provision of the bill in so far as it applies to labor organizations, and a circular letter this morning from a lawyer of this city who assumed to speak for farmers.

I am opposed to the provision because it is a vain thing, so far as the enforcement of the antitrust act against the organization sought to be exempted is concerned. There are other funds which the Department of Justice can use to enforce this law impartially. The proposed action is not the most direct and honest way to proceed, even if it is desirable to treat the employer and the employed differently, so far as combinations in restraint of trade are concerned. The fair, open, and just way is to amend the Sherman Act directly and not through the circumlocution of restricting the use of an appropriation.

But if the limitation of the appropriation before the Senate is vain, why is it proposed and why do I oppose it?

It is vain so far as the impartial enforcement of the Sherman law at present is concerned, but it furnishes an opportunity for some statesmen to go on record as favoring a strong political class of our people without making its results particularly effective. Some there are who honestly and sincerely believe in the proposition to exempt labor organizations from the operation of the antitrust law, and they take advantage of this opportunity to express their approval of this provision with the hope that it will eventually lead to an amendment of the general law.

I am opposed to it because I believe it is largely a matter of politics, and bad politics at that.

I am opposed to it because I am a friend of labor organizations; and being a friend, I am opposed to injuring them by passing class legislation nominally for their benefit but eventually for their detriment. The laborer of all men is vitally interested in just and impartial law.

This measure proceeds on the declared assumption that American labor is a class, and implies that its members have no hope of getting out of it into the so-called employer class. Nothing could be more hopeless or more unjust than this, if it is or shall be true. All labor does not get its just dues. It has not had an even chance in the great struggles of the past. It is even now working under great handicaps, not least of which are some of its exploiters, who for financial or political reasons find it exceedingly useful. To relieve labor from some of its burdens should be the honest effort of every good citizen in and out of Congress, and it is comforting to know that a great majority of the people sympathize with labor in its struggle for its rights and for its proper share of the wealth which it creates. I believe most heartily in organized labor. If I were a laborer, as the term goes, I would, if possible, belong to a union, and I would try to make membership in that union stand for worth and character, and all I would ask would be equal opportunity under equal law, and I would insist that there should be no impassable wall separating employer and employee.

I would resist all efforts from without or from within my order to shut the door of advancement against me and my fellows. It is one of the glories of our country that a great majority of our men of affairs, of our public men, of our great men in every department of life, have come up through the ranks of labor and from the very bottom of the line. We should not change this by enacting a law which recognizes the principle that labor is a class which should be treated differently from the way the employer is treated.

Under existing conditions the strike is sometimes beneficial and sometimes apparently necessary, but this admission simply emphasizes the imperfection of men in their search of remedies for existing injustice because the strike is wasteful at best, and principles are seldom established by it. It seems, however, to be the only means now recognized. How much better, as it seems to me, it would be to have a commission, such as I have tried to secure for years, to make public the causes which now induce to strikes, for public sentiment would then be founded on facts instead of prejudice, and public sentiment would control, and the controversies would be settled justly. Honest labor has nothing to fear from publicity.

But we must not lose sight of the fact that a great majority of laborers do not belong to unions. Shall this Government tie its hands so that it can not protect the rights of the unorganized? Shall we subdivide labor into the organized and unorganized and have a special law for each? Certainly not. Conspiracies may exist and have existed not alone against the employer, but they have sometimes been more powerful against unorganized labor.

It is possible that the antitrust act has been invoked in some cases both against employers and labor organizations where action should not have been entertained, but such cases have been most rare, and there is no danger under present public sentiment that such decisions will be followed as precedents.

Every lawful right of labor should be safeguarded to the very limit, and labor has no better friend than I am. Indeed, it is because I am in sympathy with the toiler for one reason that I object to this kind of privileged class legislation which may lead to his injury.

Nothing illustrates the political character of this proposed provision better than the fact that farmers' organizations are included in it. Have these organizations petitioned for this? Is there anything which farmers' associations are doing or which they are proposing to do which is now unlawful? I have heard of nothing of that kind. The farmers are law abiding as a class and want no special legislation which is not for the common good. Then why have they been linked with labor organizations in this provision? There can be but one answer, and that is politics. If the farmers could be induced to believe that the antitrust law is inimical to them, their moral and political influence would be powerful in the passage of this class legislation; furthermore, it adds some strength to the provision by associating with it the farmers of the country. The class is thus made larger. I have heard no argument from the proponents of the measure in behalf of farmers who are now suffering because of their inability to do any just thing. I doubt if any Senator has received complaint from any real farmers or bona fide farmers' organizations.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If the Senator from Michigan will permit me, I will say that I have received letters and telegrams from the president of a farmers' union in Alabama insisting upon this provision being included in the bill. I just wanted to make this statement because the Senator said that he thought no Senator had received any communications from such organizations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am obliged to the Senator. I have received nothing, nor have I known of anyone else who had received anything before.

Does any Senator believe that any employer could long endure if he resisted the known just and proper demands of his employees? But how shall we know whether the demands are just and proper? Will a resort to the test of endurance between capital and labor through the medium of the strike furnish the needful information? Will the sympathetic strike or the boycott settle permanently any great principle? Is it right that the great mass of the people who are served by railroads and mines and factories shall suffer irreparable injuries while some captain of finance and some labor leader are fighting for supremacy?

Shall we say that any influence shall be permitted to coerce men into breaking contracts with which they are satisfied, into leaving employers against whom they have no grievance, in order to settle the differences existing between other men with whom they have no relation? Would the advocates of this measure support another amendment exempting from the operation of the trust statute employers banded together to blacklist the workmen of any one industry and to prevent the employment of all laborers until the proscribed workmen accede to their employers' demands?

Mr. President, the black list and the boycott, the sympathetic strike, and all methods of direct or indirect intimidation are undemocratic and should be un-American. The differences of capital and labor will never be permanently adjusted through methods which are not at once approximately just between them and fair to the great mass of the people who constitute the Republic and furnish the opportunity and safeguard the rights of both employer and employee. The pending proposition will result in no good to honest labor, but it will emphasize and widen the artificial gulf between capital and labor.

I am, sir, in favor of just and equitable laws, which can not be set aside either by the rich and powerful or by the poor and weak. Indeed, when there shall have been created a just and intelligent public sentiment, there will be no rich and poor, no powerful and weak, known in the administration of law.

It is not possible that the segregation of our people into classes called capital and labor, with penal statutes peculiar to each and not applicable to both, can be good for our country. To me conspiracy is conspiracy, coercion is coercion, lawlessness is lawlessness, the same as murder is murder, no matter what the political, financial, or social standing of the offender may be.

It is not our business as legislators to refine what common consent accepts as wrong by classifying the people and exempting one class while holding another.

But if you insist on this kind of legislation, let it be done directly, and not hand to labor organizations a bouquet of poppies gorgeous in color but withering and falling to pieces even as they reach to grasp it.

Mr. President, it is because I do not believe that this exemption can possibly result in benefit to labor, but possibly may result in disaster to the whole country, that I am in favor of striking the provision from the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when Abraham Lincoln put his signature to the emancipation proclamation for the first time in American history he made the old Declaration of Independence ring true to its meaning that all men are born equal, not with equal intelligence, not with equal character, but with equal rights under the law. For half a hundred years we have been living in a country in which that condition of equality has been recognized, golden era of American history, and for the first time we now have a proposition to change that old declaration and to reassert that all Americans are not born equal, that some have rights which are not accorded to others, that some have responsibilities which should not be enforced against others.

Mr. President, if there is any one thing in my American citizenship of which I am justly proud it is the right of equality under the law with every other American citizen. It is the right to look with level eyes into the eyes of every other citizen of this land, conceding no superior right and acknowledging no inferior right.

No man in this country, Mr. President, is entitled to a special privilege. God pity the country when we shall arrive at a condition when for a political support we shall as legislators declare that there are castes in American citizenship against whom the general laws of the land shall not be effective.

What are the laborers in the United States entitled to at the hands of Congress? A special law for their benefit that will exempt them from the general rule that is applicable to other people? No, Mr. President, but they are entitled to benefits which the party I represent has always accorded to them, and that is the right to sell their labor in a protected American market. What are the farmers entitled to in this country?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment. What are the farmers entitled to? They are not entitled to any special privilege, and, so far as the farmers of my State are concerned, they are not asking for a special privilege. They do say that they are entitled, as American citizens and by reason of their citizenship, to the American market for their products in preference to the foreigner.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did not this bill with the provision which the Senator is now criticizing pass the Republican Senate at the last session of Congress?

Mr. McCUMBER. This bill passed at the last session of Congress. That is as far as I am prepared to go.

Mr. SHEPPARD. With this provision in it?

Mr. McCUMBER. With this provision in it; and it was vetoed by a Republican President. I will admit, for the benefit of the Senator from Texas, that it is more or less of a party proposition, and that the Democratic Party has put itself squarely on record as recognizing a distinction of class in American citizenship.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is criticizing his own party.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is criticizing my own party, and any members of my party are supporting the exemption clause in this bill, then it seems that the whole of the other side of this Chamber have suddenly come over to my party or that portion of my party.

Now, Mr. President, what benefit will the farmers receive from this exemption? I have not heard of any of them who ever asked for it. We now produce beyond our home consumption in all lines of agricultural products. I do not know of any method by which we can greatly enhance the value of our property or what we have to sell by any character of an organization, so long as you place us in open competition with the whole world. We may derive some benefit from an organization which educates and advises in reference to the law of supply and demand. We can accomplish very much in that respect, and I am one who is heartily in favor of agricultural organization for that particular purpose, and to do any other lawful act to enhance the value of their products, but I anticipate that no agricultural organization would ever ask the right to be exempted or be protected if they attempted to do a thing for which they could be prosecuted. I admit the right of the farmers to organize as much as possible to determine what kind of crops it would be best for them to raise in a single year, but I deny the right of anyone of that organization to insist upon either a boycott or a night-rider's raid against the farmer who does not see fit to follow its particular advice along that line, and I do not believe the American farmer is asking for any privilege that is not extended to every other American citizen.

Mr. President, this is made more or less of a party measure, and I want to consider it a moment in that light. I know, and I think every other Senator knows, that it is more or less of an appeal to a certain class of citizens for their suffrage. Now, let us see whether or not the laborers will receive the benefit that is expected from class legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I am opposed to this proviso as it is offered, but I regret very much any attempt to make a party matter out of a measure of this kind. It ought to be considered from another standpoint. This matter came into the Senate for the first time two years ago from a Republican House, and it was passed at the last session by a Republican Senate. In my judgment it is not a party measure, nor can it be made such. It arises from a different condition entirely, and it ought to be considered from a different standpoint entirely. I do not believe that you will find when you come to analyze the history of it that it has its source in one party more than another.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have considered it from the American standpoint. The vote which perhaps will take place in a very short time will demonstrate whether or not it is substantially a party measure, and I will permit that vote to determine that question.

The true friend, Mr. President, of the wage earner is the party or the Congress that by its acts rather than by its idle declaration subserves the interests of labor.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. BACON. In addition to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, I will simply call the Senator's recollection to the fact, if I am not mistaken, that this provision came to the Senate prior to the last Congress; that it came to the Senate several Congresses ago in a bill from a Republican House of Representatives.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I understood the Senator from Idaho did say.

Mr. BACON. It was prior to the passage of this bill.

Mr. LODGE. He said so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what he said.

Mr. BACON. I misunderstood him.

Mr. BORAH. I stated that it came here two years ago.

Mr. BACON. I thought it antedated that.

Mr. BORAH. I think it was in June, 1910.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not material when it came here; it is not material as to what ancient cause brought forth this result; I insist that it is un-American and un-Republican, and I am considering it from that standpoint.

Each of the political parties, Mr. President, has always declared itself to be the firm and steadfast friend of the American laborer; but no party on earth has so carefully safeguarded the real interest of the laborer as the Republican Party. If we had no other criterion than declarations we well might pause as to which party to intrust our interest. But the interest of labor, like the interest of any business in this country, depends upon proper legislation and national policies. Policies which destroy our commerce, which annihilate our industries, ever have been and ever will be destructive to labor interests. Policies which promote industrial development, which increase our exports, which open up new fields of employment, which give confidence to investment of capital, always have resulted and always will result in more extensive employment and better wages to the laboring man. No more glaring example of the truth of this assertion could be given than a comparison of the condition of labor under the last Cleveland administration with the condition of labor and business since 1896.

The best friend of the laboring man is the party or the Congress which will give him the greatest opportunity to work at the greatest remuneration. Talk will not produce this. Bluster will not produce it. Appealing to prejudices will not produce it. Granting special privileges or exemptions will not produce it. It can be produced in one way and one way only, and that is by so conducting our national affairs as to give the country the greatest possible prosperity. General stagnation is the graveyard of labor hopes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator has just stated that creating special privileges will not create prosperity. In what way has his party ever undertaken to build up any industry except by creating a special privilege and taxing the people for its support?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a privilege which gives to the American citizen as a citizen the first and superior opportunity in the American market is a proper privilege. That belongs to citizenship in general and not to class.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator says that the privilege belongs to citizenship. Is he not aware of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that it is absolutely unconstitutional to levy a tax upon one class of citizens for the emolument and profit of another, and that instead of belonging to citizenship as a right the exercise of it is in the teeth of the Constitution itself?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the value of all labor is finally fixed by the value of its product in the field of consumption. Neither labor union nor capital union can eliminate that law. There must be a demand for the product. Back of the demand must be a prosperity which will assure ability to pay. The political party or the Congress whose precepts carried into effective legislation maintain prosperity and ability to pay subserves the real interest and is the true friend of the laboring man. The party or the Congress whose policies spell industrial stagnation is the enemy of labor, no matter what its declarations are.

The last 16 years of American history ought to demonstrate to every citizen which of the two great political parties can best be intrusted to maintain this prosperity.

It is true that we declare for one law for all men—rich or poor, black or white, capitalist, business man, or laborer. I recognize the right of capital to combine for legitimate industry or commerce to cheapen production and assist in the distribution of what it produces. I recognize the right of labor to combine to facilitate its interests, to increase the individual earnings of its members, and to promote the general prosperity of the workingmen of the country. But I deny the right of the one to combine to stifle competition or monopolize trade and the right of the other to destroy an industry which may not conduct its business along lines laid down by it.

This Government can not afford to make one law for one set of men and another for another set. It can not afford to declare that a certain act committed by one man shall be a crime and be punished as such, which act shall be lawful when committed by another. Such a law would be the opening wedge to a despotism which would soon destroy free government. No party can be said to be a true friend of labor which would advocate immunity for a labor organization which would not be granted to all other organizations doing the same act.

And right here let us remember, Mr. President, that public conscience and sympathy, which have been always naturally on the side of the laborers, would experience a change of sentiment if that class were granted special exemptions from a rule deemed necessary to govern the rest of mankind, for the public wants fair play and equality before the law; and if there is any way that a labor union or farmers' union or any other union can incur general hostility and eliminate their asset of sympathy with the American public it is by demanding a special law for their particular class.

Labor unions are useful and, in my opinion, are necessary in order to secure the best possible remuneration for labor service. These unions, however, can not make business. The most they can do is to secure the best results for themselves under conditions over which they have no control.

I am a strong believer in labor organization. I wish to see the laborer marching forward and onward toward a greater and ever greater triumph until he shall reap his legitimate share in the profits of all his toil produces. In my opinion, the highest and happiest condition of humanity will be when the son and daughter of the laborer sit side by side in the higher institutions of learning with the son and daughter of the owner of the business in which he labors, and his wife, in the refinement of her position, and exalted by proper and honest respect for labor, is recognized as the social equal of any woman in the land. But this can only be brought about by education, by the uplifting of labor, by a just recognition of its equal rights by capital and not by special privileges or one-sided laws.

Mr. President, our present industrial system is unnatural. No man ought ever to labor for another man. There should be no employer and employee. It is a system that has grown up during the ages. I believe it is a system that will be gradually worked out of existence. I believe that the cooperative plan of labor and employment is sure to gain ascendency in the end. Every laborer ought to feel that his own interest as well as his heart and mind combine with his efforts, and that he has a direct interest and part ownership in every product which his hand or mind brings forth. But we have not that condition now, and we may never reach it if we write into our laws a class distinction where we must ever after recognize the laborer as one class and the capitalist as another class. I hope to live to see the day when the laborer will have more than a mere labor interest in the product of his skill, when he will be both capitalist and laborer.

Mr. President, I oppose this exemption in behalf of those very farmers who, Senators say, are asking for a special privilege; but above all, Mr. President, I oppose it as a simple American citizen who believes in the equal right of every man before the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when the Sherman antitrust law was originally before Congress in 1890 this same question was presented in a different way to the Congress of the United States. There is no doubt but those who originated the idea of an antitrust law had in mind in the first instance legislation relative to industrial combinations almost exclusively. But as the debate progressed and the subject was discussed more fully it came to be believed that the law was broad enough in its terms to include labor organizations and organizations of farmers. I think it was Senator George, of Mississippi, who first called attention to the matter. I have been told by those who are more familiar with the history of that legislation than myself that Senator George drew the amendment to which I am about to refer, but, nevertheless, the amendment was actually offered in the Senate by Senator Sherman. The amendment offered by Senator Sherman was to follow or rather to become a part of section 1 of the Sherman antitrust law as it now exists, and was in the following words:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between laborers made with the view of lessening the number of hours of labor or of increasing their wages, nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture made with a view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products.

That amendment was adopted by the Senate, but when the bill was sent back to the committee it came out of committee without the amendment, and was passed and became a law, as it now is, without that proviso.

There has been an agitation ever since the passage of the law in favor of this exception—not a considerable agitation upon the part of the farmers, but considerable upon the part of organized labor. Both organized labor and the farmers, however, have undoubtedly favored amending the law. But to amend the law is one thing; to refuse to enforce it so long as it exists is another thing.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me? My attention was diverted for a moment. I think the amendment read by the Senator was stated by him to have been offered by Senator Sherman. Am I correct?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. BACON. I have not examined the RECORD in several years, but my recollection is distinct, and I think if the Senator will examine it he will find that a similar amendment was offered by that very great lawyer and distinguished Senator from Mississippi, Senator George.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what the Senator from Idaho said.

Mr. BACON. I thought he said it was offered by Senator Sherman.

Mr. THOMAS. He said it was offered by Senator George, too.

Mr. BORAH. I said I have been informed that Senator George was actually the author of the amendment, but it was actually offered, according to the RECORD, as it appears, by Senator Sherman, of Ohio.

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the Senator distinctly and I misunderstood him. My recollection was very distinct. I have forgotten whether it appears in the RECORD or not that the author of that amendment was Senator George, of Mississippi.

Mr. BORAH. I think, likely, that is true.

As I was remarking, there has been a great deal of agitation upon the part of organized labor in favor of amending the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Idaho passes away from that stage of his discussion I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the argument made against the amendment was that the bill did not apply and could not apply to laborers' organizations and that in so far as objection was made to the amendment it was nearly altogether upon the ground that it was useless, because the bill did not make a crime out of any combination of workingmen for the purpose of securing increased wages or reduction of hours or betterment of conditions?

Mr. BORAH. There were Senators who entertained the view, especially in the first part of the debate, that the bill would not include labor organizations, but I think anyone must come to agree in reading the debate in full that the Senate finally came to the conclusion that its purpose was to prohibit restraint of trade and not to inquire who were the authors of the restraint. While in the first instance it had in view alone the question of industrial combinations, there can be no doubt, it seems to me, but what as they finally came to pass upon it they thought it unsafe to except any class of people from interfering with interstate trade. I will not at this time go into the debates to substantiate my view, but I have reached that conclusion, and concerning that conclusion I entertain no doubt.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I have now before me the RECORD which contains the correct statement upon which my recollection was based. I have before me an antitrust bill introduced by Senator George. It is Senate bill No. 6, introduced in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress. In the first section, which makes the prohibition general, there is this proviso—and that is the origin of the provision which was afterwards offered by Senator Sherman, I presume. This is the proviso to the antitrust bill which was drawn by Senator George and introduced by him December 4, 1889:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between laborers made with the view of lessening the number of hours of labor or of increasing their wages; nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture made with the view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products.

I presume that is the exact amendment which was afterwards offered by Senator Sherman.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is the exact amendment.

Mr. BACON. That is the origin of it.

Mr. BORAH. I think, as I have said, the Senator from Georgia is correct, and I endeavored to give Senator George full credit for being the real author of this amendment, as I have no doubt he is entitled to that honor.

Mr. President, two years ago the proviso which is now in the pending appropriation bill was passed by the House of Representatives and came to the Senate. The Committee on Appropriations omitted it from the bill in its report, and the report of the committee was adopted upon a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate. This year it came here from the other House and was finally adopted without any yea-and-nay vote by the Senate.

Perhaps it is unnecessary to say so, but when it appeared in the appropriation bill two years ago I expressed the same view with regard to it that I now entertain. In the first place, in my judgment, it is a vain and ineffectual piece of legislation. I do not in saying that mean to impute any wrong motives to those who are urging it, but I think when you come to examine the language you will find it very difficult to arrive at a conclusion as to what it means. It means, it seems to me, to pretend something without actually assuring anything. It establishes a bad precedent without accomplishing what it promises to accomplish.

I can not believe that the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States deliberately intends to leave a law upon the statute books unmodified and unrepealed, and to connive at its violation by any man or any combination of men. I can not believe that there is any considerable class of people in this country associated with labor or associated with agriculture who would ask the Congress of the United States to leave a law upon the statute books and give them permission to violate it, and yet if the proposed law does not mean that it is a vain, ineffectual, duplicitous, insincere, and hypocritical thing. Let us read it. It reads:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful.

Unless all of those things amount to a restraint of trade, unless all of those things enumerated violate the Sherman law, of course this proviso is wholly immaterial. If, on the other hand, those things enumerated do amount to a violation of the Sherman law, then we, as a legislative body, are saying that we have a law which shall be enforced as to some and may be violated as to others. But that is not the worst. We are putting ourselves in a position where we say that interstate trade may be brought to a standstill and interstate commerce actually prohibited by a certain class of people if they have the power to do so. I can interpret this ambiguous language in no other light, and so interpreting I can not agree to support it.

I have an idea that those who are advocating this, in the first instance, assumed that there were certain things which labor had a right to do that it ought not to be restrained from doing in connection with unionism and kindred matters which might possibly come within the purview of the Sherman antitrust law. If the language were sufficiently specific to limit it so that combinations of that character could organize for the purpose of increasing wages and protecting their rights and interests, without amounting to a restraint of trade, if the dividing line could be devised and specifically stated, I would be in favor of it; but the difficulty is, as I say, it either means the thing which amounts to a restraint of trade or else it means nothing so far as this language is concerned. I am thoroughly in favor of leaving labor uninterfered with in all legitimate efforts to increase wages and protect themselves. But this proviso is not necessary for that. It means more or it is useless.

What is the necessity of putting the provision in the bill at all? As has been said by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], there are plenty of other funds by which to enforce the Sherman antitrust law. On the other hand, suppose we leave it out of the bill entirely; there is nothing obligatory upon the Executive Department to use any part of these funds for the purpose of prosecuting this class of combines. View it as we will, it has no other object or purpose apparently than that of establishing a bad precedent of, by indirection, seeming to except from the law a class of people who are in combination as organized laborers and as farmers. I presume that we can regard it from that standpoint if we are to give it any effect at all.

So far as any prosecutions against labor organizations thus far are concerned, they have only been in instances where it did amount to a restraint of trade. There has never been any attempt that I know of or, at least, that I find in the books, where there has been any prosecution, at least sufficiently successful to reach the courts, where the acts of the combination did not amount to an absolute interference with interstate commerce. The first case that I have any knowledge of is the case reported in Fifty-fourth Federal Reporter, where interstate trade was absolutely stopped or prohibited by the interference; the other cases are those which are known as the Receiver cases, where railroads in the hands of receivers were interfered with to such an extent as to wholly stop traffic. But they were all sustained upon the proposition that the act of the parties finally amounted to an actual obstruction of interstate commerce, or such manifest interference as was unreasonable. Of course the most noted case is the Loewe case, which is known as the Danbury Hatters case, in which the Supreme Court of the United States finally held that this law does apply to organized labor.

Mr. President, if this law were before the Senate as an original proposition, if we were in a position to determine whether or not it should apply and under what circumstances it should apply to organized labor or to farmers, a different question entirely would be presented. We might very well say, for some reason, that there should be a limitation, as Sherman and Teller and George and other eminent lawyers and statesmen thought there ought to be, but we are now proceeding in an appropriation bill to except the operation of the law from a certain class without, if I may use the phrase properly, having the courage to go back and amend the law, and we place ourselves in a position where we are leaving a law upon the statute books and at the same time undertaking to except its operation.

I do not propose to discuss the matter at length, but for these reasons I should oppose any exception of this kind, at least until it comes up in the form of an original proposition to amend the law. I think we ought to take up this law and seriously consider the amendments which would meet this situation. I think I shall offer the Sherman amendment to this bill if the motion to strike fails. I can not for a moment consent to leave the law as it is and in this way weaken or destroy its worth.

Mr. President, if I understand the supreme genius of this Government under which we live, it is obedience to law as it is written. You may unwrite the law; you may change or modify its terms, and in doing so you may make such exceptions as are founded upon substantial differences in the struggle of life, but when it is once written and placed among the statutes as a guide, it must be a guide for all, or it will shortly be a guide for none. You may not, while it is there the last expression of the public will, suspend its operation without bringing into peril the whole vast fabric, for the cancer, which no human power has ever been able to eradicate when once it has fastened its poisonous and spreading fangs upon the life of a republic, is disobedience to the law. When the representatives of an entire people, of all stations and both sexes, of every race, color, and condition of life, crystallize the views of those they represent into a rule of action, that rule is universal, imperious, and indifferent to all who violate its terms. If it be a bad rule, it is our duty to change it in the open, manly way provided by the Constitution, but not to compromise with candor by suspending its operation as to some and then seek to compensate our conscience by crying the louder for its enforcement as to others.

I am in full sympathy with the effort of labor to secure the enactment of better laws—laws which will more effectually protect their rights and insure a fairer distribution of the wealth which their labor creates. But for this very reason, if I had no other, I would be opposed to precedents which would undermine the stability or render wholly worthless those laws when once enacted. If there is anything well established by the experience of nations it is that you can not confine a disregard for the law to a part of the people and enforce respect and obedience from another part. Even in the old days when class distinctions were pronounced and rigid, the virus would spread from one class to another and ultimately the whole community found itself one in disorder and crime though divorced in all other things. I have said many times, and I repeat it here, that I would either take this law off of the statute books or I would put every man in stripes who violates the law and let business chaos come. Better have business chaos for a season than a civic breakdown and moral disintegration, for this will follow as inevitably as the night follows the day if this disregard for law is to continue. I stand ready to take up this law, reconsider it, make it plain and enforceable, and make it conform to the best judgment of the present day. But while it is here I can not for any reason connive at its violation.

Permit me to say to the man of labor it has never been a matter of very much concern to the man of great wealth under what form of government he lives. The man of wealth can get along; he always has got along pretty well under any form of government. In the hour of lawlessness, when disorder and crime prevail, he finds a way to protect himself. But there is only one sure and certain protection and safeguard for the poor, and that is a government of just and equal laws, faithfully enforced, universally obeyed. That is the goal for which he should always strive—that means peace and prosperity; it means educated children and comfortable homes. He finds his protection in a free, open Republic in whose supreme power and honor all may share and whose orderly justice all may enjoy. Such a government can only come from a law-abiding, home-loving people. In the hour when the supreme question overtopping all others is enforcement of the law, obedience and respect for the expressed mandates of the people, in God's name let not those who are most interested in that great issue either ask or give quarter. Let us either obey the law or repeal it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I expect to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but lest I might be thought to concur in all the views that have been expressed favoring the amendment I want a word upon it.

Historically I think that what has just been said is inaccurate. The Sherman antitrust bill, so called, came into the Senate of the United States, I believe, either late in 1888 or early in 1889. It was debated at various times for nearly two years. Originally it was referred to the Committee on Finance, together with a great many amendments that were proposed, but during the two years of debate, as I remember it, the phrase "in restraint of trade" had not been employed in the bill or in any amendment. The bill was finally referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and was very soon reported from that committee in a form prepared either by the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, or the then Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar. There is some controversy between the former distinguished Senator and the descendants of the latter Senator with regard to the authorship of the bill as it finally became a law. However that may be, as I remember, when the Judiciary Committee made its report in 1890 for the first time the prohibition took the form which it now bears, namely, a prohibition against restraint of trade.

As I recall, the controversy with regard to the exception of labor unions was chiefly directed to the bill while in the form debated in 1889 and not to the form which the bill finally assumed. I say this in justice to the leaders of the labor movement. I believe that they were assured, after the bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in the form in which it now is, that it did not include labor unions. I believe they suspended or ceased their opposition to it because of that assurance. This is the history of that enactment, and I think there was very great surprise when it was afterwards claimed that the terms of the law embraced the labor unions and when it was afterwards declared by the Supreme Court of the United States that its terms did include organizations of the kind I have described.

So much I have said because I believe that the labor unions have been entirely consistent, as well as persistent, in the claim that this law does not fairly embrace such organizations as are now known as labor unions. However, the fact remains that the Supreme Court of the United States has said that the law does include organizations of this character. It has almost said that physical interference with the instrumentalities of trade is restraint of trade, a thing which no English court, from which we took the phrase "in restraint of trade," had ever suggested in all the development of the subject. Personally I do not believe that physical interference with trains or factories constitutes a restraint of trade in the sense of the antitrust law, although such interferences may be and ought to be offenses against other laws.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is mistaken also with regard to the attitude of the farmers of the country. The largest organization of farmers in the United States is now, or was recently, petitioning Congress to so change the antitrust law as to enable the farmers to combine in a manner that under the construction of the statute would be a violation of its provisions. The officers of this association appeared not long ago before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which my friend from Michigan is a distinguished member, asking for that change in the law. At the same time one of the leaders in the labor movement in America, the distinguished president of the American Federation of Labor, appeared and asked the same thing; and we now have under consideration before the Interstate Commerce Committee the question of whether the law should be so amended as to remove certain phases of combination among farmers and certain phases of combination among laboring men from the scope of the antitrust law.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I recall very well the circumstance to which the Senator refers; but has any farmer's organization suggested that this particular amendment in this bill—and that is what I was directing my discussion to—be enacted in this form? Did they discuss that provision before the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. In so far as I know, no farmer's organization presented such a request to the committee. I am simply supplying the history of the matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is not correcting anything that I said. I was discussing the question of doing this either directly or indirectly.

Mr. CUMMINS. If I am in error in regard to what the Senator from Michigan said, I beg his pardon. I thought he took the position that there was no desire on the part of the farmers of this country that certain organizations, into which many of them enter, should be released from the effect of the antitrust law. I was sure I could refresh his memory upon that point; but if he says that no farmer's organization has requested that the Congress of the United States make a declaration that if they violate the law they shall not be punished for it, I quite agree with the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I did say.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not recall any such request. So much, Mr. President, I feel bound to say in order to lead up to this proposition: I believe that there are certain things connected with labor unions which are now declared to be unlawful which ought to be lawful. I think the Supreme Court of the United States has strained this law unnaturally and unnecessarily in order to bring within its provisions certain phases of labor organizations, and I am for amending the law so as to make certain things lawful which now seem to be unlawful under the decisions of our courts. But so long as they are unlawful I am not willing to say that any moneys that are provided for the administration of justice shall not be expended in their prosecution. We must have class or special legislation. In a sense, nearly every law that we pass is class legislation, because we must apply it to the peculiar and special conditions which arise and surround it; but when we pass a law, everyone who comes within its provisions as construed by the judicial tribunals appointed for that purpose must obey the law if we are to perpetuate the institutions of which we are so justly proud.

I am not able to conceive or understand that frame of mind which asks that a violator of the law shall be exempted from the prosecution provided by the law. I can conceive of nothing more destructive to the very cause which these organizations represent and which I think is as high and as worthy a cause as was ever led by faithful men. I can conceive of nothing that will eventually be more disastrous to their own welfare than the suggestion that the law shall not be obeyed, and that the law being violated shall not be vindicated in the prosecution and punishment of the offender.

I for one would like to see this whole clause stricken out. I do not believe in making an appropriation especially for the enforcement of the antitrust law, as great a statute as I believe it to be. I do not concur either with the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] or with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the law has been without value to the American people. I think it has been of tremendous advantage to the people of the United States. While its enforcement has been at times weak, while it has been often inefficient, I still believe it has done as much for the welfare of the industrial society of this country as any other statute ever passed by the American Congress, for if we had not the prohibition which appears so plainly in the statute it is not possible to conceive the extent of combination and monopoly that would now exist. I therefore want this statute to stand; I want it to be enforced; but I can not understand why we did not make the appropriation for the maintenance of the Department of Justice sufficiently large to enable it to do its work. It has not been explained to me why we need an especial appropriation for the enforcement of a particular law. That is bad legislation, as well as the proposal to except from this expenditure the prosecution of any offender, whether high or low, whether rich or poor, whether he belongs to the class of employers or the class of employees. If I had my way about it I would strike out the entire paragraph, so that in the future we may appropriate for the Department of Justice a sum of money applicable to all purposes sufficient to enable it to carry on its work efficiently; but this appropriation has passed the House, and I think it is one of several that has passed the House in recent years in the same form, and passed the Senate as well, and I do not intend to oppose it upon that ground.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. This provision in the bill expressly excepts from its terms any act which is itself unlawful. The Senator will recognize, of course, that if this provision should become law, saying that no part of the money shall be used in the prosecution of persons who may do any of the things specified here, that it could not be construed otherwise than as at least a pro tempore modification of the law.

The officers whose duty it is to prosecute are not paid for the particular cases they prosecute. They are paid salaries. The amount of money that goes to an officer in the discharge of his duty as a prosecuting officer can not be reduced in such a way as to represent the withholding of payment for the service which he rendered in the prosecution of any particular case. Therefore when you come down to a practical consideration of this provision it is an impossibility for it to mean anything else than that it is the sense of Congress that this law shall be so construed as not to include liability to prosecution for these causes. Otherwise there is nothing practical in it.

If it were true that the officers were paid a certain specified sum of money for the prosecution of each case, then it might be said that the contention of the Senator was a very serious one; that this is an effort on the part of Congress to prevent the enforcement of a law while permitting the law to remain on the statute books.

While I confess this is a clumsy way of accomplishing the purpose, at the same time it seems to me that there can be no other purpose effected, at least by the enactment of this provision into law, except to indicate the purpose of the legislative mind that so far as this bill will go, so long as it shall remain in force and effect, these combinations of men for the purpose of bettering their condition by improving wages, and so forth, shall not be a violation of law.

Of course we must all recognize that there is very great force in the contention of the Senator in the view presented by him that it is a very serious thing to permit a criminal law to remain upon the statute books and then to say that it shall not be enforced. But in practical effect that is not what we are doing, and it can not be so in the nature of things. It can not be so unless the prosecuting officer who tries the case would ordinarily be paid for that particular case, and is denied payment for it; and that is not the case where officers are paid a salary. It can not have any effect in reducing the amount of money which would be paid to the officer who receives a salary. It can have no effect except to put the courts upon notice that so long as this provision is in force such and such combinations on the part of labor or agricultural organizations shall not be violations of law. Is not that the effect of it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not quite sure whether the Senator from Georgia holds that this provision has the effect of modifying the existing law, or has the effect of an instruction to a prosecutor. I think it has the latter effect, morally speaking. I do not think it modifies the law in any sense; but it does say that Congress believes that the Department of Justice ought not to prosecute an offender against the antitrust law who comes within these classes. I do not think that is a wise course to pursue. I believe if we were to fall into the habit of treating an unpopular law, if you please, in that way, we should speedily forget the essential and fundamental principles of good government. We will accomplish here nothing more than to say to the Attorney General: "On the whole, we are rather sorry that we did not exempt labor unions and farmers' organizations from the operation of the antitrust law, and therefore you must use no part of the $300,000 that we now give you to bring such offenders to justice."

I think that is essentially wrong, although I will join at once in an effort—or, rather, continue to make an effort that I have been making for several years now—to supplement the antitrust law by additional legislation so as to do full justice to labor unions and farmers' organizations.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I repeat that I agree with him that this is a very clumsy way of effecting the purpose. It is not the way which I should choose, or which I have chosen. I will say to the Senator that in the last Congress I introduced a bill for the direct purpose which he now says he would favor, and I reintroduced the bill in this Congress, for the purpose of making those agreements no longer unlawful. It is Senate bill 927.

Mr. CUMMINS. I remember the bill very well.

Mr. BACON. It has been referred to the Judiciary Committee; and as the Senator is a member of that committee I hope we may have his distinguished assistance in securing its passage.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Georgia will see in a moment, if he will reflect, that if a prosecuting attorney were to present a case to a grand jury, and an indictment were found against a labor union or its members for violation of the antitrust law, it would be no defense to present this provision in an appropriation bill; and if it would be no defense, then, of course, we are not modifying the law either clumsily or skillfully. We are possibly bringing some influence to bear upon the prosecuting officer, but that is all.

I believe the influence ought to be brought to bear upon the law itself, so that we need not say to any agency of the Government, "You may be somewhat blind, or altogether blind, to certain offenses against the law which we ourselves have established."

Therefore, Mr. President, although I shall feel that my vote does not fully express my view of what ought to be, I shall vote to rid this appropriation of the exceptions which have been attached to it, believing that every offender against the law ought to know that he will meet the punishment which the law establishes for him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to make a suggestion. To my mind, one of the serious objections to this proviso lies in the fact that it may become a very dangerous precedent. If Congress should enact this proviso as it now appears, which is negative in its character, might it not become a precedent for some other Congress to provide that such a sum shall be spent exclusively in the prosecution of the very things whose prosecution is here prohibited?

Mr. CUMMINS. The suggestion of the Senator from Colorado simply emphasizes the conclusions I have attempted to state. If the law ought to be amended, let us amend it at once; but to nullify it by saying to the Executive that it ought not to be enforced is sowing the seed of anarchy and destruction.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, while the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was speaking I received a telegram which I have here. As I understood him, he said that the workingmen, the union-labor men, were not particularly interested in this legislation. If I misunderstood the Senator, I will ask him to correct me.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator addressing his remarks to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STONE. I said that I understood the Senator to express the opinion that the labor organizations of the country were not particularly in sympathy with the legislation here proposed.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; the Senator from Idaho made no such statement as that.

Mr. STONE. Then I misunderstood the Senator. It so happened that while he was making his remarks and I was listening to him with interest a dispatch was handed me, signed by officials of different railway organizations, saying, in substance:

In behalf of 400,000 members of the railway employees' organizations we urge you to vote for and use whatever influence you can to pass this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know what language I used which would have been subject to that construction. I did not intend to say anything of the kind, because I have on my desk a letter of some 15 pages from the head of the American Federation of Labor in favor of it. I have had personal interviews with labor representatives who are in favor of it.

If I said anything of that kind, it was a slip of the tongue. It was not intentional.

Mr. STONE. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I think upon looking at the RECORD the Senator will see that he misunderstood my language.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not think this question ought to take on the color of partisanship. I think everything of that kind ought to be eliminated, and that we should consider it alone from the broad standpoint of the public right.

This bill appropriates $300,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. The purpose of the provision is plainly expressed—it is to appropriate money to aid the Department of Justice to enforce the antitrust laws. Then follows the provisos. I read the first proviso:

> That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful.

This is the more important of the two provisos. The other proviso relates to agricultural organizations, which is less important, because less likely to be made the subject of judicial inquiry.

Now, keeping my promise to be brief, let me begin in this way: Let us take the Sherman law as the beginning of this antitrust legislation and consider that as the organic act upon which other legislation of this kind has been predicated. Is it not plain that the thought in the minds of the legislators in the beginning had no reference to labor organizations? I think the Senator from Idaho has quite well emphasized that fact. There had grown up in this country a system of commercial or industrial organizations relating to manufactures, to mining, to transportation, and other things by and through which production was limited, prices fixed, and the whole industrial life of the country controlled.

In other words, commercial and industrial monopoly had been in large measure established. This became very obnoxious to the people. The laws enacted were intended as blows at monopoly—industrial, commercial monopoly. Corporations were the ordinary agencies through which these monopolies operated and became effective. It was through corporate bodies that these industrial forces were combined and operated. The effect of these combinations was to do an injury and a positive harm in a large way to the great body of the American people of all classes.

These combinations undertook to control the price of commodities, the cost of transportation, and all that, and thus imposed grievous burdens on the people, against which they made loud complaint. They undertook by combination in divers lines of manufacturing to dominate the markets of the country and to destroy competition, and thus control the market price at which their products should be sold to the consuming public. This was regarded as a positive evil, and the Congress determined to make war upon that evil; and to that end, and to that end only, the Sherman antitrust law and supplemental laws were enacted.

I know that by judicial interpretation or judicial legislation these laws have been extended in their operation until they cover a far wider field than they were intended to cover by the men who wrote them into the statute books of the country. They have been held to apply to men who meet not to limit commercial production, not to fix commodity prices, not to fix rates of transportation, not to fix tariff rates and write them into tariff schedules—nothing of that kind, but who organize and meet only and solely to improve and rectify unhappy human conditions existing among the workingmen themselves.

For example, if they find here and there that the wages they receive are too small, not enough to support their families, or that the hours of labor are too long and hard, or that there are other industrial environments and conditions extremely objectionable to them, and they meet in their organizations to confer among themselves, and then through their organizations with their employers to see if agreements can be reached, shall such men be restrained? And if agreements are not arrived at, and the men say, "Unless you advance the wage, unless you improve the condition complained of, whatever it is, we will decline to go on with the work. We will no longer engage in your employment." Here is a combination; but if it be lawful and orderly, why should any man object to that?

Have not men a right to say that? True, they are organized; they confer together, and they send out word to their fellows everywhere as to what they intend to do and what they advise others to aid in doing. This is a human action that concerns fundamentally the question whether or not men shall work unless their demands for improved conditions are complied with.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a great many years ago, during the Homestead strike, which was a very serious matter, it chanced to be my lot to be chairman of a committee of investigation. On that committee there were some able Democrats. After a very thorough investigation, covering Chicago, Pittsburgh, Homestead, New York, and other places, we made a report. The first finding in that report, I think, reads about as follows: That men have an entire and absolute right to quit work at pleasure, but they have no right in law or in justice to prevent others from taking their places.

I think we all agree to the proposition laid down by the Senator from Missouri that workingmen have a right to organize, and that they have a right to strike when they think their interests are involved; but does the Senator think they ought to go beyond that, and, by force or otherwise, prevent other American citizens from taking their places, or from engaging in work for the men with whom they have formerly been associated?

Mr. STONE. I think it is the right of any American in a battle of this kind to appeal to his fellow men not to take a course calculated to break down the effort they are making for improved labor conditions. They have a right to make that plea in every lawful way. To that extent the question of the Senator answers itself. If he asks me if they have a right to resort to unlawful, forceful, criminal means to accomplish what they fail to accomplish by peaceful and lawful means, then I say that would be intolerable; it is not permissive.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me to supplement what he says——

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. By calling attention to the fact that the law which we propose to enact expressly excludes unlawful acts from any benefit of this provision, and uses the words "or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful." Of course acts of violence are unlawful.

Mr. STONE. To be sure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a pretty elastic provision. It involves the question just how far lawful acts will go and where unlawful acts will commence. As I understand the matter, these organizations insist that they have a lawful right to picket a factory and to assault men and women who want to take their places. They assert that over and over again.

Mr. STONE. Just what "picketing a factory" means is something I am not altogether familiar with.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is pretty well understood in our part of the country.

Mr. STONE. I will say without hesitancy that if men or women desire to stand on the streets or highways in the neighborhood of factories or elsewhere and talk with employees going in or out of a factory in a peaceful and proper way, saying what they wish, they have a right to do that. I deny the right of anybody to forcefully interfere with other people. If anyone attempts to use force, then I say the public authority should exert itself, and all those engaged in anything of that kind should be made to pay the penalty of violating the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. But, Mr. President, there is nothing in this provision which prevents that. The Senator suggests a violation of the law. If I should assault the Senator under such circumstances as he supposes, I would be responsible to the criminal courts of the vicinage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but the man who is killed under such circumstances has not any recourse of that kind.

Mr. STONE. No; that man would not. The dead man would be gone to that—> undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns.

If to-night I were so criminally disposed that upon our adjournment I shot the Senator dead there would be no remedy for him, but there would be my responsibility to the public authority.

Mr. GALLINGER. But Mr. Hayward and Mr. Ettor would say there ought not to be any remedy, because they are above the law and they have openly proclaimed it.

Mr. STONE. I am not talking about Mr. Hayward and Mr. Ettor. I do not know anything about them, and I do not care about them. I am speaking of great questions of human right.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator remembers it has not been long ago since this Chamber rang with denunciation of the conditions in Lawrence, Mass., and that violence was resorted to, that men were assaulted and one woman was killed. The result of it all is that there are 12,000 people in Lawrence, Mass., out of employment to-day. So their effort to benefit labor by unusual and revolutionary and violent means has resulted in great harm to the laboring people themselves.

Mr. STONE. I hope I do not understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say, and I do not believe he means to say, that because some individual or number of individuals moving in concert should commit assault, or even murder, therefore we should deny to working men and women the right of organization, the right to confer, the right to take action looking to the improvement of their conditions; aye, further, of conferring with other working men and women whose course of conduct might be calculated to make their movement a failure or success—peaceful always and within the absolute limits of the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I would be quite unwilling to be placed in the category of those who deny laboring men the right of organization. I think they have an undoubted right—I think it is their duty—to organize, and I would be the last one to make a suggestion that that should not be permitted. What I called attention to more particularly was the fact that these organizations sometimes go beyond their rights and do commit acts of violence, the claim being made on the part of their leaders that they are above the law, and they do not propose to observe the law. Those declarations have been made over and over again.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as I have already said, anything done in violation of law and public order is intolerable and should be severely punished. We must enforce the law and preserve order or else chaos follows. Still, I repeat that it is clear to me that the legislative power which enacted these laws in the beginning intended them to apply only to commercial or industrial organizations—business organizations—to prevent combinations, and that that was done with the ultimate view of preventing commercial monopoly. I am aware that by judicial interpretation or legislation—I say this with great respect, for I highly respect the judiciary—it seems to me by a very strained construction of the courts these laws have been expanded so as to cover such labor organizations as we are talking about. For the time being, at least, we must accept the law as declared by the courts. So long as it stands as the court declares it to be, we must accept it, I suppose; nevertheless we are presumed to have some opinions of our own.

I agree with what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and others have said, that the better plan would be to go back to the antitrust statutes themselves and amend them, if we wish to amend them. I agree to that, and I hope in due time, in the course of this Democratic administration, we will be able to make such amendments to these statutes as ought to be made.

But, Mr. President, this particular provision in the pending bill, while not a direct amendment to the antitrust statutes, does provide that no part of the $300,000 appropriated shall be used to prosecute men who lawfully—mark you, lawfully—undertake to take care of the interests committed to their hands; that is to say, to better labor conditions, to ask for better wages, to ask for better hours, to ask for better labor environments. "Lawfully" is the language of the statute; not unlawfully. If one acts unlawfully he is amenable to the courts of the State and to the national courts, so far as national courts may have jurisdiction, and this without regard to this proposed statute. An unlawful act is a violation of the criminal law, and the violator can be indicted and prosecuted. This provision would not prevent that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. But this is, as my friend the Senator from Georgia said a bit ago, a legislative expression of opinion. The moneys are appropriated here to do what? Here is the language: For the "enforcement of antitrust laws." And the antitrust laws, as I have understood and attempted to explain my view, in being enforced were not to be used to prosecute organized-labor people who are lawfully endeavoring to better their conditions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Missouri that labor organizations or anybody else lawfully doing any of the things described could be prosecuted in the absence of this proviso?

Mr. STONE. I do not know. I confess myself unable to quite understand the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has been talking——

Mr. STONE. Just what the Senator means by lawfully——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has been using that term; I have not.

Mr. STONE. Here is what I mean by "lawfully" or "unlawfully." If a court should say that men and women in a given labor organization can not say, "We decline to work for a given wage or for given hours; that we will quit the employment of our master unless conditions are rectified," and then some others come in and take their places, and then the workmen say, "We will see these people; we will talk with them; we will contrive with them to see to it that they do not stand in the way of our effort," an injunction might go against them on the ground that they were acting unlawfully. That is not what I mean by "unlawful"—unless force is used. What I mean by "unlawful" is the use of some force that brings one into conflict with the criminal laws of the State or Nation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not the Senator from Missouri mean by "unlawful" an act which would be in violation of the antitrust law? Would not that be unlawful?

Mr. STONE. I am not so sure about that from my point of view. Broadly I am not ready to admit that, at least in the sense in which I speak of it; and I think it is a strained judicial interpretation of the antitrust laws to undertake in such a case as I have stated to issue a mandatory injunction against labor organizations and say that they can not do a thing peacefully and without violence.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. STONE. The Senator may ask me all the questions he wishes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If a labor organization or an individual belonging to a labor organization were to enter into a conspiracy or a combination which was actually in restraint of trade and which was a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, would the Senator think that the proviso we are now discussing would prevent the Attorney General from using any part of the appropriation of $300,000 to prosecute that kind of a case?

Mr. STONE. Well, state a case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am stating a case.

Mr. STONE. If he entered into a combination in restraint of trade was the Senator's observation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will put it in another way. If the individuals engage in this——

Mr. STONE. Give me a concrete case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wanted to get the Senator's view of the principle, if I could. Suppose that some labor organization or labor organizations do such things as in the opinion of the courts, which have a right to interpret the law, amount to a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, would the Senator think that this proviso would prevent the Attorney General from using a part of the appropriation of $300,000 to prosecute that case?

Mr. STONE. I think very likely it would, and I hope it would; but I do not think it would prevent the court or the district attorney from proceeding, if desired, notwithstanding this provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is, proceeding to use some other appropriation?

Mr. STONE. Yes; such other appropriation as might be available. They could proceed without reference to this act. This appropriation is not necessary to give the court jurisdiction. A court could proceed without reference to this act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, if I understand the Senator, his position is that no part of the $300,000 could be used for this purpose, but that notwithstanding the Attorney General could prosecute the case.

Mr. STONE. Oh, I should not think there was a question of doubt but that the Attorney General might proceed without reference to this appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator is right about that, would it not be the duty of the Attorney General to prosecute, because the Constitution provides that the Executive shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed? Would it not then be the duty of the Executive, if no laws of Congress prevented him, to execute this law as well as all others?

Mr. STONE. I remit the question to the Attorney General to determine what he may do. If the law has been violated, the Attorney General has power to proceed, whether this provision is agreed to or not in the form in which it is here presented.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then what have we accomplished for the benefit of these men?

Mr. STONE. We would accomplish this much: It would be the expression of the Congress of the United States that money appropriated to enforce the antitrust law against combinations and monopoly should not be used to prosecute men who are lawfully engaged in attempting to better their human conditions. We will at least have accomplished that much. I will go further. I think it would be an expression of the legislative body that could be taken as contrary to the judicial interpretation of the law; that it was never intended that these antitrust laws should be used for any such purpose as they have been used for. The lawmaking power, answering the court, would say what was meant; and I assume that would have some effect even on the judicial construing power.

Mr. President, I think this is about all I care to say. I shall vote for the provision of the bill as it is, and I am going to do it for the reasons I have indicated.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate more than a minute. I want to call the attention of the Senate to one fact which illustrates the contention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that the provision which is now proposed to be incorporated into the law and which was originally proposed in the antitrust law was left out of the bill when it was finally put upon its passage because of the fact that it was generally conceded and understood and recognized that the bill as framed would not cover the case either of labor organizations in the effort to better their condition, or the case of the agriculturists in the effort to get the best prices for their products. The fact is that such earnest men as were then in the Senate, men who had themselves proposed this provision of law as an amendment, such men as Senator George and others who thought with him, when the bill finally came upon its passage without that provision voted for the bill. I have not the vote before me but I think I am accurate in my recollection that when that bill was put upon its passage in the Senate there was but one vote against it, and that was cast by Senator Blodgett, of New Jersey.

The men who were anxious and earnest that the labor organizations of the country should not be put in a criminal attitude when they sought to better their condition by methods which in themselves were not unlawful, and that agriculturists, when they sought to secure for themselves the benefit of the best prices by methods which were within themselves not unlawful, would not have voted for that bill with practical unanimity if it had not been for the recognition of the fact that it was not intended that the law at that time should include those two classes who are now ruled by the courts to be violators of the law.

It is true that the decisions of the courts have heretofore been in a measure limited to matters which relate to the labor organizations, but there can be no question of the fact that the same logic or system of reasoning which brings the court to the conclusion that the antitrust law does cover agreements among laborers will also be used to rule that agreements among agriculturists for the purpose of endeavoring to get the best prices for their products will also be unlawful and under the ban of this law and that those who violate it will be subject to its penalties.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside and that its consideration be resumed to-morrow morning after the completion of the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

PAINT CREEK COAL FIELDS, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I desire to call up the resolution submitted by me some days ago and reported with amendments by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business No. 10, Senate resolution 37, introduced by Mr. KERN, authorizing the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district of West Virginia.

Mr. KERN. It will not require unanimous consent, Mr. President, as I understand. I call the resolution up. It is on the calendar. I move that the resolution as reported by the committee be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is the resolution before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the resolution is before the Senate. There seems to have been no objection to it.

Mr. KERN. The resolution has been reported by the committee with certain amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the resolution is on the calendar. I desire to know whether or not it is now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that it is.

Mr. KERN. I have called up the report of the committee, which is on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the question put to the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Indiana?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The Senator from Indiana asked that the resolution be taken up by unanimous consent. The Chair inquired if there was any objection, and no Senator objected.

Mr. OLIVER. I think if the minutes be consulted it will be found that the Chair did not put the question to the Senate as to whether unanimous consent should be given. I am sure I had no opportunity to object.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I remember, what the Senator from Indiana said was that he would withdraw his request for unanimous consent and ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I did.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator did not put it in the shape of a motion.

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir; it is in the shape of a motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I will say that the motion was not put to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion was not put to the Senate. The Senator from Utah is correct.

Mr. KERN. If the Senator from Utah will excuse me a moment, the proceeding was this: The report of the committee is upon the table. I called it up. I then moved that the report of the committee be concurred in, that the resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee be adopted; that is, to send this investigation to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, as I remember, the history of the resolution is this: This morning the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] reported the resolution, it went to the calendar, and it is now on the calendar under Rule VIII. I will admit that the Senator from Indiana can move to take up the resolution and have it considered at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Utah is mistaken. This is a resolution which comes from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It came before the Senate several days ago in the shape of a report from the committee. Unanimous consent for its immediate consideration was not asked. It went, therefore, to the calendar. I have forgotten when the resolution was reported, but I believe it was at the meeting of the Senate before the last.

Mr. KERN. The meeting before the last, and, at the request——

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the meeting of the Senate before the last a report was made on the resolution by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I then called the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact, and asked whether he wanted to request immediate consideration of the resolution. He said no, and the resolution went to the calendar in the regular course.

Mr. SMOOT. I was mistaken as to the resolution. I thought it was a resolution which was reported by the Senator from North Carolina, but I find on the calendar, under Rule VIII, Order of Business No. 10, Senate resolution No. 37, reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the Senate.

The only proper way for the Senator from Indiana to do is to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 37, Calendar No. 10. The resolution is not now before the Senate at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Senator from Indiana asked unanimous consent to take from the calendar and to have considered the resolution, and the request was put to the Senate, and no Senator objected.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I call for the reading of the minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Indiana withdrew his request, and the minutes will so show.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the minutes be read.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Indiana withdrew his request because he was laboring under a misapprehension. He thought the report was on the table and not on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the consideration of the resolution, Mr. President; but I do say that the Senator from Indiana withdrew his request for unanimous consent, as he has just admitted. If the Senator makes a motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 37, that will be the proper way to proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire——

Mr. KERN. I move, then, Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to make this observation: I was not prepared to give unanimous consent without asking the Senator a question, and I felt very sure that unanimous consent was not given. I am not going to get into any controversy with either the Senator from Indiana or the Chair as to that. The Chair is stating his recollection, but I do not think the resolution is before the Senate. I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that the usual method, the invariable method, unless unanimous consent is asked, is to move to proceed to the consideration of a resolution, and I presume there will be no serious objection to that course in this instance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair cares nothing about the ruling one way or the other, except that the Chair proceeded as he has since the chair has been occupied by the present incumbent by asking whether there was any objection, and there being none, the Chair assumed that the resolution was before the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to hear the minutes read as to what actually did happen. It seems to me the presiding officer is hardly correct in his recollection of what occurred. I was paying attention, and I have no recollection of the question of unanimous consent being put to the Senate. I am free to say that, if unanimous consent were asked now, I would not object; but I am sure that no opportunity was given to Senators who might wish to object.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, there was much confusion in the Chamber at the moment, and, in view of the misunderstanding that evidently prevails, I again ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Before that request is put to the Senate, I wish to state that I notice that neither Senator from West Virginia is on the floor. The Senator from Indiana may know something about their wishes in the premises.

Mr. KERN. I will state that on Saturday evening I had a conversation with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and told him that I intended to ask to-day for the consideration of the resolution with a view of having the matter referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and that was perfectly agreeable to him. He went away with that understanding. I let the matter go over on Thursday last because of the absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and, as there seems to be no opposition anywhere to the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor, I think it ought to be disposed of to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I fully concur, if it only involves a reference to a committee, but, if the Senator was asking for the resolution to be considered, I did want to be assured that the Senators from West Virginia do not object. However, if it is only a question of referring the resolution to the Committee on Education and Labor, I do not feel that anybody should object to that.

Mr. KERN. It implies the adoption of the resolution. The resolution directs the Committee on Education and Labor to make this investigation. That is precisely what I notified the senior Senator from West Virginia would be done, and I understood from him that there would be no objection on his part.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to say just this word——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the resolution authorizes nothing, except that it empowers the Committee on Education and Labor to make this investigation.

Mr. KERN. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all. It had to be sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate first, because the expenses of the investigation have to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. So the only question before the Senate to be considered would be as to whether this investigation should be made by the Committee on Education and Labor and the cost of it paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. There can be no possible objection to that. I have been laboring under a slight misapprehension. I thought the Senator from Indiana desired to have the resolution agreed to, and that he did not propose a reference to a standing committee. The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], through his secretary, informed me this morning that that Senator had some amendments he desired to offer to the resolution, and I think the secretary said to me they had been handed to his colleague [Mr. CHILTON]; but his colleague is not present, and I did not feel that we ought to pass the resolution providing for an investigation by a special committee without giving the Senator from West Virginia an opportunity to be heard. If the resolution as it stands proposes simply a reference to the Committee on Education and Labor we ought all to agree to it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is mistaken as to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee amended the resolution in that particular and, instead of sending it to a special committee, sent it to a standing committee.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution would make it the unfinished business, and then he could agree to let it lie over until Wednesday or until the Senators from West Virginia can be present. It will then be the unfinished business and will come up automatically immediately after the morning hour. I think that is the better course to pursue and is one entirely within the sentiment of the Senate, as I understand it, at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I will ask the Senator from Indiana if the resolution directs the Committee on Education and Labor to proceed to make the investigation?

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, does not the Senator from Indiana think that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who has suggested to me through his secretary that he has some amendments to offer to the resolution, ought to be given an opportunity to offer them?

Mr. KERN. In the ordinary course of things I would say yes; but the matter was passed over last Thursday until to-day because of the absence of the junior Senator from West Virginia. I supposed that the two Senators were in entire accord after I had had the conference with the senior Senator from West Virginia on Saturday evening. I understood very positively from him that he had no objection to the adoption of the resolution, and I felt that it was no great discourtesy to call the matter up to-day. However, as it will only involve a delay of a day or two more, I will make the motion suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution and that it lie over, giving notice that I will call it up immediately upon the disposition of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be agreeable to all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator that he make the request in the morning that he will ask to have the resolution considered after the morning hour on Wednesday, if the Senate be in session at that time.

Mr. KERN. I do not know that it will be.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That will give all the time that could reasonably be asked for the appearance of the Senators from West Virginia.

Mr. KERN. Inasmuch as the senior Senator from West Virginia will not be here until Wednesday, I will give notice that I will call the resolution up on that day after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In other words, the Senator will agree to have it informally laid aside until Wednesday. It will then come up automatically, being made the unfinished business. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. KERN. It will be laid aside until the completion of the morning business on Wednesday.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. If the motion to proceed to consider the resolution is agreed to and it becomes the unfinished business, it displaces everything else, does it not?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not necessarily, because it can be informally laid aside if other matters are desired to be taken up.

Mr. STONE. But primarily it displaces everything else.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Oh, yes; it has the right of way.

Mr. STONE. It becomes the unfinished business; but when the sundry civil bill comes up again, then the resolution can be laid aside informally.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Of course.

Mr. STONE. Then there is no object in saying that it will be called up at any given time on Wednesday or Thursday. It is sufficient to say that it is the unfinished business, and if we meet to-morrow, at the proper time the resolution can be laid aside.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are various ways of doing the same thing if the thing is right. That would be one way to do it. The intention was to have this resolution pending, but not to displace the sundry civil bill. That can be taken care of when it is reached.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It can not displace the sundry civil bill, because unanimous consent has been given that the sundry civil bill shall be proceeded with to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Calendar No. 10, Senate resolution 37, by Mr. KERN, authorizing the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district of West Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I now ask that the resolution be laid aside until Wednesday at the expiration of the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks that the resolution be laid aside until the conclusion of the morning business on Wednesday next. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 2 o'clock p. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 6, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 5, 1913.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, God our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast made us and assumed the responsibility of our well-being. "Therefore will I not be afraid, but will put my trust in the covert of Thy wings." Thou hast filled the earth with all things necessary to our existence and surrounded us with Thy glory in the awe-inspiring scenes which bring us to our knees. Therefore my soul shall not be perturbed. Thou hast revealed Thy love in the heart of the Christ, and in Him Thou hast revealed man at his best. Therefore will I put my trust in Thy loving kindness, and I will worship at Thy footstool, and I will try to obey Thy mandates. In the spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 3, 1913, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RUCKER, for 10 days, on account of illness in family.

ELIMINATING CERTAIN LETTERS FROM THE RECORD.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have stricken from the permanent RECORD some 409 letters which were printed through a mistake in the RECORD of Friday, May 2, 1913. As I stated in the House in Committee of the Whole on Saturday last, these letters, in the nature of a petition, were filed by me with the idea of having them printed as a petition. It was not my intention to have them extended in the RECORD. I therefore ask unanimous consent to have them stricken from the permanent record of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that 409 letters printed in the RECORD of Friday, May 2, 1913, be stricken from the permanent RECORD, having been inserted in the current RECORD by mistake. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

380. Ivory tusks in their natural state, or cut vertically across the grain only, with the bark left intact, 20 per cent ad valorem; manufactures of ivory or vegetable ivory, or of which either of these substances is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem; manufactures of mother-of-pearl and shell, plaster of Paris, papier-mâché, and vulcanized india rubber known as "hard rubber," or of which these substances or any of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 25 per cent ad valorem; shells engraved, cut, ornamented, or otherwise manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 95, line 14, strike out "Ivory tusks in their natural state, or cut vertically across the grain only, with the bark left intact, 20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will divide the time with the gentleman.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, ivory tusks are not indigenous to the United States. This is a proposition to put them on the free list, as they are in the Payne law, and not upon the dutiable list, as in the present bill. They enter very largely into the manufacture of piano keys. They are free of duty in Germany, which is the greatest competitor of the United States in the manufacture of pianos. Some gentlemen interested in this business in Cambridgeport, Mass., have indicated that it would be destructive of the business in the United States if these ivory tusks are made dutiable, as proposed in the Underwood bill. They were under the impression, as they write, that the Democratic Party had promised not to destroy any legitimate industry, and they feel this is a breach of Democratic faith. I find there are manufacturers of pianos in the city of Philadelphia who hold the same opinion. Whether or not these gentlemen were lured into voting for the Democratic Party last year I do not know; but whether they were or not, they now find what they believed to be a promise that "legitimate industry" would not be affected by the Democratic majority is being violated. I have nothing to say further, except that the admission of certain free raw materials which are not produced in this country and which enter into manufactures here adds to labor's opportunity for employment in the United States. In such cases there is no real objection on the part of protectionists. I submit herewith the letters to which I have referred:

SECTION 380. IVORY TUSKS, DUTY 20 PER CENT; ALWAYS FREE HERETOFORE.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS., May 3,, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have $500,000 invested in the business of manufacturing ivory keys for pianos. Last year our importations of raw ivory amounted to $191,000 and our pay roll $200,000. The cost of the ivory is 50 per cent of the cost of the finished product. Eighty-five per cent of the pianos disposed of in the United States are sold on installments of about $5 a month, the purchasers being people of small means. The rich and luxurious class of people furnish only a trifling proportion of the piano manufacturer's market. An increase of 20 per cent in the cost of our raw material and the decrease in the tariff on the manufactured product from 35 to 30 per cent will open the market wide to foreign manufacturers, who will take our business away from us. They are waiting for the chance and petitioned the Ways and Means Committee for a reduction in the duty so that they might enter this market (see p. 5205 Hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means). They could not have hoped for such favorable consideration as they have received. They get their raw material free; we are changed from the free list to a duty list of 20 per cent, and the duty on the manufactured product has been reduced from 35 to 30 per cent. Section 380 was made for foreigners, not for the United States. They will take our business and, with our raw materials taxed, we can not export at all. Our expensive plant is especially made for the manufacture of ivory keys, and our men are trained for this particular work. We were promised in a Democratic platform and by the President in his speeches that no legitimate industry would be injured. Ours is a legitimate business; it is based on sound capitalization, efficient management, and there is a state of intense competition among the domestic manufacturers of our line of goods.

The duty on raw ivory would be the ruin of the ivory manufacturing industry in this country, and our men would be obliged to take other jobs with which they are not familiar at less wages.

We earnestly request the restoration of ivory tusks to the free list. And in asking this, we are only asking for the same fair treatment that you have given to the manufacturers of goods from pearl shell, tortise shell, vegetable ivory, horns, tropical cabinet woods, etc.—all of these materials in the same general class as ivory tusks and all of them on the free list.

Yours, very truly,

SYLVESTER TOWER CO.
H. B. LEAVETT,
Acting Treasurer.

PHILADELPHIA, April 25, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We desire to make a vigorous protest against section 384 of the new tariff bill, which imposes a duty of 20 per cent on ivory tusks, thereby increasing the cost of ivory keys for pianos 10 to 20 per cent.

This is clearly a discrimination against the piano industry of this country and will seriously affect the business. Ivory has been increasing in cost steadily for the last five years, owing to its scarcity. At the same time the quality has been growing poorer for the same reason, so that to those who desire to make a fine piano the cost has increased in the neighborhood of 25 to 40 per cent during this period, and if this duty is added the cost will be at least 10 per cent more. There is no known substitute for it—it is impossible to use celluloid on account of its inferiority.

This puts the manufacturer of this country at a very decided disadvantage, because ivory enters free of duty in Germany and other foreign countries which compete with us. Further, it is almost impossible for us to compete with the foreigners for export piano trade, as Germany, particularly, can lay down a piano in South America for less than it costs to make the same grade here. We do have some export trade in player pianos, but this will fast disappear as our American patents expire.

Trusting you will give this your attention and use your influence to have this iniquitous and most unjust item taken out of this bill, we are,

Most respectfully, yours,

THE LESTER PIANO CO.
GEO. MILLER, Treasurer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in many places in the bill there is for the first time imposed a tariff tax upon raw materials which are not naturally produced in this country. That, of course, is a real tax. Ivory tusks, now on the free list, which this bill puts on the dutiable list at 20 per cent, are mainly used in the manufacture of piano keys. I suppose gentlemen on the other side will say that piano keys and pianos are articles of luxury. That is not the opinion of a great many people in the country. I can see no excuse for placing this tax upon this article. I respectfully ask the House to consider the following letters which have been addressed to me:

CHICAGO, May 3, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Finance Committee of the House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the proposed tariff schedule, our attention has been called to the fact that section 380 of the Underwood tariff bill imposes a duty of 20 per cent on ivory tusks in natural state. This means, at the least, a 10 per cent increase in the cost of piano keys.

We have been informed that ivory tusks have been transferred from the free to the dutiable list because articles of luxury are manufactured from this raw material. The chief use made of ivory tusks in this country is for piano keys, and with music so taught in the public schools, at the expense of the State, and considered a necessary adjunct to an ordinary education, a musical instrument in the home can no longer be considered an article of luxury, and 85 per cent of all pianos manufactured are bought by artisans and people of small means.

You will please note that other raw materials from which articles of purest luxury are manufactured, such as pearl shell, tortoise shell, vegetable ivory, meerschaum, and all other tropical woods have been left on the free list.

We believe that much good can be done by having this duty removed, and are convinced that such a duty would work considerable hardship. We trust, therefore, that it will meet with your approval to lend your efforts in that direction.

Thanking you very kindly for any attention you may give the matter, we are,

Yours, very truly,

THE MARQUETTE PIANO CO.,
By B. C. WATERS,
Secretary-Treasurer.

CHICAGO, April 28, 1913.

Hon. JAS. R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our attention is called to the provision in the Underwood bill, section 384, imposing a duty of 20 per cent on ivory tusk.

This is a material which enters into the make-up of our instruments, and it would seem quite unnecessary that the present cost be increased, through the imposing of a duty, particularly when it is pointed out that raw materials of similar class at times used, such as mother-of-pearl, horn, bone, ebony, etc., are on the free list.

Our understanding is at for over 100 years ivory has been admitted free, and our investigation is that it is at the present time admitted free from duty to every other country. Piano industry of the United States must needs suffer this handicap, which clearly should not be imposed.

May not the matter have your best attention?

Yours, very truly,

GEO. P. BENT CO.,
J. C. MCCHELY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state that the tax on ivory in the raw state is strictly a revenue tax. It is a noncompetitive article and I think that it can bear the small tax imposed in this bill without serious detriment to the industries involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

382. Matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 5 cents per square yard; mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan, 3 cents per square foot.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand an item that appeared in the Evening Star of this city a few days ago that has caused me considerable concern. It says:

Progressives at odds on Underwood bill. Several favor the measure, some are opposed, and others refuse to vote. Confusion has fallen, it is stated, upon the Progressive Party of the House of Representatives. Instead of standing like a short but well-constructed section of a stone wall on the tariff proposition, it has scattered to the four winds of heaven, and scarcely any five of its Members will vote the same way on the Underwood tariff bill when it is put up to the House for passage. It is said to indicate that the party is simply waiting to see which way the cat will jump.

Then this article goes on to say two distinguished gentlemen belonging to the party are going to stand directly on top of the fence so they may the more easily jump upon the side where they think there is the most clamor. Then it says further that one distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COPLEY] is reputed to be very wealthy and he is very much discouraged. Now, I trust the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will not become discouraged in his battle for the people because he is wealthy. I ask him to look at Perkins and at Flynn and McCormick and at Crane, who has already received his reward, and take courage. It is very easy to serve two masters in the cause of righteousness when you learn how. And a little further on the article says the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] is going to vote against the bill. I am sorry to hear that because I was in hopes he would vote for the bill and then if he was true to his record he would immediately denounce it. If he votes against it and follows his record on the Payne bill I will expect him to sing its praises to chautauquas' remotest bounds.

Now, it is a cause for public grief that this party, that is coerced by no caucus and controlled by no bosses and influenced by no interest, should take to quarreling among themselves. But, Mr. Chairman, how is it possible that members of a party that possesses all the wisdom and all the righteousness could disagree? Can it be possible, Mr. Chairman, that these are the same old vocabulary performers we have had with us always, that want to reform their neighbors and not themselves? Is it possible that these anointed of the people are as other men?

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In just a moment. They should not quarrel among themselves. Their way is perfectly plain—they denounced the Payne bill to get in and they will denounce the Underwood bill or get out. Now, what the Ways and Means Committee should have done, and what they would have done if they had been honest in their desire to serve the people, if they had not been influenced by some sinister motive, would have been to bring in a bill here that gave high protection upon every industry located in every Bull Moose district and free trade for all the rest of the country. That would have been real reform, that would have been real downward revision, that would have been in the real interest of the people. Such a bill as that would receive the undivided, unanimous, enthusiastic support of the righteous 13. By the way, I hope that the distinguished gentleman from Kansas will tell a candid and waiting world just how many Members follow him now, when he is marching in any direction except toward pie. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HULINGS. I just wish to inquire of the gentleman what the gentleman had for breakfast this morning?

Mr. MANN. It looks to me as if the gentleman had eaten a Progressive.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is perfectly apparent I did not have a piece of Progressive pie, as I still think the world is all right. I do not believe I am the only honest man in the country and that I belong to the only honest party.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not wish to cut off the gentleman from his five minutes. This debate is rather entertaining to our side of the House; but as we want to progress I would like to cut off political debate this morning, and therefore I move that after five minutes, and after giving the gentleman a chance to reply, all debate on this paragraph shall be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the debate will be closed in five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, that article in the Evening Star was not inspired by any man friendly to the Progressive cause, nor was it inspired by any man friendly to myself. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has hitherto taken occasion to quote passages from newspapers that were inspired by political interests opposed to myself and accepts them as gospel. I will say to the gentleman, however, that my opinion on the tariff question was expressed in a speech in this House printed on the same day that it was delivered, and if he wants to know where I stand he can find out by reading that speech. He also intimates that one of the other gentlemen and myself are going to stand on the fence. I took my political life in my hands at the election last fall. In fact, I took the attitude immediately after the Republican national convention had nominated, and I have stood in that same attitude ever since. And it is not worth while spending any time in trying to explain to him. I will only call his attention to this fact, that although there are but 19 Progressive Members in this Congress, we have the satisfaction of knowing the candidate and the principles that we espoused in the last election were indorsed by more than 700,000 voters in this country in excess of the number of voters that espoused the principles to which he seems so firmly wedded. [Applause.]

So far as that article is concerned, I had no intention of paying any attention to it, having been in public life long enough to know that some of your enemies are going to write things which are intended to harm you and yet write them as apparently in a measure friendly. Now, as to "being a man of wealth," that is purely a personal matter, and has been exaggerated manyfold. I have never stood under any circumstances on any other basis than one of absolute equality with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] or any other Member of this House, or any other man, wherever or whoever he may be. I have worked in the ditch with my hands side by side with other laboring men, and am proud of it. I have never denied it. I have worked side by side with bank presidents, and I am proud of it. I have never denied it. I am content in the fact of accomplishing something useful. I have run through the gamut of human endeavor, and I am just the same sort of a fellow that I was before, notwithstanding the attempt of the gentleman from Washington to read something into these lines that were written by interests hostile to me and that might in some way belittle the Progressive cause or myself. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

389. Pencils of paper or wood, or other material not metal, filled with lead or other material, pencils of lead and slate pencils, all the foregoing, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 25, after the word "foregoing," strike out "25 per cent ad valorem" and insert "45 cents per gross and 25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to restore to this bill the existing rate of duty, for the following reasons: The United States produces and furnishes to Germany a large per cent of the graphite used in the manufacture of pencils in Germany. Germany purchases the wood from the United States out of which to make pencils. Therefore we furnish Germany not only with the wood but with the graphite, and she, with her cheap labor, furnishes us with a large per cent of the pencils used in this country. However, under existing law, the manufacturing of pencils in this country has been established and is increasing year by year. The rate of duty fixed in existing law is not excessive. Therefore I ask that the rates in the Payne tariff law be inserted in the so-called Underwood tariff law for the reason given, that I do not want to see again the pencil industry transferred to Germany, and that country, with its cheap labor, supply us with all our pencils.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do so in order to ask that in my time the following editorial on this subject from the Oakland (Cal.) Tribune be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Oakland (Cal.) Tribune, Apr. 24, 1913.]

INDUSTRIES THREATENED WITH DESTRUCTION.

Making pencils is an extensive industry in the United States that is threatened with extinction by the tariff bill introduced in Congress. New York is where the pencils are made, but the cedar slats used in their manufacture are made in California, Tennessee, Florida, and other Southern States. Should the domestic manufacture of pencils cease the plants scattered about the country now employed in producing slats would be compelled to shut down and our home market surrendered to foreign makers.

German-made pencils would supersede the product of our home makers, and Germany does not use American cedar in making pencils. The German makers get their cedar from German East Africa. All Government officers in Germany are required to use pencils made with African cedar, as Germany desires to develop the resources of her African possessions while building up her manufactures at home.

The German tariff shuts American-made pencils out of the German market, even if the lower labor cost in the Kaiser's empire were not an insuperable obstacle to the exportation of pencils from the United States to Germany. Where the American manufacturer pays out a dollar for labor the German manufacturer pays out a mark. Figured in American money a mark is 23 cents.

Under the present tariff law a specific duty of 45 cents per gross is levied on foreign pencils imported into this country, in addition to 25 per cent ad valorem. The bill which has just been introduced in Congress abolishes the specific duty entirely. As the 25 per cent ad valorem duty is insufficient to equalize the cost of production, the pencil industry in the United States will be destroyed if the bill goes through in its present form. This will react disastrously on timberland owners and mill proprietors in several States, besides throwing a large number of people out of employment.

Until a comparatively recent period the common red cedar of California had no market value. It was not worth cutting until a company entered this field with a plant to manufacture pencil slats. This plant is located at San Leandro, in Alameda County, Cal., and occupies a tract of 14 acres. It has recently been enlarged and improved at a considerable expense. Several acres were purchased at a cost of $1,500 an acre. At San Leandro 108 persons are employed, and over 100 more are employed in the woods. In addition to cutting its own timber the San Leandro concern buys cedar logs from a number of lumbering companies operating in this State.

Thus a new industry has been created in California utilizing a hitherto waste product and giving employment to a large number of workingmen. If the pencil manufactories in the East are compelled to shut down by a ruinous reduction in tariff duties the San Leandro plant will also be compelled to close down, and there will be no longer a market for California cedar.

And what will we get in return? The privilege of buying German pencils made from African cedar. The plumbago used by American pencil makers is mined in the United States, but the plumbago mines will have to shut down if the pencil makers are forced out of business.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Japan is becoming a competitor of the United States in the manufacture of lead pencils. The wages paid in this country are nearly fifteen times higher than paid in Japan. Notwithstanding the present duty, the value of importations last year exceeded over $400,000, showing that the duty is far from prohibitive. I will insert the following letter from the Hudson Lumber Co., of San Leandro, Cal.:

SAN LEANDRO, CAL., January 13, 1913.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to Schedule N, paragraph 472, pencils, of the present tariff:

We object strongly to any reduction in the present tariff on pencils. We manufacture slats for pencil factories, and any reduction in the tariff on pencils would make the price of our manufactured stock so low that we would, no doubt, have to go out of business or cut the price of our labor to equal the pauper labor of Europe. The farmers own the cedar wood that is left in the Southern States, and a reduction in the tariff on pencils would mean a tremendous loss to these men.

Red cedar, formerly found only in the Southern States of this country, is now shipped in large quantities and much cheaper from the German East African possessions to Germany, where the authorities have publicly recommended to the people not to use any other cedar. The lower the tariff on pencils here, the more finished pencils will be imported made of the African wood, thereby cutting down the farmers' income and lowering the wages of the laborers.

We depend for our living upon protection of the finished article made in this country as against low-priced wood used in Germany, Italy, France, and Japan in the manufacture of pencils.

Yours, very truly,

HUDSON LUMBER CO.,
Per R. E. GOODGAME.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND:

We, the undersigned, citizens of this congressional district, kindly request that you use your influence to prevent any reduction in the tariff on pencils for the reasons as outlined in this letter.

Bank of Haywards, J. E. Farnum, cashier; W. J. Gannon; W. F. Knightly; John E. Lears; Alonzo Bradford; Chas Q. Rideout; L. C. Morehouse; A. B. Carey; P. Godchaux; A. S. Weaver.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

392. Pipes and smokers' articles: Common tobacco pipes and pipe bowls made wholly of clay, 25 per cent ad valorem; other pipes and pipe bowls of whatever material composed, and all smokers' articles whatsoever, not specially provided for in this section, including cigarette books, cigarette-book covers, pouches for smoking or chewing tobacco, and cigarette paper in all forms, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, line 18, after the word "forms," insert the words "except cork paper."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

394. Umbrellas, parasols, and sunshades covered with material other than paper or lace, 35 per cent ad valorem. Sticks for umbrellas, parasols, or sunshades, and walking canes, finished or unfinished, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 97, line 23, after the word "lace," by striking out "35 per cent ad valorem" and inserting "45 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is the third and last stage of the umbrella question. Undoubtedly the committee has made a mistake in this instance. It is taxing the raw material higher than the finished product and is making it impossible for men in this country to successfully compete in the manufacture of umbrellas.

I hope the committee will give consideration to this matter, because here is a chance for them to make good and correct an error that is manifest. The Payne bill gave protection to the manufacture of umbrellas, in that it rated the component parts of the umbrella lower than the finished product; but this bill, whether for the purpose of raising revenue or not, does tax the component parts higher than the finished umbrella itself. When we reached paragraph 143, which provides that on umbrella and parasol ribs and stretchers, composed in chief value of iron, steel, or other metal, in frames or otherwise, and tubes for umbrellas, wholly or partially finished, the duty should be 35 per cent ad valorem. I endeavored to raise the duty from 35 per cent to 40 per cent, but the amendment was overthrown. That duty, by the way, was equal to the duty that is placed upon the finished product.

When we reached paragraph 326, relating to woven fabrics, in the piece or otherwise, of which silk is the component material of chief value, and all manufactures of silk or of which silk or silk and india rubber are the component materials of chief value, constituting the coverings for umbrellas over the ribs and frames, I undertook to have the duty reduced from 45 per cent to 35 per cent, in order that it would be less than the rate fixed upon the umbrella itself. That amendment also was defeated, and that notwithstanding the fact that there are umbrella factories employing hundreds and possibly thousands of people in the city I have the honor in part to represent, and one in Lancaster, Pa., and other sections of the State and throughout the country that will be seriously affected by this change.

Now we have come to the crucial paragraph, that of the umbrella itself, the finished umbrella or parasol, which we set against the umbrella or parasol which comes in from the other side, and against that importation we fix a duty of only 35 per cent. How can a man make an umbrella at 35 per cent if he has to pay 45 per cent, as this bill provides he must do, in order to get his woven fabric? It seems to me this is such a glaring error that the gentlemen on the other side ought to be glad to correct it, more especially as it affects the wage of hundreds of thousands of people employed in this industry.

I seriously appeal to the gentlemen on the other side to permit this amendment to go through. It does no more than fix the rate upon the finished product equal to that on the raw material.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understood the other day that the gentleman from Pennsylvania said that nobody could make a dent in this bill, and that he was going to quit offering amendments. Is that right? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE. Yes; that is right. I said it was useless to offer amendments, but here is a meritorious case this morning——

Mr. HARDWICK. Then the other cases were not meritorious? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE. And it seems to me the gentlemen might soften a little and permit this amendment to be adopted.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman says this time he makes a "serious" appeal to the committee. Were the other amendments not serious? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE. Yes; they were serious, but ineffectual. I hope that in this case the committee will accept this amendment. I do not want to see these plants transferred from this country to Germany and other countries abroad, as would seem to be the result if the committee persists in its evil course.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 97, line 23, after the word "lace," by inserting the words "not embroidered or appliquéd."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

397. That each and every imported article not enumerated in this section which is similar, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated in this section as chargeable with duty shall pay the same rate of duty which is levied on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned; and if any nonenumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles on which different rates of duty are chargeable, there shall be levied on such nonenumerated article the same rate of duty as is chargeable on the article which it resembles paying the highest rate of duty; and on articles not enumerated, manufactured of two or more materials, the duty shall be assessed at the highest rate at which the same would be chargeable if composed wholly of the component material thereof of chief value; and the words "component material of chief value," wherever used in this section, shall be held to mean that component material which shall exceed in value any other single component material of the article; and the value of each component material shall be determined by the ascertained value of such material in its condition as found in the article. If two or more rates of duty shall be applicable to any imported article, it shall pay duty at the highest of such rates.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in the amendment which was offered and agreed to on Saturday, in line 3, page 93, the word "poke" may be changed to "spoke."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that in an amendment agreed to on Saturday last, on page 93, in line 3, the word "poke" in said amendment be changed so as to read "spoke." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of referring to a statement which was made on Saturday by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], which is found in the RECORD, on page 978, in which he says:

Away back in 1894 or 1895 there was a gentleman whose name is Osborne, who was a candidate for the office of governor of Wyoming; a great Democrat, and in favor of free wool. He told in a joking way afterwards, "I came within 3 cents a pound of getting it—free wool," because that was all he could get for his wool. [Laughter.] He was a very extensive woolgrower in Wyoming, and just at that time there appeared a higher price abroad for wool than was paid in the United States. He accordingly shipped his wool to London, England, and before his wool had arrived there the price went down.

He kept his wool in a warehouse over there and paid the rent and storage upon it in England until the Republican Party once more got back into power and put wool on the protected list, and then he brought that wool back to the United States and sold it here.

The gentleman who is referred to in this statement—Mr. Osborne—is now an Assistant Secretary of State, and he has authorized me, indeed he has requested me to say, in order that the record shall be straight, that the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is entirely mistaken in his statement as to Mr. Osborne selling wool abroad in that manner. He says—and I am just repeating Gov. Osborne's statement—that he sent to the London market a considerable clip of his wool, amounting to over 40,000 pounds; that he received for it a slightly higher price than the then prevailing market price in America, and that he was advised by his factors that he would have received a larger price if it had not been that it was badly packed; that the next year he shipped abroad a clip of about the same amount, 40,000 pounds, and that he sold it in the London market and received 1½ cents a pound more than the then prevailing price in the United States. He says it is not a fact that he stored that wool abroad and returned it to this country, when he sold it cheaper, or for any price; that it was not returned to this market, but in each of those years it was sold in the London market, the first year at a slightly higher price than the American price, and the second year at 1½ cents a pound higher than the American price.

I do not desire to get into any controversy about it, but I am making this statement at the request of Gov. Osborne in order that the facts may appear upon the record.

Mr. MONDELL. What year was that?

Mr. PALMER. It was 1894 and 1895.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to set myself right before the House?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. I made that statement in good faith. I received my information from Senator WARREN. Senator WARREN happened to be in the House last Saturday when I made that statement, or he learned of it, because within five minutes after I made it I met him in the cloakroom, and he again said that my statement was correct. When I made the statement last Saturday I did not know that Mr. Osborne is now an Assistant Secretary of State under Mr. Bryan, but if I had known it it would have made no difference. Before I revise my statement of last Saturday I want again to consult with Senator WARREN, and let him and Assistant Secretary of State Osborne thrash it out. Mr. Osborne does admit having shipped his wool abroad when wool in the United States was on the free list. The only way in which he contradicts my statement is that he did not bring any portion of that wool back to the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, twice within the last week the dyspeptic gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is a weak understudy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], has brought into this Chamber a supercilious sneer. On the first occasion the gentleman from Washington undertook to deride the men in the country who live in small towns. He quoted from a newspaper, friendly to him, to show that a large number of men on the Ways and Means Committee were laboring under the awful disadvantage of not having been reared, as the gentleman from Washington has been reared, in a large city, and consequently that they were not able to write duties in a tariff bill.

This morning, in a second attempt along the same line, he essays to ridicule the Progressives in this body for an alleged division among them. I want to say to the gentleman from Washington that the members of the Progressive Party have no rings in their noses. [Applause.] They are not led around, as the gentleman from Washington has been led around for years, by so-called bosses or leaders.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Washington, in his criticism of me for voting against the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, to the fact that he did not vote against the Payne-Aldrich law, but that he voted for it under the direction of the bosses and under dictation. The gentleman from Washington, who now claims to be for a tariff commission, is not in fact for a tariff commission, nor, if we had a tariff commission, would he abide by the facts the commission found. Does the gentleman claim that he would? No; he will not claim it. We once had a full investigation into the matter of one item of the tariff.

Three years ago a board appointed by this body went into the matter of proper duties on wood pulp and print paper. That committee was headed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It had on it four Republicans and two Democrats. They brought in a unanimous report favoring the placing of wood pulp, then bearing a duty of $1.66 a ton, on the free list and a reduction on print paper from $6 to $2 a ton. That report was unanimous, and it was made after a long and exhaustive inquiry, and complete information was brought to the House.

What happened? In the face of that report, in disregard of the facts brought in by that commission, the duty on print paper was put up to $3.75 a ton and the duty on ground wood retained. What did the gentleman from Washington do in that day, the gentleman from Washington who talks here so glibly and eloquently in favor of a tariff commission? Where was he then? He was then, as he is always, following meekly behind some leader, not following his own judgment, not using the information which was within his reach, but voting as his leader told him to. And, in plain disregard of the facts brought out by the commission, he voted for the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and against the findings of that commission, as in the future he would vote against the findings of any commission if his bosses told him to do so.

The gentleman spoke of a division of the Progressives. So far as I can observe, there are about four different camps in the Republican Party at the present time. I honor the leaders of one faction, not for their tariff policy, but for their sincerity. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] are high protectionists, and they do not care who knows it. If they have the writing of a bill, they will write high and prohibitive duties. Then, there is another camp in the Republican Party which is headed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in great trouble. For years here he has brought against those in the Republican Party who wanted to make a little progress the obstruction of his sneer. There has never been a moment in the last six or eight years in this body when the Republicans tried to get away from the old system of bossism that they have not been opposed by the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I can not break my rule.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to explain about these two other divisions in the Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I should like very much to yield to the gentleman under other circumstances, but I can not break the rule.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is the end of a schedule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not play favorites, as much as I would like to play a favorite of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I join in the request that the gentleman have a chance to get rid of his bile.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if under the rules those on the other side of the aisle are to be permitted to bring their Monday wash day linen in here and consume the morning in cleansing it?

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the first paragraph of the free list covers arsenic and carbolic acid, and that that would be a good place to inject his remarks about the other two divisions of the Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the name of some honorable citizens of my State have been brought into the debate, I ask that I be permitted to address the committee for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I am not willing to go into political discussions. I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREE LIST.

That on and after the day following the passage of this act, except as otherwise specially provided for in this act, the articles mentioned in the following paragraphs shall, when imported into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), be exempt from duty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to announce now, because I am not willing to go into any general debate, and I know that this will lead there if we permit it, that I intend to insist on the debate being confined to the bill. I do not like to interfere with the gentlemen, but if we go into general debate as to what these gentlemen think of one another——

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? That seems hardly fair, inasmuch as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] rose this morning and without objection from the gentleman from Alabama made an attack on the Progressive Party in this Chamber.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that I did not interrupt the gentleman from Washington because he had gotten half way through his five minutes' talk before I discovered he was not talking about the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. And I am only half way through my 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas that his party has had 10 minutes in which to answer the gentleman from Washington, because both the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COPLEY] have consumed 5 minutes. I must insist upon the debate being confined to the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman permit me two minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to compromise——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas have my five minutes, and that the gentleman from Wyoming have five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I expect to speak to the bill, as I have up to this time in all the arguments that I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming will permit the Chair to state the question. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for five minutes in such manner as he may choose. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if this is going to bring on further debate I am not willing to consent to it, because I do not want to play favorites in this matter.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Wyoming five minutes. I do not know whether the gentleman from Kansas will excite me sufficiently to want to reply, but he has not yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the proposition is that the gentleman from Kansas, representing the Progressive Party, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], speaking for the Republican Party, have five minutes to say what they please, and that then we stop the debate on that subject, I am willing to consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not asking permission to speak out of order, but at the proper time I want five minutes to address myself to the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman from Wyoming is not in this proposition. If he will wait he can get the time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding I intend to object if anybody else goes out of the record.

Mr. MANN. Well, we will have to take a chance on that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman himself wants five minutes in which to reply I will consent to it.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing I have heard so far that is worthy of reply. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, as usual the gentleman from Illinois puts in a supercilious sneer against the Progressives.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if I can not come to an agreement on this political debate I will have to object. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman from Kansas to have five minutes and for the gentleman from Illinois to have five minutes to do with as he pleases.

Mr. MANN. I am not at this time asking five minutes; I will take my chance of getting such time as I desire.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman knows I would dislike to raise the point of order, so far as he is concerned, but if the gentleman wants five minutes I am willing to yield it now, but if he does not I will have to make the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Illinois apparently makes no request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has not preferred a request; the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas proceed for five minutes out of order [laughter]——

Mr. MANN. That part is not necessary; of course, he will be out of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to modify the request, because I want to be fair and I do not want to be put in the attitude of objecting to or raising the point of order against the leader of the Republican Party. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five minutes to talk about what he wants to and then the gentleman from Illinois to have five minutes, if he wants to use it for the same purpose, and at the end of that time I give notice that I am going to insist that debate be confined to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may have five minutes in which t. talk about anything he wants to [laughter] and that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes to reply, if he desires to do so. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I was, when interrupted, describing the present condition of the Republican Party and the present state of its fragments. First come the standpatters represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], all on the Ways and Means. Those gentlemen, if permitted to write a tariff, would not write that tariff upon the report of any commission; they would write into the bill prohibitive rates, according to their belief; and, as I have pointed out in particular, that when we had the full report upon wood pulp and print paper that they disregarded those recommendations [applause on the Democratic side] and put in prohibitive rates. Now, I want to show how Mr. Taft, then President of the United States, in his Winona speech, said that the duties upon wood pulp and print paper in the Payne-Aldrich law were not exactly as the commission had found, but that Mr. PAYNE, upon investigation, had concluded that the commission had found the figures much too low. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And if the gentleman from New York and the gentleman who is his associate on the committee [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] had the right to write a tariff bill to-day it would be a prohibitive tariff not based upon a tariff commission's report. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, I said the second division of the Republican Party was headed by the chief sneerer of the Republican aggregation, Mr. MANN, of Illinois [laughter], assisted by the other artist in that line, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They are in great trouble; they are afraid to follow their natural inclinations and go with Mr. PAYNE, Mr. MOORE, and Mr. FORDNEY, because associated with those gentlemen are some other members of the Republican Party who have been in the past progressive. Just where they are now I do not know. Typical of them is the gentleman who indulged in criticism of me Saturday in this Chamber, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. Where is Mr. LENROOT and what is he? Is he a Republican. I doubt it. Is he a Progressive? He is not. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is he a standpatter? I do not know. It seems that the impression is abroad up in Wisconsin that he is a Democrat. [Cries of "No!" on the Democratic side.] But I would not deny it. Here is a letter to the editor of the Superior Telegram. Listen to it:

> Representative LENROOT'S affiliation to the Democratic administration, as outlined in the Associated Press dispatches, is no loss to the Progressive Party of his own country, as he never was of or with us. He, by his glib tongue, led us to believe that he was so at first, but we found him out long ago to be inclined toward the Democratic Party rather than to the Republican or Progressive Parties. Good-by LENROOT.
> A. S. ANDREWS,
> Chairman County Committee of the Progressive Party.

Now, there is a fourth element of the Republican Party, and it is in some respects in the worst pickle of all. There are some 8 or 9 or 10 Members acting with the Republican Party on this side who were elected by the Progressive Party and not by the Republican Party. This is not fiction; it is not guess; it is demonstrable. Up in Pennsylvania a candidate can get his name on the ballot twice, in two places, and it is possible to show by the ballot in Pennsylvania what votes these Members, now acting with the Republican Party, received as Progressives and what votes they received as Republicans.

Now, it may surprise some of the Members of this House to know that some of the men from Pennsylvania who are following the sneering policy of the gentleman from Illinois, aided by his understudy, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], received more Progressive votes in Pennsylvania than they did Republican votes, and Progressive votes enough to elect them. I will ask Mr. MORIN, of Pennsylvania, if that is true of him; I will ask Mr. FARR; I will ask Mr. AINEY; I will ask Mr. KIESS; I will ask Mr. PATTON; I will ask Mr. LANGHAM; I will ask Mr. PORTER; and I will ask Mr. BARCHFELD. And yet, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the Progressive Party, denied its full strength in this House, must sit here under the sneers of the gentleman from Illinois, backed up by the sneers of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], playing the old, old game of fooling the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is worthy of the thoughtful for the gentleman from Kansas, elected on the Republican ticket, as a Republican, complaining about Republicans who received Progressive votes. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has secured his position in the House standing as a Republican and then claiming to be the leader of another party. Why, if the gentleman from Kansas had the sense of honor that most of the Members of this House have, when he wished to run as a Progressive he would have resigned his seat as a Republican and then been a candidate as a Progressive. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Kansas, who referred to a tariff commission report on wood pulp and print paper, which report was made by the Mann committee, of which I was chairman, a disinterested report so far as I was concerned, supported it because it lowered the duty on print paper, which he uses in his newspaper establishment. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Kansas claims now that he is for a tariff commission, and complains because the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] did not on the motion to recommit the Payne bill stand for the report of the Mann committee on print paper; the gentleman from Kansas, who voted against the Tariff Commission on the motion of the Republican side to recommit the wool bill at the session two years ago, to the Committee on Ways and Means, to await the finding of the Tariff Commission on wool; the gentleman from Kansas voted against the Tariff Commission on the motion of the Republicans to recommit the metal-schedule bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, to await the finding of the Tariff Board on that subject; the gentleman from Kansas did not vote against the Republican motion to recommit the cotton-schedule bill and await the finding of the Tariff Commission, because he was then, I presume, as he usually had been for several years, using the advertisement of being a Member of Congress to obtain audiences for pay on the Chautauqua lecture platform [applause]—was not here to vote either way. And you can not find, although there were three or four votes altogether upon the cotton schedule, I believe—you can not find that the gentleman from Kansas is recorded anywhere on the subject. But the gentleman voted for all the other tariff bills which were proposed in the House in the last Congress, with the exception of the chemical bill, where he voted at all, without waiting for a tariff commission report. And he has no more desire for a tariff commission report than the other side of the House has. The Democrats in this House, frankly and aboveboard, declare that as far as they can be, they are for free trade. The gentleman from Kansas, without the frankness and the candor which shines from the other side of the House, is and has been a free trader on everything that Kansas does not produce, aye, everything which his district does not produce—a free trader as against the protective principle. And no wonder that on Saturday, on the wool-schedule bill, where the Republicans offered an amendment to this bill to conform with the report of the Tariff Board on wool, the gentleman from Kansas marched through the tellers against the bill which would conform with the report of the Tariff Commission and in favor of the free-trade bill of the other side of the House, which expressly disavows any intention to comply with the report of the Tariff Board. The distinguished gentleman from Kansas will need to revise his leadership and his actions in the House if he intends to represent the great masses of the country who voted for Theodore Roosevelt, a protectionist, an advocate of protection which the gentleman from Kansas does not now and never will stand for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is the first paragraph of the free list, and I desire to discuss it briefly. A few moments ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] referred to some experience under free wool, which this bill provides for, of a distinguished friend and constituent of mine—that is, assuming that his present residence in Colorado is only temporary—who once defeated me for Congress, running on a platform declaring for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without the aid or consent of any other nation, now or hereafter, world without end. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any 16-to-1 rate involved in this paragraph, and I therefore——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MONDELL. I regret I can not yield.

Mr. HARDY. I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas raises a point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in 1894 the Wilson bill put wool on the free list. At that time a gentleman distinguished in the councils of the Democratic Party in my State, now honored by this administration by appointment as Assistant Secretary of State, was a large grower of wool. The exigencies of politics compelled him to defend the placing of wool on the free list. His neighbors so prodded him and his pocketbook so persistently reminded him of the fact that the price of wool had gone down to practically nothing at home that he shipped some wool to London. The only error in the statement made the other day by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was that he shipped the wool back again to this country. He did not do that, because we had free trade in wool here, and, low as wool was in London, it was practically bringing no price at all here at home.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Osborne did sell this fleece in London, just as he says he did, and I saw, about a year ago, what purported to be a copy of the bill of sale, which establishes the fact that Mr Osborne received for the wool——

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment. The gentleman does not want to interrupt me, I know, in the middle of a sentence. The bill of sale establishes the fact that Mr. Osborne received in London for wool that cost him at least 12 or 14 cents a pound to grow, net 3½ cents per pound, or thereabouts.

It is true, I am advised, that he did not ship the wool back. It is also true that he lost about 10 cents a pound on his fleeces.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Is it not true that we now have a duty of 10 or 11 cents a pound on wool, and in spite of that fact we are now shipping American wool to the Bradford mills in England.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is—I was going to say so simple-minded, but he is not—he is so artful that he would have those who do not understand believe that the agitation for the placing of wool on the free list or the assurance that it is to go on the free list does not have the effect of sending it to near a free-trade basis here. The fact is, wool is low here because you are proposing to put it into competition with foreign wool. I am not informed as to whether American wool is being sold abroad; I doubt it. While your continual agitation of free wool has depressed the price for a long time, however, I called attention a few days ago that, in spite of your agitation, the Boston prices were, as late as last December, from 4½ to 7½ cents a pound higher than the London prices. If the level of prices now tempts export of American wool—which I doubt—it is due wholly to the fact that you propose to put wool on the free list.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

398. Acids: Acetic or pyroligenous, arsenic or arsenious, carbolic, chromic, fluoric, hydrofluoric, hydrochloric or muriatic, nitric, phosphoric, phthalic, prussic, silicic, sulphuric or oil of vitriol, and valerianic.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 99, line 15, in the word "pyroligenous," by transposing the letters "e" and "n," so that it will read "pyroligneous."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

402. Agricultural implements: Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horse-rakes, cultivators, thrashing machines and cotton gins, wagons and carts, and all other agricultural implements of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

During the discussion of this tariff bill I have been amused and somewhat entertained by the paternal expressions so frequently used by our distinguished friends upon the other side of the aisle in behalf of the farmers and the so-called common laborers of this country. But, Mr. Chairman, we have felt their protective arms for 16 consecutive years. We must return to them our thanks for some consideration during that time, however, because of the fact that they have given us upon the free list such articles as apatite, acorns, bladders, dragon's blood, ice, kindling wood, and ashes. [Laughter.]

But, my countrymen, we wish to say this, that you have taxed to the very limit the necessities of the farm, namely, agricultural implements, plows, disk harrows, headers, reapers, agricultural drills, planters, and so forth, cotton gins, wagons and carts, wire for fencing, bagging and ties for their cotton.

Mr. Chairman, we ask those distinguished gentlemen if they have taxed these necessities in behalf of the farmers of this country, the creators of honest wealth? The Underwood bill places them on the free list to lessen the cost of production.

Again, Mr. Chairman, they have taxed almost every necessity for the common laborer of this country; his clothing both for winter and for summer, cotton and wool. They have taxed his bread, his butter, and his meat. I ask you, gentlemen of the Republican Party, if you have taxed these articles in the interest of the common laborer of this country? The Underwood bill has placed on the free list many of the necessities of the laborer and reduced the tariff on every article he consumes, in order to reduce the cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party saw the handwriting on the wall. They saw that they stood over a volcano that was liable to burst forth in its fury. They also saw that they could no longer continue to exact the last pound of flesh. Therefore they entered upon a campaign under a platform in which they pledged the people of this country that if they would only trust them again they would revise the tariff and revise it downward.

The people unfortunately felt that they were sincere, for the Republican Party was trusted, and again was placed in power and control of this great Government. But so soon as they possessed that power they forgot the pledges that they had made to the people, and they turned again to their first love, for they revised the tariff upward, not in the interest and in behalf of the great masses of the people, but in behalf of the trusts and combines of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democratic Party presented to the people a platform, upon which they were elected. This party will prove true to the trust imposed and received. As evidence of their fidelity they have presented the Underwood tariff bill and will pass it.

Those who approve this bill are the masses of the people of this Union, for it gives justice to all and special privileges to none. Those who do not approve the Underwood bill are the Republican Party, the representatives of the trusts and combines, the creatures of a protective tariff. They oppose it because it is justice to all, special privilege to none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] proceeds on the theory that we have a high tariff on agricultural implements. When this paragraph was under discussion in the last Congress, gentlemen on that side of the chamber made the statement over and over again that American-made agricultural implements could be purchased more cheaply abroad than here. In the last campaign a Democrat, making a speech in my district, is reported in the Benton County Times as follows:

Mr. Huber, having traveled extensively in Europe last year, largely for the very purpose of studying the economic conditions of foreign countries, was able to cite cases that came directly under his observation.

Mr. Huber saw American-made self-binders of the latest models sold in Europe from $25 to $35 less than is charged the American farmer, and this after the cost of shipping is paid.

Mr. Chairman, the Department of Commerce and Labor made a report on the 3d day of March on its investigations of the International Harvester Co., and I hope the report of that investigation will solve and settle the question with regard to the prices paid for American machines in this country and abroad. On page 244 of the report a comparison of the domestic price and the foreign price is given:

Prices in United States and in foreign countries.—Comparing the foreign business of the International Harvester Co. with the domestic business, there are comparatively few exceptions, apparently, to the statement that the prices to the retail dealer or to the farmer are higher abroad than in the domestic market. The difference between domestic and foreign prices is due largely to the fact that the business in foreign markets must bear a large expense for freight and generally for duty, while the selling expenses likewise are often high.

A comparison of domestic and foreign prices for certain harvesting machines is given below. It should be noted, however, that a much larger part of the foreign business than of the domestic is done with jobbers. This tends to lower the foreign price as compared with the domestic. Of course the figures take no account of any differences between prices of machines to the farmer in the United States and in foreign countries due to variations in the expenses or in the profits of the retail dealer.

Average net prices of specified lines of the International Harvester Co. in the United States and in foreign countries, excluding Canada, in 1910.[1]

Item.	Domestic.	Foreign.
Grain binders, 5-foot, 6-foot, 7-foot	$102.64	$125.27
Reapers	53.83	68.28
Mowers	37.11	41.09
Rakes	18.17	21.71
Twine	.074	.083

[1] Prices in Canada also are higher than in the United States.

The average proceeds of sales given above include all sales of machines to dealers and jobbers (less discounts). In the United States the business done with jobbers is very small as compared with that in foreign countries. It should also be remembered, as just stated, that the prices for machines sold in foreign countries include heavy freight and duty charges, amounting, according to an average of these expenses on the monopolistic lines for 1910 and 1911, to over five times as much in proportion to sales as the freight paid on corresponding lines in the United States.

From the figures in the above table it can be easily seen that the farmer in the United States enjoys a marked advantage over the farmers in foreign countries generally, even if the retailer's margins were very much lower abroad, on an average, than in the United States. The foreign price shown by the table on grain binders is about 22 per cent greater than the domestic; on reapers, about 27 per cent; on mowers, about 11 per cent; on rakes, about 20 per cent; and on twine, about 12 per cent.

While the above table indicated that in general the advantage to the farmer in the United States is very considerable, it is not to be inferred from this that so great a contrast would be found in all cases if comparisons were made with particular countries. In some countries the International Harvester Co. meets very aggressive competition, and because of that competition it is compelled to lower its prices considerably. The areas of low prices are comparatively unimportant and have little effect on the average price.

Because of frequent reports that the International Harvester Co. has sold its machines at much lower prices abroad than in the United States, emphasis should be placed on the fact that the bureau's agents made an extensive investigation in Europe and found no noteworthy instances of what is usually termed "dumping" with respect to the International Harvester Co. In some instances sales below actual cost were found. These were apparently due, however, to peculiar conditions, such as the accumulation of stock that had deteriorated in value beacuse of exposure or other circumstances, or to other conditions justifying the reductions made. In some cases it has been found that the International Harvester Co. realized a lower (net at factory) average price for some of its principal machines in particular foreign countries in certain years as compared with the United States, but such prices were apparently due to aggressive competition or to abnormally high selling expenses.

Now, the fact is, as shown by this report, the foreign price of farm machinery is about 25 per cent greater than the domestic price, or, in other words, agricultural implements can be purchased in the United States 25 per cent cheaper than the same article can be purchased abroad.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. What was the quotation the gentleman gave as to reapers?

Mr. GOOD. The average net price on specified lines in the United States was $102.64 as against the foreign price of $125.27.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman said that we could buy a reaper cheaper in the United States than in a foreign country?

Mr. GOOD. Unquestionably. American-made reapers which our farmers can buy for $102.64 sell abroad for $127.27, as stated in the Government report—a report not made for the purpose of securing votes, but rather for the sole purpose of giving reliable information. The following table, set out on page 248 of said report, shows the range of farm machinery covered by the investigation and report:

Average net prices in the United States of the International Harvester Co. for specified kinds of farm machinery, etc., by years, 1903–1911.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to follow in the RECORD the speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] with a table of prices of agricultural implements in this country and in foreign countries.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from what source this table was compiled?

Mr. FOWLER. I will give the source.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but I would like to know in advance whether it is authentic.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has that right, any way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to know something about the authenticity of the report.

Mr. FOWLER. It will come from authority.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has the right to extend this table in the RECORD without any request, and he is out of order in making the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not made any remarks heretofore, so that he does not come within that rule. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly to be expected that any considerable number of Republicans will admit that farming implements have been and still are sold cheaper in foreign markets than they are in the American markets. Yet, nevertheless, such is a fact. I am somewhat surprised at the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] contending that such is not the case. He is too well informed to make such statements and his common course of honesty on the floor of this House forbids him from making statements which are calculated to mislead the public. It is well known among the implement dealers, both in America and abroad, that farming implements manufactured by the International Harvester Trust are sold in all the principal European and Asiatic markets in competition with the implements made abroad, and that the prices which they bring in these foreign countries are from 25 to 100 per cent less than what they receive from the American farmers for the same grade of implements. I submit the following table of prices, which is taken from a price list circulated in Spain. The price which the American farmers paid was printed in that price list in the English language and the price which was offered to the Spanish farmers was printed in the Spanish language. This price list shows that the Spanish farmer paid only about one-half as much for American-made farming implements as the Americans were compelled to pay for the same class of goods:

	This column of prices was printed in the Spanish language, showing the price to be paid by the Spaniards.	This column of prices was printed in the English language, showing the prices which the Americans were compelled to pay.

This table was obtained from the Reform Club of South America, and in each instance the figures were obtained from the manufacturers themselves, showing that the identical articles were advertised for sale at the rates in the table above. The Mail and Export Journal for April, 1890, printed this list in English, and circulated in Spain a supplement of the same periodical, of the same date, printed in Spanish, which was not allowed to circulate in America, and we were only able to obtain it through the Reform Club of South America.

Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, a high protectionist, representing Pittsburgh in the American Congress, was fair enough to admit that iron and steel implements are sold abroad cheaper than they are in America. On the 26th day of May, 1906, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 7643–7656, Mr. Dalzell, in answer to a question propounded by OSCAR UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made the following statement:

> Do we sell goods cheaper abroad than we do at home? Undoubtedly, sometimes; certain kinds of goods; the kind of goods the sale of which promises us a foothold in a foreign market, and, to a limited extent, to wit, to the extent of our surplus. Why? Well, for a number of reasons, all of them patent to business men. The first and foremost, because our home production exceeds our home consumption; and the excess of production must be sold in a foreign market or our factories and our workmen remain during a portion of each year idle.

Further on in his remarks Mr. Dalzell says:

> Another reason is because, in order to gain a foothold in foreign markets, the price must be regulated so as to meet the price in the foreign market with which we come in competition. Another reason is because, in our contest for entrance into the world's markets, we have to encounter a system of tariffs, of syndicates, of cartels, of bounties, all of which were made for the purpose of excluding us from those markets.

It will be seen from this frank statement of Mr. Dalzell that the better informed Republicans now admit our contention that trust-made goods in America sell cheaper abroad than they do at home, but we assign a different reason for such low prices abroad to that which is assigned by Mr. Dalzell. We claim that America is able to manufacture the finished product cheaper in this country than it can be manufactured in any other country in the world, and for this reason they are able to ship their goods to foreign countries, compete in the markets of the world with foreign-made goods, and sell them as cheaply as the foreign-made goods are sold, which is at a much lower rate than the Americans are compelled to pay for the same class of goods.

The International Harvester Co. was incorporated August 12, 1902, under the laws of New Jersey with a capital of one hundred and twenty million—sixty million preferred and sixty million common. In February, 1910, a dividend of 33⅓ per cent was paid on the common stock increasing it by twenty million, which made a total of eighty millions common stock. This twenty millions of common stock was paid entirely out of the accumulated earnings of the company.

It has spread out all over the world in its holdings, thereby becoming international in character. It has not only bought out practically all of the American companies engaged in the manufacture of farming implements and machinery, but it has taken over the International Harvester Co. of Canada, Aktiebolaget International Harvester Co. of Sweden, International Agricultural Machine Co. of France, International Harvester Co. of Germany, and the International Harvester Co. of Russia.

It can manufacture a binder for less than $30, including cost of material and cost of labor, and it can manufacture a mower for less than $15. The binder is sold in America to our farmers from $125 to $150. I am reliably informed that it sells the same binder abroad at a much lower price. What party will indorse such methods? The Republican Party lost its prestige and the confidence of the people in its defense of these unlawful combinations. I advise my friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] to take notice and govern himself accordingly.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will not the gentleman take the next paragraph?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I would rather have it on this.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to a most important fact which seems to have escaped the notice of very many gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, judging from what they have repeatedly said on the floor of the House. I refer to a provision in the Payne tariff law now on the statute book:

Plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins, 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That any of the foregoing, when imported from any country, dependency, province, or colony which imposes no tax or duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be imported free of duty.

Observe that under existing law our markets are free to the implements of other countries when those countries open their markets free to ours. What could be fairer than that?

We on this side of the aisle believe that before putting on the free list the implements made in other countries whose workmen receive only one-half as much pay as the wages received by American mechanics, we should see that those countries take down their tariffs against us.

And yet you propose, in the interest you say of American labor, for the purpose of extending our trade and enabling our manufacturers and workmen to capture foreign markets, to throw completely down our tariff on these implements, and let Canada, Germany, France, and other countries with their underpaid workmen sell in free competition here while at the same time they maintain high tariffs against the products of our factories. Every one of the other nations excepting only England has a protective tariff. For four years the market of England has been free for our machines to go there, and for four years our market has been free for English implements to come here. But upon what theory—I will not say of "statesmanship"—upon what theory of ordinary, practical, business common sense, upon what theory of justice do you open up the United States, incomparably the richest market the world has ever seen, to workmen in Canada and across the sea while they keep up their tariffs against us? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The policy is absolutely indefensible, I care not what gentlemen may say in attempting to justify it.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. No; I can not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, reciprocity, if you are going to have it, would make us put into the law precisely what has been in the law for four years—a provision for no tariff in this country upon agricultural implements from any foreign country that will allow our machines to enter its markets free of duty. I have the honor to represent a district which has several large manufactories in it, not alone in my own city but in other cities—some of the largest of their respective kinds in the world—and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] quoted from a report on prices of agricultural implements in foreign countries. I have not read that report, but I do know that these people who make these agricultural implements and put them on the market for sale have been forced to admit that they did sell some, if not all, agricultural implements abroad at a cheaper price than they sold them in this country; and the report from which the gentleman read, before he finished, stated that there were some cases, where they had a surplus or where there were some conditions existent that justified it, where these articles were sold in foreign countries more cheaply than they were sold in the United States. Hence this report upon its face detracts from the force of the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, he being compelled to admit before he finished his remarks that some of these articles were sold in foreign countries more cheaply than they were sold in this country. That has been admitted for years past, and the justification made for it by the manufacturers was that they were selling simply their surplus in foreign countries that they could not sell in this country. The facts are that it was not alone the surplus, but regular sales in competition with the world at a profit. Some excuse was better than none, and they found themselves resorting to the excuse that they had made more than the demand in this country required and were compelled to go abroad to foreign countries to sell that surplus. In view of the fact that our manufacturers could and did sell agricultural implements abroad cheaper than they sold them in this country, and sold them at a profit, and because of the further fact that the manufacturers of agricultural implements are in a trust, justify us absolutely in putting all agricultural implements on the free list in this bill. Your speakers in 1908 proclaimed upon every stump, from the Republican presidential candidate down to the humblest one on the hustings, that the tariff would be revised and revised downward. Instead of doing that, you deserted the people, you proved false to them, you betrayed them, and revised it upward. You made it higher instead of making it lower, and hence the people turned away from you, and having driven you from power they will keep you out of power, because we are going to keep our promises and pledges made to the American people to reduce their taxes. [Applause.] This bill, in this free-list schedule, is an encouraging feature, because we find in it 32 pages covering articles which the American people are entitled to receive without paying taxes upon them. I hope it can be enlarged in the future so that the American people may be relieved as much as possible from the heavy burdens of taxation under which they have labored so long. We have kept our promises in the past; we are going to keep them in the future, and this bill will redeem the last pledge that was chief and important among the several pledges enumerated by our distinguished Speaker at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress that we would reduce the tariff taxes of the people and give them relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, on April 28, 1911, when the tariff question was under consideration in the House, I made a speech in which I called attention to some of the promises of the Democratic Party. As stated by our distinguished Speaker, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, when he was elected at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress, chief among these promises made by the party were the following:

(1) An honest, intelligent revision of the tariff downward.

(2) The passage of a resolution submitting to the States for ratification an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by the popular vote.

(3) Certain changes in the rules of the House.

(4) The publication of campaign contributions before elections.

(5) Economy in the public service.

(6) The admission of both Arizona and New Mexico as States.

We have redeemed all these pledges except the one declaring for a revision of the tariff downward. We sought to redeem this pledge during the Sixty-second Congress, and would have done so, to some extent, but for the several vetoes of our bills by President Taft. In my speech I also called attention to the fact that the people had given the Democrats a majority in the lower House because the Republicans had failed to keep their promise and pledge to reduce the tariff. Because of the deception and betrayal of the Republicans the people determined to give the Democrats an opportunity to prove their sincerity and make good their pledges, and I said to the Republicans then, "We are going to give the people relief, keep our promises, and reduce their taxes, and continue to defeat you at the polls until we have the House, the Senate, and the President, and then we will give to the people genuine reform and permanent relief." I invited all to draw near and hear the prophecies of the prophet Ezekiel, and time has demonstrated the wisdom of doing so, as my prophecies came true, for to-day we have a larger majority in the House, a majority in the Senate, and the President of the United States in the White House, and we propose to redeem the last of the pledges mentioned above by giving the people an honest and intelligent revision of the tariff downward. [Applause.] The bill under consideration will, when it becomes a law, redeem that pledge and verify our sincerity when we made it to the American people. Just what the bill is expected to do in comparison with the Payne-Aldrich bill is as follows:

Government revenue from all sources in 1912 was $938,522,481, and expenditures were $901,297,979, and surplus $37,224,502.

Government revenue during the first year of the Underwood tariff estimated at $926,000,000 from duties and $70,125,000 from income tax, making a total of $996,125,000. Government expenditures during same period estimated at $994,790,000. This would leave a surplus of $1,325,000. Imports during first year of Underwood tariff are estimated at $1,000,999,000, and duties are estimated at $266,701,000. Imports worth $759,209,915 under Payne tariff law in 1912 yielded $304,597,035 in duties. Imports aggregating $102,402,579 under Payne tariff law that paid duty aggregating $24,698,226 in 1912 will be admitted free by Underwood tariff bill. It is estimated that 100 persons will pay on incomes of more than $1,000,000 a year each, 550 persons on incomes between $250,000 and $500,000 each, 2,500 persons on incomes between $100,000 and $250,000 a year each, and 126,000 persons will pay on the minimum of incomes between $4,000 and $5,000 a year each. By the collection of this income tax we will reach the surplus wealth and require it to help bear the burdens of government, and thereby reduce the taxes on those less able to bear them. A righteous and just tax it is, and I have long favored it and rejoice now that I will have an opportunity to vote for it.

If this bill accomplishes these results, and I confidently believe it will do so, then it will be found to be a bill in the interest of the masses of the American people. It reduces every schedule in the Payne-Aldrich law except the schedule on "sundries." This schedule is increased from 25 per cent to 33 per cent because it taxes in a large measure luxuries. The bill throughout reduces the taxes on the necessities of life and the increases are on luxuries, which is strictly in accordance with Democratic declarations and doctrines. Taxes in the chemical schedule are reduced 24 per cent. Earthenware and glass schedule is reduced 35 per cent; on metals and manufactures of metals the reduction is 41 per cent; on wood and manufactures of wood the reduction is 71 per cent. The reduction on sugar is 25 per cent for the next three years, and then we will have free sugar. On cotton manufactures the reduction is 33 per cent, on wool and wool manufactures the reduction is 67 per cent; on paper and books the reduction is 45 per cent. Therefore it will be seen that upon the necessities of life this bill provides for a substantial reduction, which will be for the benefit of all the people. In the presidential campaign in 1912 the Democratic platform included the following statement:

We declare it to be the fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

The high Republican tariff is the principal cause of the unequal distribution of wealth; it is a system of taxation which makes the rich richer and the poor poorer; under its operations the American farmer and laboring man are the chief sufferers; it raises the cost of the necessities of life to them, but it does not protect their product or wages. The farmer sells largely in free markets and buys almost entirely in the protected markets. In the most highly protected industries, such as cotton and wool, steel and iron, the wages are the lowest paid in any of our industries. We denounce the Republican pretense on that subject and assert that American wages are established by competitive conditions and not by the tariff.

We favor the immediate revision downward of the existing high and, in many cases, prohibitive tariff duties, insisting that material reductions be speedily made upon the necessities of life. Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products and articles of American manufacture which are sold abroad more cheaply than at home should be put on the free list.

We recognize that our system of tariff taxation is intimately connected with the business of the country, and we favor the ultimate attainment of the principles we advocate by legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry.

We denounce the action of President Taft in vetoing the bill to reduce the tariff in the cotton, woolen, metals, and chemical schedules and the farmers' free-list bill, all of which were designed to give immediate relief to the masses from the exactions of the trusts.

The Republican Party, while promising tariff revision, has shown by its tariff legislation that such revision is not to be in the people's interest; and having been faithless to its pledges of 1908, it should no longer enjoy the confidence of the Nation. We appeal to the American people to support us in our demand for revenue only.

On this platform declaration we went to the country and President Wilson was elected by an overwhelming electoral vote and the Senate became Democratic, and we have a larger Democratic majority in the House. This bill now under consideration has been framed and will be passed in strict accord with this platform declaration. It is a bill for revenue and for the benefit of the people and not in the interest of any class of our citizenship or special interests. The Republican tariff bill was written and enacted into law at the dictation of the great manufacturing industries and special interests of this country. The Democratic Party is now and has ever been the party of the people, and hence in striking contrast it proposes in this bill to enact a law in the interest of all the people and to serve the purpose of securing revenue to run the Government economically administered. When the Republicans were in power, I introduced a free-list bill. Of course, it received no consideration at their hands and was never reported. In 1911 the Democrats reported and passed a free-list bill containing many of the articles mentioned in the bill which I introduced. This bill now before the House—the free-list bill—will materially help the farmers in this country. This free-list provision is entirely just and in recognition of the demands of the farmers and the people generally. It provides free of duty plows, hoes, harrows, harvesters, reapers, planters, mowers, cultivators, thrashing machines, gin stands, and all other agricultural implements of any kind and description; wagons, carts, harness, saddles, trace chains, bagging and ties, binding twine, nails, barbed wire, and fertilizers of all kinds, and besides gives to the sewing woman her sewing machine and needles without taxation. It also provides for free meat, free coffee, free salt, free flour, free meal, free boots and shoes, free wool, free lumber, and free coal for the toiling masss of the American people. The Republicans taxed the people on all they used from head to foot. In our bill we reduce all these taxes and place the above articles on the free list and thus give the masses of the people the relief to which they have long been entitled. I can not go into every detail in the bill at this time, but I desired, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to these features in the bill and to invite an investigation by all of its general provisions, because I believe that the Members here upon due investigation will realize the beneficial results which will necessarily flow from its enactment into law and give to it hearty and enthusiastic support; and when the American people feel and realize the great benefit which will come to them when it is upon the statute books they will applaud the Democratic Party and say to their Democratic Representatives, "Well done, good and faithful servants," and having trusted the Government to that grand old party and found it true to their every interest, will continue it in power for many years to come. Let us be faithful to the people and they will be true to us and will continue to give us their confidence and trust us with the affairs of the Government.

Now, in conclusion, I appeal to all true representatives of the people to rally around the standard of honest tariff revision and put this bill upon the statute books and make it the law of the land and thereby please the people and bring prosperity and happiness to their homes throughout this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

406. Any animal imported by a citizen of the United States specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free, whether intended to be so used by the importer himself, or for sale for such purpose: Provided, That no such animal shall be admitted free unless pure bred of a recognized breed, and duly registered in the book of record established for that breed: And provided further, That certificate of such record and of the pedigree of such animal shall be produced and submitted to the customs officer, duly authenticated by the proper custodian of such book of record, together with the affidavit of the owner, agent, or importer that such animal is the identical animal described in said certificate of record and pedigree: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what are recognized breeds and pure-bred animals under the provisions of this paragraph. The Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such additional regulations as may be required for the strict enforcement of this provision. Cattle, horses, sheep, or other domestic animals straying across the boundary line into any foreign country, or driven across such boundary line by the owner for temporary pasturage purposes only, together with their offspring, may be brought back to the United States within six months free of duty, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to all such animals as have been imported and are in quarantine, or otherwise in the custody of customs of other officers of the United States, at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to paragraph 405, which has just been passed. I did not notice that it had been passed. I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to paragraph 405.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; the one which precedes this.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, paragraph 405, by adding, after the words "sulphate of," the words "perchlorate of."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, paragraph 405 of the bill puts sulphate and nitrate of ammonia upon the free list. My amendment proposes to add to this perchlorate of ammonia. In explanation I will say that I understand that nitrate of ammonia is one of the component parts of dynamite. There has been an explosive discovered called "amerite," of which perchlorate of ammonia is one of the component parts. Now, we all know that the manufacture of dynamite in this country is practically a monopoly. Now, why nitrate of ammonia should be free and perchlorate of ammonia carry a duty of 15 per cent I can not understand. I have in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a letter from Prof. Delwiche, from the University of Wisconsin, in which he asks that this perchlorate of ammonia be put upon the free list. I shall extend the full letter in my remarks in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN,
COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION,
Ashland, Wis., April 1½, 1913.

HON. IRVINE L. LENROOT,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take the liberty to write you regarding the explosive amerite and the possible good that would accrue from its manufacture to the cut-over regions of northern Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan. I herewith inclose a circular which describes some of the advantages of this explosive above ordinary dynamite. I wish to have it understood in the beginning that my interest in this matter is of none other than that of benefiting the new settler on cut-over land.

This new explosive called amerite is the invention of Francis M. Marshall, of Chicago. One of the chief components is perchlorate of ammonia. In addition to the points of superiority mentioned in this circular which I inclose is the fact that it will cost the settler about one-half what dynamite costs at wholesale prices. Mr. H. A. Johnson, of Superior, Wis., is interested in this matter of securing cheaper explosive for the farmer, and through his instrumentality Mr. Marshall came to Superior and gave a demonstration of this explosive. Another demonstration was also held at Madison, at which members of the engineering department of the university were present. Mr. W. H. Killen, land commissioner of the "Soo" line was also there at the time. I intended to be present, but owing to circumstances it was impossible for me to be there. The result of this test, according to Mr. Killen and Mr. Johnson, was to the effect that amerite proved its superiority over 40 per cent dynamite. The proposition is to have the same manufactured here in Wisconsin and then furnished at cost price to settlers. Members of the State legislature propose having the State manufacture the material at some of its reform institutions, but the great trouble just now is that the perchlorate of ammonia is subject to a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem. Practically all the perchlorate of ammonia used in this country is manufactured in Sweden and the manufacturers here are obliged to pay a duty, which is 2½ cents per pound for the manufactured amerite. If the duty was taken off the perchlorate of ammonia amerite could be manufactured for 8 or 9 cents per pound, and 1 pound of the material is claimed to be equal in blasting power to 2 pounds of 40 per cent dynamite. Dynamite at the present time wholesales for about 10½ cents per pound, so that amerite, if manufactured in this country, would cost less than half what 40 per cent dynamite does for stumping purposes, but in order to manufacture it so that it can compete with dynamite this duty should be removed, and I am writing you at this time asking you to consider the proposition in view of the fact that cheap explosive is one of the greatest needs for the development of the stump regions of the North.

I am sure that this is a matter of great concern to the northern sections of Wisconsin and adjoining States, and anything that you could do toward helping the development of this industry would be a great boon. Personally, I would like to see the patent for this explosive held by some public institution to prevent it from being monopolized, for I fear if what is claimed for amerite is true that the same will be controlled by the trusts some day.

I am asking the Lake Superior Farmer, a new publication published here in Ashland, to send you a copy of their paper which contains an article on this subject.

I shall be pleased to write you further regarding this if you ask me to. You can get more specific information by writing directly to the inventor, Mr. Francis M. Marsall, 675 North Clark, Street, Chicago, Ill., or H. A. Johnson, Superior, Wis. I hope you will pardon me for thus writing you regarding this matter, but the object I have in mind in asking you to consider this prompts me to write you in this wise.

I inclose herewith a letter written to Mr. Marshall by George Boor & Co., regarding this matter of the duty on perchlorate of ammonia. Please return this at your early convenience.

Hoping you will give this matter your kind attention, I am,

Respectfully, yours,

E. J. DELWICHE,
Assistant Professor of Agronomy.

I shall also insert a letter from George Boor & Co., of London, England, upon the same subject.

The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 29, 1913.

FRANCIS M. MARSHALL, Esq.,
675 North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of yours of the 11th instant, in reference to perchlorate of ammonia.

With regard to what you write respecting the comparison of nitrate of ammonia with the perchlorate in price, there can, of course, be no comparison between the two, as the combination of nitrogen with ammonia is a very different problem to the combination of the ammonia with oxygen, a very much greater power being required to make the two combinations; also as the power required to do that part of the work is much greater and more costly, so the resulting force of the two chemicals is, of course, very much greater. The difference in cost is, of course, far more than accounted for, and in addition to that the perchlorate of ammonia is not only safer to handle, but is not affected in any way whatever by atmospheric conditions, and is therefore not liable to deterioration.

It is unfortunate, of course, that the one should be subject to a duty in the United States of America and the other allowed in free. What that is so is unintelligible; but as perchlorate of ammonia is not made in the United States, we should think that a petition in the proper quarter would probably bring about its introduction free of duty under the new régime which we understand is likely to start with the new administration. We understand that a movement is already on foot to allow chlorates and perchlorates in free, as the enormous duty of 25 per cent already levied on them makes their use for heavy blasting work naturally very difficult. Even in spite of that the perchlorate of ammonia at its present price has been able to compete with dynamite where they are already up very high in price and also very inferior qualities are delivered.

The Dynamite, or Du Pont, Trust naturally oppose any alteration, but at the same time we think it will probably come.

We regret, however, that we are not able ourselves to help you in the matter by reducing our price to 4½d. per pound, or 9 cents. We are, of course, not in a position to pay the American duty. We have also been able to bring the price down at which perchlorate of ammonia originally stood—of about 2s. per pound—to its present value simply by the electrolytic production of it, and at that price it is not leaving us a very big margin.

We ourselves are too busily occupied here at the Swedish works to put down a factory in the United States, as the cost involved is heavy, a very large quantity of platinum being necessary for the plant. Roughly speaking, for an output of 1,000 tons yearly about £70,000 would be necessary to cover the works and platinum. Out of this amount £48,000 would be for platinum, which, however, is not, of course, thrown away, as it lasts with ordinary maintehance practically unchanged.

For a 3,000-ton plant the figures would be £144,000 for platinum and £46,000 for the works. Electric horsepower would then have to be obtained from a power station; and if this were obtainable, which we expect it is, at 10s. to 12s. per horsepower per annum—how does your price compare with this?—we could then guarantee that the cost of the perchlorate of ammonia of suitable quality to work explosives would be considerably under 4d. per pound, including all costs, interest on capital, office expenses, etc.

From this you will see that it is a great proposition starting to make this chemical. In addition to this it would hardly pay to put down a plant to turn out much less than 1,000 tons a year, as the working expenses on 1,000 tons are not very much higher than if you turn out 500 tons only.

We are shipping considerably more perchlorate of ammonia to the United States of America and Canada than you mention being able to guarantee to take, and that in spite of the duty on them in the United States of America.

With regard to the ammonia which you refer to, that, we take it, can be obtained on your side at around about the price you mention. It is at present selling here at about the same figure.

The sulphate of ammonia, which is what we presume you allude to, has very much the same value in most parts where it is produced. We have, however, the only patent that is of any economical value for the production of perchlorate from sulphate, all the other known methods using another base, which, however, is not economically successful, although it can be worked.

Yours, faithfully,

G. BOOR & Co.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I realize that there is no use asking the Democratic majority to vote with me upon this amendment, but I want to ask the committee if they will not accept this amendment, which is clearly in the interest of the American people, as there is no reason in the world why this chemical constituent should not be put upon the basis of another one very similar to it used by a monopoly in this country. Accept this amendment and there will be some competition with the Powder Trust of this country.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] a moment. I did not have the pleasure of hearing all of his remarks, inasmuch as I came in just as he was concluding. I understood him to be asking the committee to accept an amendment to extend this free list on the salts of ammonia, and I heard him mention the chlorates of ammonia.

Mr. LENROOT. Perchlorates.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The gentleman will realize the duty has already been reduced to 15 per cent on the chlorates, and, so far as I am individually concerned, I would be willing to accept his amendment if I knew exactly where it would lead us. But I have found in dealing with these chemical propositions that one has to be very sure of all the constituent parts of a chemical compound before placing the compound upon the free list, for fear of thereby free-listing something in which all the materials may be taxed. I wish the gentleman to accept my assurance that this matter will be investigated by the committee, with a view of ascertaining where it will lead them.

Mr. LENROOT. I assure the gentleman that was my purpose in offering it at this time, namely, that it may be investigated before it becomes a law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from——

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, line 8, strike out paragraph 406 and insert:

"Any animal imported by a citizen of the United States specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free, whether intended to be used by the importer himself or for sale for such purposes: Provided, That no such animal shall be admitted free unless pure bred of a recognized breed and duly registered in a book of record recognized by the Secretary of Agriculture for that breed: And provided further, That the certificate of such record and pedigree of such animal shall be produced and submitted to the Department of Agriculture, duly authenticated by the proper custodian of such book of record, together with an affidavit of the owner, agent, or importer that the animal imported is the identical animal described in said certificate of record and pedigree. The Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe such regulations as may be required for determining the purity of breeding and the identity of such animal: And provided further, That the collectors of customs shall require a certificate from the Department of Agriculture stating that such animal is pure bred of a recognized breed and duly registered in a book of record recognized by the Secretary of Agriculture for that breed.

"The Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such additional regulations as may be required for the strict enforcement of this provision.

"Horses, asses, cattle, mules, sheep, swine, and goats straying across the boundary line into any foreign country, or driven across such boundary line by the owner for temporary pasturage purposes only, together with their offspring, shall be dutiable unless brought back to the United States within six months, in which case they shall be free of duty, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to all such animals as have been imported and are in quarantine or otherwise in the custody of customs or other officers of the United States at the date of the taking effect of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute in the nature of an amendment offered on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take five minutes. When I first came to this Congress, some six years ago, I learned to regard the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] as one of the then progressive Members of that side, but it seems to me he has turned back and is now one of the ultra-standpatters on the tariff question. He takes the view now that before we should give our people the benefit of free trade in agricultural implements we ought to be very sure that no other country taxes our implements going into that country. That is reversing the principle we stand for and presenting the contention that to admit something free of duty is an injury to our people as a whole. We are not so much concerned in the question as to whether England or Germany may get cheaper agricultural implements by taking off the duty on implements going into England or Germany, and thus receive a boon by being freed from paying tribute to their special interests, as we are that our country may be getting cheaper agricultural implements by being freed from the burden that is placed on us for the special benefit of a few. The gentleman wants to know what kind of statesmanship it is that takes off the tariff here on such commodities that are not permitted to be shipped by us free of duty into other countries. The gentleman says he does not understand such statesmanship; that such a proposition is outrageous. I hope he will remember the Standard Oil joker as to our duty on oil. For many years many people supposed there was no duty on crude oil, until this Standard Oil joker was discovered.

Our statutes, when I came to Congress, authorized crude oil to be admitted free into this country, and everybody supposed it was free, but it had a condition, just such as the gentleman from Wisconsin demands as to agricultural implements. It provided that when any other country put a tax on crude oil shipped from the United States a like tax was to be put on oil when sent from that country into this. That was a very healthy joker, and came to be called the Standard Oil joker. Under it it was found that crude oil while apparently free was in fact heavily protected, because every country that produced oil had a duty, and hence that left us with a high duty on oil from anywhere, and the statesmanship of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] did not prevent him then from voting to repeal and remove that Standard Oil joker and let oil into this country free whether it was from a country that taxed our oil or not. We want to apply to agricultural implements the same principle that the gentleman from Wisconsin helped us to make apply to crude oil. We are not interested in the manufacturing of farm implements carried on in the district of the gentleman from Wisconsin, but we are interested in letting our farming people have their agricultural implements free from an unjust price by virtue of a tariff in the interest of and for the benefit of the manufacturer. It is a shrewd trick to get this joker in our law and then get other countries to fix a high tariff on the articles they want protected.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I will if I have time.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman refers to the act of 1909 which took all the duty off of petroleum. Why is it that petroleum has been going up ever since we made it free?

Mr. HARDY. The duty of 1909 did not take all the duty off of oil.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman had better read that portion of the act.

Mr. HARDY. I know what I am talking about, if the gentleman will contain himself. It did not take the duty off of oil apparently, because apparently oil was on the free list under the Dingley law. What we did was to repeal the joker of the Dingley law and make oil really as well as apparently free, whether other countries taxed it or not. It was in this unstatesmanlike performance, as he now views it, that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] aided.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does not seem to understand that we put oil absolutely, and all its products, absolutely, in terms, on the free list.

Mr. HARDY. I know that we did that, if the gentleman will only understand what I mean. But the Dingley bill had apparently done it before that, only the joker was left in there—the joker which I am calling to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. PAYNE. That joker was in the first Wilson bill, in 1894.

Mr. HARDY. Oh, yes; it was also in your bill when it first came into the House, and the gentleman from Wisconsin helped us strike it out, and he is now saying that no statesman would let in anything free here from any country that taxed the same article when imported there, just reversing, if I am not mistaken, the position he took on the Standard Oil joker. I would like to add one thing more, and that is that the present position of the gentleman from Wisconsin would seem to me to leave us in the attitude of letting other countries determine what articles we put on the free list.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That was Mr. MORGAN'S question, was it not?

Mr. HARDY. No. I did not answer Mr. MORGAN because I do not understand that Mr. MORGAN'S question has or had any relevancy to the question I am discussing. The truth is, the price of crude oil goes up and down in different localities, apparently at the will of Standard Oil——

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] is being put. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is recognized.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is mistaken in intimating that I represent a purely manufacturing district. It is true that the district contains some very large manufacturing establishments, but it is true also that it is one of the richest agricultural districts in the United States. It may be called the lake district of Wisconsin. Sugar beets, tobacco, corn, and other agricultural products are raised in great abundance, and its dairying industry is large and very prosperous. So I spoke not alone for the workingmen in the factories in my district, but also for the farmers who have their market right at their doors because of these great factories, and of the rich and varied manufacturing industries.

That is the theory of a proper tariff. The moment you build a factory you have a market for the products of the farms in its vicinity.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. COOPER. I have only five minutes. I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said that I voted to put petroleum on the free list. I did; and if the gentleman will consult the RECORD he will see that I bore, if I may be permitted to say so, a not inconspicuous part in the hard struggle which resulted in putting it there. I voted and labored to put the products of the Standard Oil Co. on the free list, because at that very time the United States in the court in St. Louis had filed its complaint and depositions to support it, showing that that great corporation, while ostensibly having some independent competitors, had in reality none; that it controlled all the way from 85 to 95 per cent of the refining industry in the United States; that the so-called independent refiners were independent only as that great corporation consented that they might run under the name of "independent." That company was a great controlling monopoly.

In voting to put oil on the free list, I did nothing in conflict with my contention to-day that agricultural implements made by scores of absolutely independent manufacturers in this country ought not to be forced to pay a tariff when seeking to enter other countries, while we at the same time put foreign-made implements on our free list. There is no such monopoly in this country in the manufacture of agricultural implements. The great thrashing-machine company in my district, the largest of its kind in the world, is an independent concern.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. COOPER. I can not. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. COOPER. The tool factories, plow factories, and wagon factories in my district are entirely independent, so the gentleman is absolutely mistaken, not only as to the facts concerning my district and the motives which prompted my argument, but he is utterly mistaken as to why the House of Representatives four years ago, after a bitter struggle on this floor, succeeded in putting petroleum on the free list.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

407. Animals brought into the United States temporarily for a period not exceeding six months, for the purpose of breeding, exhibition, or competition for prizes offered by any agricultural, polo, or racing association; but a bond shall be given in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; also teams of animals, including their harness and tackle, and the wagons or other vehicles actually owned by persons emigrating from foreign countries to the United States with their families, and in actual use for the purpose of such emigration under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and wild animals intended for exhibition in zoological collections for scientific and educational purposes, and not for sale or profit.

The TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman make it 15 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I will make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, considering the great Democratic majority in this House and pointing out also the fact that this Democratic tariff bill has been so ably defended by our learned and eloquent leader from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], supported by those splendid statesmen, Mr. PALMER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. HARRISON, of New York; Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois; and that gifted and splendid gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and others, I have not felt that up to this time that it was necessary for my voice to be heard in this Chamber. But knowing that I represent one of the greatest agricultural districts in this Nation I promised the people of my district that if they honored me with a seat in Congress that my voice would be heard in the advocacy of a tariff for revenue only; that a downward revision of the tariff should come to the people of this country, as pledged by the last Democratic convention of the Democratic Party at Baltimore. I stand in my place and keep that pledge. I want to see enacted into law the doctrine advocated by the Democratic Party for all these many past years; the doctrine proclaimed in the platform upon which the immortal Samuel J. Tilden stood, and the doctrine which has been written in every Democratic platform from that day to this. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And now we have a great majority of Democrats in the House and a majority in the Senate, and a Democrat sitting in the White House, and the day for keeping that pledge has come. The people of this Nation have hearkened unto the voice of the Democracy, and with this majority in the House and in the Senate, we should keep the pledge with vestal fidelity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The people who sent us here are looking on and trusting that their servants will carry out and enact into law every promise made. I promised the people of my district that when I took my seat in Congress I would vote as though every constituent of mine was sitting by my side, and I am glad to state that each and every vote that I have cast, I believe, will be approved by every Democratic voter in my district.

The pending bill now being discussed is a bill to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes. This bill is known as the Underwood bill and reported to the House by him as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It has been passed upon and approved, every paragraph of it, by the Democratic caucus, and it is now before the Congress for its solemn and deliberate judgment.

For years and years the Republican Party have been legislating in the interest of the few and the rich, as against the great masses of the people, and I have always thought and contended that it was a crime for the American Congress to undertake to enrich men by legislative enactment. All men of this Nation should be placed upon equal footing, and if the Government undertakes to legislate for one class as against another it is not only unconstitutional but is a mournful condition of affairs.

This bill now before the House reduces all schedules, except as to luxuries, downward. The farmers of the country will find when this bill becomes a law that bagging for wrapping cotton, boots and shoes, sewing machines, leather and harness, saddles and saddlery, hoops and bands of iron for bailing the cotton, nails and spikes, horse and mule shoes, salt, lumber, fencing wire, and a great many other articles used by the farmer are absolutely on the free list.

The changes in food are, in part, as follows:

Bacon, from 17 per cent to free.
Beef, from 19 per cent to free.
Lamb, from 12 per cent to free.
Lard, from 12 per cent to free.
Pork, from 8 per cent to free.
Buckwheat flour, from 25 per cent to free.
Wheat flour, from 25 per cent to free.

In addition to the free list, the following are some of the important reductions in tariff duties carried by this bill:

Woolen dress goods, from 99.70 to 35 per cent.
Ready-made woolen clothing, from 79.56 to 35 per cent.
Flannels for underwear, from 93.29 to 25 and 35 per cent.
Woolen blankets, from 72.69 to 25 per cent.
Cotton underwear, from 60.27 to 25 per cent.
Stockings, hose, and half hose, from 75.38 to 50 per cent.
Shirts, collars, and cuffs, from 64.03 to 25 per cent.
Ready-made wearing apparel, from 50 to 30 per cent.
Handerchiefs and mufflers, from 59.27 to 30 per cent.
Cotton thread, from 31.54 to 19.29 per cent.
Gloves, from 44.15 to 31.77 per cent.
Anvils of iron and steel, from 32.11 to 15 per cent.
Bolts, from 20.59 to 15 per cent.
Chains of all kinds, from 46.59 to 20 per cent.
Pocketknives, from 77.68 to 40 per cent.
Scissors and shears, from 53.77 to 30 per cent.
Table and butcher knives, forks, etc., from 41.98 to 27 per cent.
Files, etc., from 60.47 to 25 per cent.
Tinware, from 45 to 25 per cent.
House or cabinet furniture of wood, from 35 to 15 per cent.
Sugar, from 48.54 to 36.25 per cent; free after 3 years.
Red lead, from 60.35 to 25 per cent.
White lead, from 38.01 to 25 per cent.
Castile soap, from 16.20 to 10 per cent.
All bricks, from 30.23 to 10.28 per cent.
China, crockery ware, from 55 per cent to 35 or 50 per cent.
Wire rope and strand, from 49.84 to 30 per cent.
Common window glass, from 46.38 to 28.20 per cent.

The arguments which I have heard on this floor during the consideration of this bill is to the effect that the manufacturer and the business men of the country must be protected and taken care of. Little thought seems to have been given to the producer, and by the producer I mean that great mass of our people who cultivate the ground, the people who sow and reap. These are they who furnish food and raiment for the people of this Nation. The little farmer who cultivates his 40 or 60 acres of ground is as much a business man, in so far as his ability goes, as the wealthy man who handles his millions on Wall Street. These are the men who in time of peril or in time of war are the patriots of the Government, and yet in the past the Republican Party, it seems, have overlooked them.

Princes and lords may flourish or may fade.
A breath can make them, as a breath hath made,
But the bold farmer, the Nation's pride,
When once destroyed can never be supplied.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The great millionaire, Mr. Rockefeller, is not a producer, yet he is one of the great beneficiaries of protection. When he bores a hole in the ground and gets oil he has not produced anything. God Almighty put it there, and with his wealth all he had to do was to go down and get it; but the farmer, with his brain and his brawn and his muscle, produces that which feeds the people of this country. "He makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before." [Applause.]

The people of this country, from Vermont to California and from the Lakes on the north to the Gulf of Mexico, have discredited the Republican Party and have driven it from place and power, and, as was said by St. Paul, "Their sins have found them out."

And now, since the Democracy is charged with the responsibility of enacting a tariff law in behalf of all of the people of this Nation, there comes from the throbbing heart and the trumpet tongue of the people the mandate, "Onward." Every Democrat is expected to stand on guard and do his duty. This is no time for speculation and dodging, and as was said many years ago by a distinguished statesman on this floor, "He who dallies is a dastard, and he who doubts is damned."

The tariff is a tax pure and simple, and the consumer pays the tax. Thousands of speeches have been made to disprove each of these propositions, but their truth is now almost universally admitted.

The fact that the people have insistently demanded for several years past a revision downward proves that the masses have arrived at the conclusion that the tariff is a tax and that the tax is paid by themselves.

If the goods are imported, the tax is added to the import price and paid by the consumer. If the goods are made at home and the tariff rate is high enough to keep out foreign competition—as it has been and has done for the last 16 years—then the tariff is added to the domestic price and is paid by the consumer. Manufacturers monopolize the home market at high-tariff prices and the masses pay the bills, thus making millionaires of one class—the tariff-protected barons of the United States—and poor men of another class, the millions of people who pay for and use the goods.

The tariff made a colony of plutocrats in the sale of steel, and that colony formed the Steel Trust to further enrich itself at the expense of the people. Another colony of tariff-made plutocrats formed the agricultural-implement trust—the Harvester Trust—and proceeded to greater enrichment at the expense of the consumers. In oil, in tobacco, in flour, in meat, in leather, in machinery, in sugar, and in divers other ways the tariff favored certain manipulators—in fact, was constructed at the demand of a manipulating interest—and these manipulators waxed fat in riches while the millions of consumers paid the bills. These men prospered and flourished even to the making of millions of dollars, while the masses were kept down to the paltry hundreds and thousands. On all hands the "captains of industry," as these manipulators styled themselves, were favored by tariff provisions, thereby enabling them to disturb the natural distribution of wealth, taking to themselves the lion's share and leaving the remnant for the millions to divide among themselves.

All taxes should be just and equal, and the protective-tariff doctrine when expressed in high tariff rates violates both these provisions. It is not just to force consumers to pay higher prices for their goods to enable a class of people to live. Taxes, to be just, should be levied on all alike for a necessary government expense. To tax all farmers in order to enable a manufacturer to gain a foothold is unjust; to tax all the people to enable a class of people to make abnormal or any other kind of profits is unjust and decidedly unequal.

The people have come to recognize the injustice and inequality of tariff taxation and have commissioned the Democratic Party to write a new tariff and reduce the taxation of the people, whether direct, as paid on imported goods, or indirect, as paid in higher prices to the makers of almost every sort of goods consumed by the people.

This bill, the Underwood bill, is the answer of the Democratic Party to the people who sent that party to power. It was not written at the call of men who profit by its enactment through tariff and trust prices, but at the call of men who, if they profit at all, can only do so by a lowering of consumption prices growing out of a total destruction of tariff and trust profits.

The bill before us is a radical departure from the bills that have been passed by the Republican Party in years agone. The Republican tariffs were tariffs drawn to favor the manufacturing plutocrats. This bill was drawn to favor the people by removing unnecessary and unjust burdens from their shoulders.

This bill looks to ultimate free sugar—free within three years—and to the ultimate reduction of all sugar prices of from 1 to 2 cents on each pound consumed.

In this measure we give not only free hides to the manufacturer, but free shoes to the people. We not only give free wool to the factories, but cut down the tariff rates on all woolen and cotton goods. In every paragraph of the bill we are confronted by downward revisions—revisions that cut out the pernicious doctrine of protection and fix rates looking to the ultimate betterment of the consumer's interests.

The following table shows some of the reductions on iron and iron ore:

Article.	Payne law.	Present bill.
	Per cent.	Per cent.

Potatoes are no longer taxed, nor rye flour, nor corn meal, nor milk and cream, nor oatmeal, nor salt, and after three years sugar will be untaxed.

This is a record of achievement. It is a history of what the Democratic Party has done and is worthy of all commendation. In woolen goods the record is even greater. This was the citadel of protection, but it is no longer so. Free wool puts the woolgrower on the same plane as the cotton grower, the corn grower, and farmers generally. Free wool will not only cut down prices indirectly, but the tariff on woolens being cut will cut all prices directly. We have adjusted the rates so as not to despoil honest industry of a single right while giving back to the people the rights of which they have been despoiled.

The average tariff rate on all woolens has been as high as 96 per cent, while in 1912 it was 87.72 per cent. This bill cuts the average to 40 per cent. Descending from generals to particulars, we have:

Woolen blankets that were taxed from 71 to 165 per cent are now taxed at from 25 to 35 per cent.
Carpets, from 50 to 95 per cent to 20 to 50 per cent.
Women's dress goods, from 70 to 155 per cent to 35 per cent.
Children's dress goods, from 70 to 155 per cent to 35 per cent.
Cloaks, from 80 per cent to 35 per cent.
Wool hats, from 86 per cent to 35 per cent.
Ready-made clothing, from 76 per cent to 35 per cent.
Flannels, from 86 to 143 per cent, to 25 to 35 per cent.
Plushes, from 95 to 141 per cent, to 35 per cent.

The clothing schedule has had its fangs extracted as to high rates on shawls, mufflers, webbings, stockings, cloaks, and every other element entering into the question of household expenditures. The door of privilege to the few has been closed and the door of opportunity opened to the million. This bill destroys favoritism and gives equal chances in the race for wealth to all our citizens.

This is the way the tariff makes living high. The remedy was vetoed by President Taft. The present law cuts all these rates from 50 to 100 per cent. Beef is cut 100 per cent. They will not be vetoed this time.

I am proud to stand upon tiptoe in this House and state that a new era has come in this Government. A new day is approaching when the burden of the oppressed shall be lightened, and the men, women, and children in all of the walks of life in this Government shall be free. The Democratic Party has been commissioned to work out this high destiny. With our great and able leaders working in harmony and with patriotism for the general welfare of the people we shall not fail to serve faithfully and well those who have trusted and commissioned us, and when this tariff law shall be passed and go into effect, and when the people of this Nation come into a full realization of its great blessings, "Then will a shout of joy go up, the wild glad cry of freedom come from hearts long crushed by cruel hands, and songs from lips long sealed and dumb." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to print in the RECORD, following my remarks, two letters relative to taxing life insurance companies under the income section of the tariff bill.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has permission to print that at the end of his speech anyway.

The following is the matter referred to:

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO THE INCOME-TAX SECTION OF THE TARIFF BILL NOW PENDING IN CONGRESS.

GRADY, April 30, 1913.

To the Hon. S. M. TAYLOR, Washington, D. C.

The income-tax law of 1894 exempted life insurance conducted on the mutual plan as follows:

"Section 32 of the act of August 28, 1894, provided that 'nothing herein contained shall apply * * * to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely on the mutual plan and only for the benefit of its policyholders or members and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders and holding all its property in trust and in reserve for its policyholders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stock and shareholders which is conducted on the mutual plan separate from its stock plan of insurance and solely for the benefit of the policyholders and members insured on said mutual plan and holding all property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business in trust and reserve for the benefit of its policyholders and members insured on said mutual plan.'"

I respectfully suggest that you take whatever action may be necessary and proper to have that language incorporated in the income-tax section of the tariff bill now pending in Congress.

Yours, truly,

J. H. HELLUMS.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., April 26, 1913.

The MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. OF NEW YORK,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN: Returning your letter of the 15th, I do not see why insurance companies should be exempt from the income tax upon the idea that policyholders pay it. The amount is very small and would not make a difference of one-tenth of 1 per cent in your dividends. It is by far better that your policyholders, especially the smaller ones, should be able to save from $2 to $5 on every suit of clothes and proportionate on other necessary articles they buy than to get 10 or 15 cents per thousand per annum on their policies payable 20 years hence, or to their heirs at death of assured.

Yours, very truly,

F. B. T. HALLENBERG,

(Attention Mr. W. J. Eaton.)

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi a short time ago stated that it had been currently reported and never denied that the manufacturer of agricultural implements sold their products abroad cheaper than at home.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. The gentleman from Iowa is not speaking on the paragraph. This paragraph relates to animals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman wants to make that point of order against me he ought to realize that gentlemen for some time have been talking on something else besides the amendment.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Alabama gave notice that he would make this point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the gentleman from Alabama did not say quite that. He said he would make a point of order against anyone not speaking to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. PALMER. But he meant upon the amendment. The gentleman from Texas did make a five-minute speech which was out of order, and we did not object when the gentleman from Wisconsin did the same thing. We thought that it should be evened up, and the gentleman from Arkansas has evened up the time, and I hope the gentleman from Iowa will confine himself to this paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Alabama, or anyone on that side, ever objected to a gentleman on that side claiming that he should confine his remarks to the paragraph?

Mr. PALMER. To speakers on this side? Yes; objection has been made to gentlemen on this side. We want the rule to apply to both sides.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What I am complaining about is that you do not apply it.

Mr. PALMER. I am not making the point of order, but I hope the gentleman will confine his remarks to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well, the gentleman will not succeed in keeping me out in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the Chair held it out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will proceed later when I will be in order with the same thing that I proposed to say now.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman will be in order when he does that.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, is paragraph 407 under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. Paragraph 407.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph refers to animals. I am opposed to putting animals on the free list, and I am opposed generally to taking the duty off the things the farmers produce. The gentlemen on the other side who prepared this bill contend that the reduction of the tariff duty will reduce the price accordingly, and I think that idea is pretty extensive among the people of this country; but that result does not always follow.

That was illustrated by the tariff legislation upon petroleum. I remember in 1899 we put petroleum and all its products on the free list.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. The gentleman is not talking to this particular amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist that where a Member is addressing himself to a paragraph that he is not required to confine himself to talking purely upon terms used in the paragraph when he wishes to use a relation between that and another item in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman from Oklahoma, but this deals with polo ponies and wild animals, and I have not heard the gentleman say a word relating to them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in discussing a paragraph in the bill as to whether items shall be upon the free list or the dutiable list, it is often necessary to refer to other items which may or may not be placed upon the free list, or may or may not be placed upon the dutiable list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that of course it is always a matter of difficulty to determine, when a pro forma amendment is pending to strike out the last word, just the scope that the argument being made may take. The gentleman from Oklahoma has not proceeded far enough for the Chair to determine whether he is speaking to related items. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows the rule and the Chair will request him to proceed in order.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for three minutes without regard to the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wishes to speak in reference to petroleum we will reach that item later on in the bill, and he can discuss it then and be in order.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this bill relates to animals. There are a good many kinds of animals in this world, and they are found almost everywhere. I am opposed to the theory of this bill, so far as it relates to placing animals produced by the farmer upon the free list. I am opposed also to placing the manufactured product made out of those farm animals upon the free list. I believe that it is unjust to the farmer. To place meat, manufactured from cattle, hogs, and sheep, on the free list will work a great detriment to the farmers of the country. I have understood that one of the objects of a reduction of the tariff was to strike at the trusts, to strike at monopoly, or to strike at combinations—to strike at the great wealth of this Nation—and I understand that is the theory on which the gentlemen claim this bill was prepared. I do not understand that the farmers have any combination.

I do not understand that there is any monopoly in the production of farm produce, and yet apparently the provisions of this bill strike hardest at the farmers of the Nation. There are 6,500,000 farmers in the United States. There are, perhaps, 12,000,000 persons over 10 years of age engaged in labor on our farms, and there is competition between each and every one of those 12,000,000 persons. If the great object of reduction of the tariff is to afford competition, is to strike at monopoly, is to hit a definite blow at wealth, why should the provisions of the bill strike so hard at the farmers of the country?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the motion to strike out the last word. I do not know whether it is practicable to ask the question that I wish to under the strict rule which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] are seeking to invoke about discussion, but I would like to inquire about this. Gentlemen will remember that in the last Congress we passed a bill which came from the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means, introduced, I think, by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Kopp], designed to permit wild animals used for circus or menagerie performances into the United States, where the company had gone over into Canada and wished to bring their animals back. I do not find that that amendment to the law is covered in this paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is.

Mr. MANN. How?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was a mistake in the Payne bill, admitted to be such. We passed a bill last year to correct that mistake, and that correction is included here. I saw that it was done.

Mr. MANN. I can not find it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will hunt it up for the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. It certainly is not in either one of these two paragraphs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My clerk calls attention to the fact that the change is made in paragraph 406. Of course the bill as we passed it is not here, but the change of language is made to conform to the idea in paragraph 406.

Mr. MANN. Where is it in 406? I have read 406 over, and of course I may be mistaken, but I could not find where it admitted those animals back into the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will have to look into it, and I will call attention to it later. I know it is in the bill, because I took the trouble to have it put in.

Mr. MANN. Well, if it is not in here, I know the gentleman wants to put it in.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. I remember it came up in the committee, and the change was made to conform, but I have not just got the memorandum before me.

Mr. MANN. It may be in, but I do not find it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. I notice that by this paragraph, when it becomes a law, animals can be brought in temporarily for exhibition purposes for a period of not exceeding six months. Is there anything in existing law relating to the San Francisco exhibition in 1915 which would allow such animals to stay here for a longer period than that? I mean animals going to the exposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has been customary in exposition matters to pass special acts relating to them and it does not relate to general tariff law, and for every exposition we have adways passed a special act. In this case I have not got the act that was passed in reference to San Francisco before me and my memory does not serve me as to the terms of that act.

Mr. COOPER. I mention this now to call attention to a later possible dispute, for as the pending paragraph will constitute the last statute relating to animals brought in for exhibition purposes, there would be an opportunity for a diversity of opinion as to the law. That exposition is going to continue, I understand, for fully six months.

Mr. KAHN. More than that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I recognize the force of what the gentleman says, but, of course, we could not put a provision of that kind in a general tariff bill.

Mr. COOPER. I did not know but that the law already passed for the San Francisco exposition covered such animals.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The law is not before me.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, it was the purpose of the gentleman from California to introduce a bill covering these tariff matters.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It may be necessary after this bill becomes a law.

Mr. KAHN. Possibly it will.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

413. Articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means; casks, barrels, carboys, bags, and other containers or coverings of American manufacture exported filled with American products, or exported empty and returned filled with foreign products, including shooks and staves when returned as barrels or boxes; also quicksilver flasks or bottles, iron or steel drums of either domestic or foreign manufacture, used for the shipment of acids or other chemicals, which shall have been actually exported from the United States; but proof of the identity of such articles shall be made, under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the exemption of bags from duty shall apply only to such domestic bags as may be imported by the exporter thereof, and if any such articles are subject to internal-revenue tax at the time of exportation, such tax shall be proved to have been paid before exportation and not refunded; photographic dry plates or films of American manufacture (except moving-picture films), exposed abroad, whether developed or not, and films from moving-picture machines, light struck or otherwise damaged, or worn out, so as to be unsuitable for any other purpose than the recovery of the constituent materials, provided the basic films are of American manufacture, but proof of the identity of such articles shall be made under general regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; articles exported from the United States for repairs may be returned upon payment of a duty upon the value of the repairs under conditions and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any article upon which an allowance of drawback has been made, the reimportation of which is hereby prohibited except upon payment of duties equal to the drawbacks allowed; or to any article manufactured in bonded warehouse and exported under any provision of law: And provided further, That when manufactured tobacco which has been exported without payment of internal-revenue tax shall be reimported it shall be retained in the custody of the collector of customs until internal-revenue stamps in payment of the legal duties shall be placed thereon.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 103, line 24, at the end strike out the period and insert " : And provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to animals made dutiable under the provisions of paragraph 406."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word at the suggestion of some gentlemen on this side for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman in charge of the bill if the word in paragraph 410 "apatite" is not spelled improperly. Some one over here thought that it should be spelled "appetite," and we were unable to account for the spelling.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It conforms to the language of the Payne law and the other laws.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman advise me what it means?

Mr. RAINEY. I will say this is a phosphate, none of which is imported, and is produced down in Florida; it is a phosphate.

Mr. CALDER. By consulting the dictionary it occurs to me it might be a gem.

Mr. RAINEY. It is a phosphate produced in Florida; none of it comes from abroad.

Mr. CALDER. What is it used for?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know; I expect it is a fertilizer; it is a phosphate anyway.

Mr. CALDER. What gentlemen on this side would like to know is if this product, as indicated in the dictionary, can be used to manufacture the poor man's diamond.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. GARDNER. Is not apatite a mineral?

Mr. RAINEY. It does not come in at all.

Mr. CALDER. I merely inquired for information, and I thank the gentleman for his very illuminating exposition of the subject. Some one has just suggested to me that about all the American people would have left after this bill becomes a law will be their appetite, and that in placing it—their appetite—on the free list, the Democratic Party would be simply adding insult to injury.

However, for the information of the Ways and Means Committee I am going to read the definition of "apatite," so that in the future they will be able to inform their constituents just what they were really legislating on in this paragraph:

Apatite is a crystalline mineral and is the purest phosphate met with in an inorganic state. There are three varieties—fluorapatite, chlorapatite, and mangan-apatite—according as the lime not existing as phosphate is combined with fluorine, chlorine, or manganese. Apatite is widely distributed, and in many places occurs in vast deposits, which are worked on a commercial scale on account of the value of the mineral as a phosphate fertilizer. It is found in Scandinavia, Bavaria, Saxony, and Switzerland, and in this country in New York and New Jersey. The Canadian variety fluorapatite was formerly extensively used in the United States for fertilizing purposes, but has now been almost entirely supplanted by the phosphates (par. 639) of Florida, South Carolina, and Tennessee. Phosphate is another name for apatite, but it is chiefly applied to the impure, uncrystallized form.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

417. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton, composed of single yarns made of jute, jute butts, seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow, aloe, mill waste, cotton tares, or other material not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, not exceeding 16 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and weighing not less than 15 ounces per square yard.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 104, lines 3 to 10, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on the other side have stated that this bill is not sectional; but the fact is evident throughout that very great pains have been taken upon the other side to protect the cotton planter of the South. Now, every one of us wants to see the cotton planter grow and develop and prosper, and I for one would like to protect him in his business in every particular.

But it does seem in this instance, as it has in a number of other instances throughout this bill, that special attention has been paid to this very special interest in this very special section of the country. Cotton is very widely sold on the other side of the water, the market is very largely in Germany and England, and there is a fine exchange as between the foreign purchaser and the planter of the South, who is the seller. The particular item that we now have under discussion—that of bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics—indicates that if duties have hitherto been imposed on these commodities, which come largely from the beaten-down labor in India, it is intended now that more shall come in from the same kind of labor, and that the possibility of encouraging any kind of labor to do this work in the United States is eliminated. The purpose of this paragraph is better understood when we recur to section J, paragraph 282, where it is provided that all "carpets, carpeting, mats, and rugs made of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber except cotton" shall be dutiable at the rate of 35 per cent ad valorem. In other words, as it also appears in paragraph 276, with reference to single yarns made of jute, dutiable at 15 to 25 per cent ad valorem, it is now proposed that there shall be a tax upon the American people who desire in any way to secure whatever benefits are to be had from the low cost of yarns made of jute, which, of course, are essential to manufacture. In the matter of carpeting, mats, and rugs, which are unquestionably a commodity of the poor, those who seek to buy these modern household necessities shall be taxed at the rate of 35 per cent ad valorem. But when it comes to using this same kind of material for bundling up bales of cotton in the South and sending it largely to foreign purchasers there shall be no duty at all. If this is not sectional, then I do not know what sectionalism is. If it is not partial, I do not know what partiality is; if this does not pertain to special interests, then I do not know what special interests are.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Do you not think it is a fair return when we give the Bethlehem Iron Co. free iron, that the South is interested in, that we should have some return in the way of free cotton bagging?

Mr. MOORE. I am pleased when the gentleman stands for protection throughout the country as I have tried to do, but when it comes to sectionalizing protection and protecting one interest as against another interest, then perhaps I may differ from some gentlemen. But I call attention particularly to the fact that whereas in the Payne bill the existing law proposed a duty on cotton bagging, and so forth, the new bill admits free, in addition to those things that were dutiable under the Payne law, what is known as "seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow," and so forth. Not satisfied to bring in free those things that were dutiable under the Payne law, and which were protected against the Hindoo labor of India, the committee is now admitting a product of the cheap labor of Russia and the cheap labor of other countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I would like three or four minutes on this.

Mr. CALDER. May I have two minutes?

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like some time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] have five minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] five minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia may proceed for five minutes, the gentleman from Massachusetts for five minutes, and the gentleman from New York for two minutes, and then that all debate on this amendment close. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this provision is an act of justice to the farmers of the South, those people, especially the cotton farmers, who, by reason of raising the greatest money-producing crop in this country, have done more to produce and maintain prosperity in this country than any other people in it.

After endeavoring for 16 years to have a Republican Congress give the cotton planters of the South free cotton bagging and failing, at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress, the first Democratic House I served in, I introduced bills exempting cotton bagging and ties from tariff duties. Both of the articles are manufactured and controlled by trusts, and the Government has derived but an insignificant amount of revenue from this source. To longer retain a duty upon them will be solely for the benefit of these trusts. And it is about time that the cotton planter should not longer be required to pay tribute to these manufacturers.

At the opening of this session I introduced bills exempting these articles—bagging and ties for cotton—from tariff duties, and the Ways and Means Committee have reported in this bill paragraphs placing both on the free list, as should have been done years ago.

COTTON BAGGING.

The importations of cotton bagging for the years stated in the following table will show that in no one year has there been imported as much as one-fifth of the cotton bagging used in covering the cotton crop. Take the year 1910. There was used for that year's crop 102,666,660 square yards of bagging, whereas the imports from all countries only amounted to 16,505,542 square yards.

Fiscal year ended June 30—	Rate of duty.	Quantity.	Value.	Duty collected.	Average.

1910	do	16,505,542.00	699,940.00	99,033.28	.042	14.15

These tables will show that while it required nearly 103,000,000 square yards of bagging for the cotton crop of 1910, there were imported only 16,000,000 square yards, and while it required 106,000,000 pounds of cotton ties, there were imported only 500,000 pounds of cotton ties.

The duty collected by the Government on cotton bagging for 1910 was $99,000 and that upon ties was $1,498; so that the amount of revenue that the Government receives from the imposition of this duty is insignificant, while the amount exacted from the cotton planter for the year 1910 upon those two articles amounted to fully a million dollars, which finds its way into the coffers of the Bagging Trust and the Steel Trust.

There has not been any excuse for the retention of the duty, and justice to the farmers demands its repeal.

From an examination of the foregoing tables it will appear that the duty imposed is almost prohibitive, and that the revenue derived by the Government is insignificant compared with the immense amount of money returned to this country from the exportation and sale of raw cotton abroad; and the imports and duties paid have averaged about the same during the past two years as in 1910.

In support of my assertion that these cotton bagging manufacturers combine to keep the price up and are a trust, I submit the following evidence.

The statement of Mr. C. Lee McMillan, made to the Ways and Means Committee of this House in 1908, is as follows:

The American makers, say three in number, consisting of the American Manufacturing Co., of New York; the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates, of Boston; and the Peru Bagging Manufacturing Co., of Peru, Ind., own and control every mill in America now engaged in making new bagging for cotton.

The first two corporations agree at the beginning of each season upon a price to open the market at, and the small Peru company follows. An arbitrary list, showing differentials throughout the entire cotton belt, is strictly followed, and the price named any given point by the American Manufacturing Co. is exactly same as the one quoted same point by the Ludlow company.

Some years ago there were several independent mills engaged in this business, but the ones now surviving managed to drive the others entirely out by selling bagging below price at which the independents could make same at, and in the end the American Manufacturing Co. bought such independent mills as the one in New Orleans, in Louisville, Ky., and in Galveston, Tex., and then dismantled same, shipped such machinery as was wanted to Brooklyn and St. Louis and breaking up and selling for scrap the balance of the machinery. I think that the same process was followed when the American Manufacturing Co. bought out their New York and Brooklyn rivals. When additional machinery has been required by the Americans, they have either had it made in this country or they bought it secondhand in Dundue and imported same free of duty.

In a letter to me, dated May 6, 1911, Mr. McMillan says:

Each year both of these concerns (The American Manufacturing Co. and the Ludlow Co.) open the market upon the same day, and both ask the same identical prices for the same quality of goods to every point they trade with. The same plan as the above is carried out by the Carnegie Steel Co. and the Pittsburg Steel Co. in the sale of cotton ties.

Mr. R. Rochester, of New York, N. Y., made the following statement before the Ways and Means Committee on November 28, 1908:

Every yard of bagging used to cover the cotton crop of the United States is made by the American Manufacturing Co., 65 Wall Street, and the Ludlow Manufacturing Co., at Ludlow, Mass., which concerns have the country districted, the American selling 82 per cent and the Ludlow 18 per cent, at an agreed price.

This business has been going on for many years, the two concerns in question having gradually crushed out or absorbed all others who attempted to make bagging.

They are protected by a tariff to such an extent that it keeps out the Dundee and Calcutta bagging. For it has been the rule for many years that whenever a consignment of any foreign bagging would come in, the combination (American and Ludlow) would promptly lower their prices in the market to which the foreign bagging came to a point below the cost of the foreign bagging, and would so advertise the fact and intimidate the trade as to discourage further importations.

In addition to the above combination between the American and Ludlow they also maintain a chain of brokers or so-called dealers throughout the country who, though posing as independent, are in fact emissaries of these concerns, keeping them advised at all times of the conditions in the various markets regarding the status of foreign bagging, etc., and with suggestions as to "all the traffic will bear."

But we are not confined to the testimony of third parties. The following statement was made before the Ways and Means Committee of this House, in 1908, by Mr. Thomas F. Magner, the representative of the manufacturers of jute cloth from jute butts:

STATEMENT OF THOMAS F. MAGNER, WHO REPRESENTS MANUFACTURERS OF JUTE CLOTH FROM JUTE BUTTS.

MONDAY, November 30, 1908.

The CHAIRMAN. On what subject do you appear?

Mr. MAGNER. Cotton bagging.

The CHAIRMAN. Please proceed.

Mr. MAGNER. I represent, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, all those manufacturers who are engaged in the manufacture of what is known as jute cloth made from jute butts in the United States. They are the Peru Bagging Manufacturing Co., of Indiana; the Ludlow Manufacturing Associates, of Ludlow, Mass.; and the American Manufacturing Co. The Ludlow Associates have a large plant, 30 acres in extent, at Ludlow, Mass. The American Manufacturing Co. have different plants, several plants in St. Louis, one at Galveston, one at Charleston, and they have two large plants in Brooklyn, New York City, my native city.

We present here to-day from all of these manufacturers a memorial. We have now in process of preparation, and later will present to the committee, a table giving the relative cost of production of this fiber, of the manufactured article, in India and in America, the amount produced, and everything relating to it, both in the production and manufacture in Calcutta and in the United States.

The memorial referred to was signed as follows:

The American Manufacturing Co., by John M. Maury, assistant secretary.

Ludlow Manufacturing Associates, by Charles W. Hubbard, treasurer.

Penn Bagging Manufacturing Co., Max W. Kraus, secretary-treasurer.

So that whenever you find one of these three corporations who manufacture and sell cotton bagging, whether before the committees of Congress, endeavoring to prevent a reduction of duty or to have it increased—in the world of trade, or in the market fixing the prices, or endeavoring to destroy competition—you will find them in company, acting in concert, through the same agents and attorneys, and pursuing the same course and methods as other trusts and combinations do and have done.

Some time ago a Member of this House from a cotton-raising State received a telegram from citizens of his State stating that they were stockholders in a bagging factory, and asking him to oppose putting cotton bagging on the free list. Upon inquiry as to where that factory was located, he received the reply that 14 years ago the bagging factory in a Southern State had been abandoned and closed, and that all the stockholders had now the same interest in the American Manufacturing Co.; that is, that the stockholders in the southern mill which had been discontinued now owned the same number of shares in the American Manufacturing Co.

This bears out the statement made by Mr. McMillan before the Ways and Means Committee in 1908, which was as follows:

Some years ago there were several independent mills engaged in this business, but the ones now surviving managed to drive the others entirely out by selling bagging below price at which the independents could make same at, and in the end the American Manufacturing Co. bought such independent mills as the one in New Orleans, in Louisville, Ky., and in Galveston, Tex., and then dismantled same, shipped such machinery as was wanted to Brooklyn and St. Louis, and breaking up and selling for scrap the balance of the machinery.

A few days ago I received a letter from Mr. C. Lee McMillan, of New Orleans, a dealer and importer in cotton bagging, which I will read:

NEW ORLEANS, April 11, 1913.

Hon. CHARLES L. BARTLETT,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your kind letter of the 8th instant reached me this morning. I have received copy of tariff bill, which Mr. DUPRÉ forwarded, and I note the difference you refer to in the wording between present and farmers' free list bill.

The jute-bagging paragraph as contained in present Underwood bill is all that can be desired by the cotton people, and if same passes in its present shape I do not think the Bagging Trust will annoy importers as in the past.

For your information I hand you a copy of last "T. D. 33277." The decision will doubtless strike you as being absolutely sound, but at same time I expect Overton & Co., New York importers, acting in the interest of the Bagging Trust, will appeal the case. The trust may never have expected to win, but it knows that as long as it can drag such cases into court importers are timid about bringing in bagging, although same is of far better quality than is now made by any American mill.

Within last few days we were called upon to pay 45 per cent duty on an importation which had been entered by us here 363 days before we got notice of advance in duty. Bagging in question was passed by New Orleans appraiser at six-tenths of a cent per square yard. The Government here sent sample to Washington for analysis, and Treasury Department reported same at six-tenths of a cent; but when two days less than a year had elapsed we were notified that our entry had been reliquidated, and the Government said the jute in said bagging was worth three-eighths of a cent per pound, while some other secondhand fiber the maker of Liverpool put in a small amount of was worth 4½ cents per pound, which, of course, figured out chief value other than jute, and we were made to suffer.

The writer asks your pardon for the length of this letter, as well as several former ones, but you were the one who took sufficient interest in bagging and ties last year to place the matter in its proper light before Ways and Means Committee, and I suppose you care yet to see how the question is being handled.

Thanking you most heartily for your kind indulgence in the past, I beg to remain, Faithfully, yours, C. LEE MCMILLAN.

[Treasury decisions.]

(T. D. 33277—G. A. 7447.)

JUTE WASTE STILL JUTE.

BAGGING FOR COTTON MADE OF JUTE WASTE.

Bagging for covering cotton made in chief value of various kinds of jute waste, such as card waste, roving waste, loom waste, jute croppings, and other kinds of jute waste is made in chief value of jute within the meaning of paragraph 355, tariff act of 1909, and is dutiable under said paragraph, and not under paragraph 358 of said act.

UNITED STATES GENERAL APPRAISERS,
New York, March 14, 1913.

In the matter of protest 621927, of Overton & Co., against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of New York. Before board 3 (Waite, Somerville, and Hay, general appraisers; Hay, G. A., absent).

Somerville, general appraiser:

The merchandise in this case is described on the invoice as five rolls of bagging for covering cotton. It was accordingly assessed for duty under paragraph 355 of the tariff act of 1909, which reads as follows:

"355. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and similar fabrics, suitable for covering cotton, composed of single yarns made of jute, jute butts, or hemp, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, not exceeding 16 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and weighing not less than 15 ounces per square yard, six-tenths of 1 cent per square yard."

The merchandise is claimed to be dutiable under paragraph 358 of said act, which reads as follows:

"358. All woven articles, finished or unfinished, and all manufactures of flax, hemp, ramie, or other vegetable fiber, or of which these substances, or any of them, is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem."

At the hearing this was the only contention made by the importers. A letter by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, dated April 15, 1912, was introduced in evidence without objection. The letter, so far as pertinent, reads as follows:

"I have to state that the Director of the Bureau of Standards has reported that the analysis of the sample submitted shows that the component material is jute waste, 100 per cent. In view of this analysis the merchandise represented by the sample is properly dutiable at the rate of six-tenths of 1 cent per square yard, under paragraph 355 of the tariff act of 1909."

The importers introduced, after proper proof, the result of their analyses of bagging for covering cotton from sample roll No. 3, which is as follows:

	Grams.	Per cent.
Jute waste	33.33	83.325
Hard fiber waste	.33	.825
Seg waste	.20	.50
Cotton waste	.18	.45
Dirt	5.30	13.25
Less by segregation	.66	1.65
Total	40.00	100.00

SUMMARY.

	Per cent.
Jute waste	83.325
Nonjute waste	1.775
Dirt and loss	14.90
	100

"The testimony shows conclusively that jute waste is chief value of the importation. The jute waste consists of roving waste, of card waste, of loom waste, of jute croppings, of jute rejections, or shredded cotton tares, and other waste, all of which are shown to be of jute extraction or jute material. The question presented for decision is, Are these different kinds of waste to be considered jute within the meaning of said paragraph?

"A vast amount of testimony was taken by the importers, who proved that these wastes were known in trade by particular names under which they were bought and sold, and that none of them would be a fulfillment of a contract and delivery under an obligation to sell so much jute. We think this is immaterial. The testimony shows that this jute waste is simply an inferior grade of jute. It is admitted to be jute and is claimed to be legally not jute within the meaning of that term as used in said paragraph.

"In Salomon Bros. Co. v. United States (2 Ct. Cust. Appls, 431, T. D. 32196) certain card waste, which consists of broken fibers of undressed raw jute rejected by the carding machine in the first process of manufacture, was held to be more accurately described as jute unmanufactured than as waste not specially provided for and was entitled to free entry under both the tariff acts of 1897 and 1909."

Though a waste unquestionably the court said:

"The substance is unquestionably jute. It is inferior to the parent substance, however, in quality. But the evidence discloses that it may be devoted to the same uses to which the substance resulting from the first carding is devoted. It may be spun or it may be felted or it may be used without further manipulation for stuffing horse collars."

The question there presented was, Does the fact that this substance, which is called in one sense a waste, make it dutiable or does it come, so long as it retains its native characteristics of jute and is susceptible of the same uses, more properly under the provisions of paragraph 566 of the tariff act of 1897 and paragraph 573 of the act of 1909, respectively? This question was answered in the affirmative in the following language:

"Our conclusion is that this importation is more accurately described as jute unmanufactured than as waste not specially provided for."

This decision establishes the fact that a waste does not cease to be the material which composes it for tariff purposes.

In the case of the Standard Varnish Works v. United States (59 Fed., 456; 8 C. C. A., 178), in discussing the subject of waste, the court said:

"Ring waste is a highly purified article of scoured wool and is made from wool tops or coomed wool, and the couronnes, when not made for export, is the tangled slubbing, or wool top, that through accident becomes disarranged in the process of spinning it into yarn. Garnetted waste is the product of a garnett machine, which tears and ravels out the twist in thread, thus reducing it back to the original purified wool by reason of taking out the twist which is originally given to the wool to make it yarn or thread. In the process of spinning yarn wool tops are sometimes called "slubbing" or "roving" in a process midway between wool tops and yarn. It is plain that in all these cases the waste is still wool. Again, paragraph 670 provides for waste rope and waste bagging, but, although unfitted for the purpose for which bagging or rope is intended, the waste is no new creation. It is the same substance as the bagging or rope which is used for the intended purpose. The cotton waste of paragraph 549 and the silk waste of paragraph 705 are still, respectively, cotton and silk."

This was, in substance, said also by the board in Salomon's case, G. A. 7242 (T. D., 31739). This case, however, was reversed by the Court of Customs Appeals in the case above cited, but what was said following the Standard Varnish Works v. United States, cited supra, was verified and in no manner reversed.

Our conclusion is that the various kinds of jute waste are still jute, being only inferior grades of this material. The protest is overruled and the collector's decision affirmed.

Mr. Chairman, if you take from the exports of our country during the last five years the amount that is brought back for the payment of raw cotton, instead of having a credit upon our side for exports over imports we would be a debtor to foreign countries.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, the gentleman yields so often when he has only five minutes that I must decline, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the point is that the Republican tariff bill has carried exemption from duty on the binder twine that is used by those who raise grain and other like products requiring binder twine to be used. In 1894 the Wilson bill placed both binder twine and cotton bagging for the first time upon the free list, and carried this great boon to the western farmers and to the southern farmers. When a Democratic Congress had control here we did not make any distinction between those who raised wheat and grain and those who raised cotton—that great product that clothes the world; that great product of ours, 66⅔ per cent of which we send abroad, and which brings back to this country yearly a stream of gold that adds prosperity to the whole Nation.

If there is any sectionalism with reference to these matters it is not found in this bill. It has been in the bills passed and enacted heretofore by Republican Congresses, because in response to demands from the great Republican Northwest and the grain-raising States they have given to the farmers free binding twine, but they have not given to the farmers of the South free cotton bagging, and the reason for it is that the material is controlled in this country by a bagging trust.

I know that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] denied that once upon the floor of this House. I have not the time now to reply to him if he denies it again, but I have the proof accessible here, which will demonstrate clearly that the American Manufacturing Co. is a trust.

And not only that, but they speak about the cheap labor employed abroad in this industry, in the mills in Calcutta. I have here a statement from a reliable gentleman engaged in selling cotton bagging and the importation of it, which shows that this same American Manufacturing Co. buys up nearly the entire product of these cheap-labor people in Calcutta and brings it here and sells it to the American farmers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has suggested something with reference to the increase of the kind of material that is provided for in the Payne bill. We propose not only to exempt cotton bagging made out of jute and jute butts, but also made out of Russian seg and other materials cited in this section.

In the bill introduced and adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means at the last Congress and in the provision in this present bill the wording of the bill which I drew and which was adopted by the Committee on Ways and Means is followed. The reason for that I demonstrated in a speech that I made on this item when the Underwood bill was up for consideration in 1912, and I then showed by the reports from the Treasury Department and by the reports from the Customs Court of Appeals that these importers of cotton bagging had gone out and brought into the country certain articles known as Russian seg and other materials cited in this section 558 of the Payne bill and the Treasury Department decided that it was not dutiable under the section providing for 45 per cent ad valorem, but was dutiable under this rate of one-sixth of a cent per pound.

And just think of it! The importer appealed from that decision, and the case went up to the Court of Customs Appeals, and the importer, who should be interested in having cheap duties, absolutely appealed the case in order that there might be higher duties placed upon an article that he imports.

It was intended by the provision of this section to prevent any such efforts on the part of the importer to wring from the farmers of the South an additional price for cotton bagging. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states that this clause is a matter of justice to the southern planter. He thereby admits the motive for the clause, and if instead of the word "justice" he would use the word "favor" I would agree with him. It is a favor to the southern farmer, a favor granted in violation of every theory upon which that side of the House have ostensibly framed this bill. It is not a revenue provision to take this out of the dutiable list, because to-day there is an importation of bagging, and a revenue is produced from it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Less than $100,000.

Mr. GILLETT. It is not a competitive provision, because to-day there is competition, and anywhere from one-tenth to one-quarter of all the bagging used in the United States is imported. There is no excuse for this provision, except, as the gentleman says, it is a matter of "justice" or of favor to the South. And they are putting the American manufacturer and laborer not in competition with the European laborer but in competition with the cheapest labor in the world, in competition with East Indian labor, where they get from $2 to $3 a month, so that even with the very slight duty that is now levied we are liable to lose our market.

But the gentleman says that we gave free binding twine to the western farmer, and why should we not give free cotton bagging to the southern farmer? Mr. Chairman, there is no analogy between the two. When binding twine was put upon the free list instead of there being from 10 per cent to 25 per cent of binding twine imported there was no binding twine imported. It looked as if the duty was prohibitive, and it was stricken from the dutiable list, and since the duty has been stricken off there have been no importations of binding twine from India, the product of the cheap labor of the Orient, but the only importations have been from Canada, the nation of all others with whom we ought to be able to compete without any duty or protection at all. The truth is, I suppose, the harvester people who make binding twine in the United States make it also in Canada, and it is exchanged from one country to the other according to existing needs, so that there is no real competition, and there is no possible analogy between binding twine and cotton bagging.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is talking about his part of the country. What does he think about New England getting free coal, free iron ore, and free wool?

Mr. GILLETT. That is something which I would vote against. I do not believe in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted to know whether the gentleman was in favor of that.

Mr. GILLETT. No; I am not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not. I have only a minute or two left. I do not ask any relief from the protection for the raw materials which my section of the country uses, and I do not think it is fair to take it from any section. I think all sections and industries ought to have a protective duty.

And now as to what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has said about the trusts. The gentleman has made that statement before.

Mr. BARTLETT. And proved it.

Mr. GILLETT. And given evidence for it. He calls it proving it. For evidence he has quoted the testimony of a discharged employee of one of the companies who now is an importer and interested. I deny the statements which that gentleman has made. I of course do not know from personal knowledge, but I am informed by the head of one of the great manufacturers of this product—and I believe the statement—that he has never been in any trust; that there was not any trust. I will admit the statement of the gentleman that the American Manufacturing Co. did absorb some others——

Mr. BARTLETT. And dismantled the plants also.

Mr. GILLETT. It may have absorbed a number; but the Ludlow Co., one of the largest in the country, has never been in the combination—has been a rival and competitor always—so that although one branch of the manufacturers may have tried to absorb others, it never succeeded. And if the gentleman calls it a trust because one manufacturer has tried to make a monopoly and has not succeeded, I do not know where he will end in his definition of trusts. The truth is, the company in my district, I am assured, never has been in any trust—never has had any combination with other companies—and just because another factory in another part of the country has succeeded in buying out some rivals that does not prove that there is a trust. There has always been competition between them and the Ludlow Co., which is one of the largest manufacturers in the country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not this the same kind of bagging on which there is a duty imposed if it is used for covering wool or wheat, but when it is used for covering cotton it is now made free?

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know; I did not suppose it was.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no. This is gunny bagging—gunny cloth.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know as to that; but, Mr. Chairman, to-day there is a tariff on that article which is only slightly protective. It is a specific duty, and therefore its ad valorem depends on the value of the product; but it only runs at the most to 20 per cent, and is now less than 10 per cent. The manufacturers in this country have to import their machinery and pay a heavy duty on it; and then, paying American wages, they have to compete against the Calcutta manufacturer, who gets the same machinery without paying any duty and employs labor at about one-tenth what we pay. And this abolition of a revenue duty—a competitive duty—this departure from the theory on which the Democratic leader told us this bill was framed—is made in order to give the southern planter an apparent saving of 3 or 4 cents on the covering of a bale of cotton worth from $50 to $75. I do not believe it will be a real saving, for I think as soon as the Calcutta manufacturers have killed out ours and won a monopoly of the market their prices will be put up above the present figure.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I know that this paragraph has received the approval of the Democratic caucus, and anything I may say can do nothing to change the situation. However, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the city of New York we have located several great plants engaged in manufacturing cotton bagging, employing upward of 5,000 people under proper labor supervision, working fair hours, and getting good compensation. These plants are not in my district, and, as far as I know, none of the people employed in them live in my district. But I do feel that it is my duty to stand up and protest against the passage of anything in this bill that will destroy an industry of so much importance to the city which I in part represent.

No gentleman on the Democratic side has uttered a word of protest against this action. The gentlemen in whose districts these plants are located are going to permit them to be dismantled and the business moved to India, where I know from my own investigation they have modern plants and the best, high-class, efficient supervision.

This cotton bagging is used exclusively for covering the American cotton crop, and I am informed that when the cotton is sold it is weighed in and charged for at the same rate as the cotton, so that the cotton grower actually makes a profit on what he pays for the bagging. He comes here now, through the southern Representatives, and demands free trade in cotton bagging, so that he may obtain additional profit on his product.

We have heard much in the debate on this tariff bill about the Democratic Party favoring the workingmen of the country, but when in this particular item it is shown that in the jute mills in India the men, women, and children employed in this industry work 13½ hours per day and 81 hours per week for a compensation of $1.75 a month for the boys and girls and $2 a month for the women and $3 for the men, it is a competition that will drive out of business everyone engaged in this industry in the United States. There is no oriental industry competing with this country that has grown as has the Calcutta jute industry.

I have personally examined the conditions under which the working people engaged in this industry in New York City are employed. The factories are of modern character, the men and women are employed under the very best conditions, and the women receive as high as $15 a week, the men considerably more than that amount.

I know whereof I speak, and as sure as this paragraph is passed and written into the law, just so sure will this particular line of business—that is, the manufacture of cotton bagging in the city of New York and in the United States—be moved to India, and the people now employed therein have to seek some other employment. I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

418. Balm of Gilead.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me a strange situation, that the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to think it is a favor to the South when a great southern industry and cotton-growing section is allowed to buy an article in the cheapest market it can.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, are we considering paragraph 418?

The CHAIRMAN. Paragraph 418.

Mr. GOOD. What relation has that to the cotton industry?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. No; I am simply calling the attention of gentlemen on the other side that the gentleman from Texas is not in order.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, whenever a matter is put on the free list, if it happens to be used in the South, gentlemen raise a sectional issue and declare that putting such article on the free list is giving a special privilege to the South. By what process, or inversion of the process, of reasoning does the gentleman think it is a favor to the South if something they ought to have, and did have but for restrictive legislation—the right to buy anywhere—is permitted to be bought by them without the imposition of a tribute levied on it for the benefit of some industry in New England?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will any gentleman on this side be permitted to answer the argument of the gentleman from Texas?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not making a point of order.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I was called to order some time ago for simply saying "Amen." [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Texas not to go into this matter now.

Mr. HARDY. I was only replying to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I was discussing the putting of materials on the free list, and the item of balm of Gilead was up. By right, without any restrictions of law, naturally, men have the right to buy anywhere anything, and when you restrict that right by law as to one man and refuse to give him the right to buy a thing anywhere and do this for the benefit of somebody else, it is a strange perversion of reasoning for that man, who has ridden and is riding on the other man's shoulders, to come in and say that it is a privilege to allow that man to buy where he can buy the cheapest. It is just the other way; you have levied a tribute on the whole of southern industry for the benefit of New England, and now you complain if only just in one little matter you are asked to take your heavy yoke from our necks and say that is giving us a special privilege.

Mr. GILLETT. Inasmuch as in this bill all manufactured articles pay some duty, and inasmuch as this is a very small one, why should it be taken off?

Mr. HARDY. Because gentlemen have ridden for lo, these many years on the backs of the people; that is, the manufacturing interests have ridden on the backs of the farmers, who sell to all the world, the gentleman thinks it has grown to be a sacred right, and that it ought to be continued.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, how does the gentleman harmonize his present views with putting a tax upon furs, from which the clothing of the people are made that is worn in the North. That has heretofore been on the free list.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman's present views are just what they have always been. As I told the gentleman who now addresses me the other day, in private conversation, if furs in his great region is one of those great necessities of common life, then I believe they ought to be upon the free list. [Applause on the Republican side.] I do not believe in taxing the laboring masses of this country for the special benefit of any class; and as far as we can we have observed that rule in this bill, and we invite the gentleman from Minnesota to come over and vote with us for this bill. Let him present the merits of his case to the consideration of a Democratic Congress, or a Democratic Ways and Means Committee, and it will receive a hearing. This committee has shown that it does not regard section or interest, but that it has attempted to regard the whole mass of the people, and to take off the burden from the poor.

Mr. GILLETT. Why does not the gentleman put cotton cloth on the free list?

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman knows full well that both woolen and cotton cloths have retained a duty greatly reduced in this bill for the reason that when you have built a structure on stilts you can not afford to cut the stilts from under the whole structure at once.

Mr. GILLETT. Why does the gentleman want to take the stilts from under this factory and not from under any other?

Mr. HARDY. Because this is a little industry wherein by nature the goods ought all to be made perhaps in India—we don't grow the material—and yet you seek to build this industry in New England out of an East Indian product by demanding a supporting special tribute from the cotton grower, and you have no more right to do it than you would to take up a collection from the whole people. Your duty on bagging is not a right of your factories; it is a burden on the farmers in the South, and it is not right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather appropriate to put balm of Gilead on the free list in a Democratic bill. Balm of Gilead, I believe, is a balm to soothe the weary and the distressed and the injured, and there will be a great many people in this country needing balm if this bill passes.

Mr. HARWICK. Is that the reason the Republicans put it on the free list also?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my high appreciation of the exceedingly logical attitude of my good friend from Texas [Mr. HARDY]. Cotton is on the free list, and cotton bagging, says the gentleman from Texas, should also be on the free list as provided in the bill. This bill puts wool on the free list, and every pound of wool shorn from the backs of the sheep must be placed in a bag, or is placed in a bag for shipment, but that particular kind of bagging pays a duty of 30 per cent. If it is proper and righteous to give the cotton planter of Dixie free bagging for his cotton how about the woolgrower in the great Northwest country, surrounded by all of the difficulties that he has to overcome? How about knocking the stilts from under his feet and then planting a mine of dynamite under him, denying him the poor, miserable consolation of a free bag in which to place the free wool?

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman wish an answer?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the thing answers itself; that it is utterly, absolutely inconsistent. It shows how sectional this bill is; that while it puts wool on the free list, along with cotton, it denies wool the free bagging which cotton is given; that while it gives the South free bagging for cotton, charges all the country 30 per cent for bagging for wheat. I do not care to take the time of the committee, but it is pleasant to illuminate these charming inconsistencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

420. Bauxite or beauxite, crude, not refined or otherwise advanced in condition from its natural state.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 104, strike out paragraph 420, lines 14 and 15.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, bauxite is the crude ore out of which aluminum is manufactured, and it is found in only four States—Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee. Our competitors are the people of France, where this ore is found in abundance, where its richness is 10 per cent greater than that of the American ore, and where it is mined by cheap labor. Bauxite now is being shipped from the Southern States to the St. Lawrence River, to be treated at Niagara and Messina. The Aluminum Co. of America has decided to begin the manufacture of aluminum nearer the base of raw material, down in the South, where there is an abundance of water power, because in the manufacture of aluminum the question of power is of considerable importance. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who drafted, as he said, the metal schedule, or rather was largely responsible for it, stated that he proposed to put bauxite on the free list for the benefit of a French company that has begun the construction of a plant in North Carolina; and then in one of the first discussions of this subject he stated that by putting bauxite upon the free list they could use the raw material somewhere on the Atlantic coast in factories or plants to be established there. In either event this legislation is not in the interest of the South, because if the French company now located in North Carolina secures its raw material from France it does it at the expense of the bauxite mines in the four Southern States I have named. Then every ton of raw material mined in France takes away that amount of raw material that could be mined in the Southern States by American wage earners——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. In a moment. We should retain that money in this country, and give wages to the American workingmen, and develop a new industry in the Southern States.

Mr. SHERLEY. This is one of the cases where we are not helping the South and being sectional at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have said all along that this bill was not drawn in the interest of the South, and I challenged the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] the other night when he was criticizing my southern colleagues of the Ways and Means Committee for, as he said, making a sectional bill, when they were in fact not making a sectional bill.

I said that they had given up virtually everything in the South, free iron ore, free coal, free lumber, free meal, free corn, free cotton, free sugar, free meat, and free wool in Texas; they have surrendered everything—all the South had, except the Angora goat in Texas and peanuts in North Carolina—and I repudiated the insinuation that the southern men on this committee have been partial to their own section. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment on this subject to have the Clerk read a letter—or part of it—from Col. Robert J. Lowry, an ex-Confederate soldier and one of the most prominently known men in the South.

The Clerk read as follows:

The South has become a manufacturing section, and as such she is now entitled to the same protection that New England as a manufacturing section has enjoyed for a century. Factories of all kinds are dotted all over our southern country, and new ones are being erected continually, and these industries should be protected. The South, which, as a consumer, has paid tribute to the New England section for a century, is now coming into its own as a producer and manufacturer, and she is certainly entitled to the same adequate protection which New England has heretofore enjoyed. Just at the time when the South can make her industries pay, the proposed tariff revision, unless judiciously handled, may subject much of her product to competition with cheap foreign labor and be the direct means of allowing foreign manufacturers coming in here and underselling and putting out of business many of our established industries, which are at this time our pride and the result of years of endeavor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

423. Bibles, comprising the books of the Old or New Testament, or both, bound or unbound.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 104, lines 19 and 20, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not understand what the motion was.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I just asked that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I wish the gentleman would add a few minutes to that, as I desire to oppose the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to five minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have three minutes and the gentleman from Wyoming to have two.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I realize that there is a necessity for more Bibles in certain sections of the country and wish there might be more of them read, but I do not see why it is advisable to bring into this country foreign Bibles, many of them printed in foreign languages, to be distributed amongst our people, nor do I see why we should bring in Bibles, even though they were printed in the English language, that are made in England, when bookbinders and printers might just as well be employed at that occupation in the United States. I submit this amendment in the interest of the very efficient men engaged in these industries in this country. The printers, the pressmen, the bookbinders, and others who make up books are interested in this paragraph. I wish the committee would permit Bibles to be made in this country as they would continue to be if this paragraph were stricken out. This is absolutely in the interest of the labor of the country.

There must be a little Democratic deviltry in this country in order to keep the preacher properly employed, but this is not in the interest of the preacher; it is in the interest of the labor that makes up the Bibles for distribution throughout the land. Perhaps the preacher will have just as much to do, and if we all get too good his occupation will be gone.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to deny any American citizen any consolation that can be obtained from this bill. After it passes there will be no earthly sources of consolation, and men's minds will naturally tend to that consolation that can be had only in Holy Writ. Therefore I think Bibles ought to be free. I think they ought to come in plentifully. I think the American people after this bill passes, after the soup houses are in full swing and rags become popular, ought to have Bibles just as cheaply as they can get them. They will be the only consolation they will have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

424. All binding twine manufactured from New Zealand hemp, manila, istle or Tampico fiber, sisal grass, or sunn, or a mixture of any two or more of them, of single ply and measuring not exceeding 600 feet to the pound.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 25, page 104, after the word "pound," the following: "Provided, That articles mentioned in this paragraph, if imported from a country which lays an import duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be subject to a duty of ½ of 1 cent a pound."

Mr. MOORE. This is simply restoring the very wise and excellent provision of the Payne law as against unfair competition in this line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman what dressed istle or Tampico fiber is used for?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is fiber that is used for binding. I am not sure exactly what particular articles are bound with it.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the bill provides for free istle or Tampico. It provides for a duty upon dressed or combed istle or Tampico, and then provides for binding twine made from istle or Tampico free.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the language of this bill, except as to the proviso, follows the language of the present law, which seems to work satisfactorily.

Mr. MANN. Except this, I am frank to say, that I do not recall whether istle or Tampico that is dressed is used for binding twine or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is used for some binding purpose. It may not be for what you call ordinary binding, but it is used to make some kind of a string out of.

Mr. MANN. The present rate on istle dressed or Tampico is practically prohibitory. I think all of that article that comes into the country comes in undressed free. But when you reduce the duty on dressed Tampico or istle, and then leave binding twine on the free list, I am not sure what the result will be.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

425. Birds and land and water fowls, not specially provided for in this section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman what will be the effect of this provision as to the admission of birds and water fowl free of duty? Of course we have already provided that heads, tails, and wings of birds shall not come in at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman that this provision in here probably does not mean anything either, because of the provision in another portion of the bill. The gentleman will note the words "not otherwise specially provided for in this section."

Mr. MANN. I understand, but I was asking where it is specially provided for in this section, providing that the heads and wings and the tails and the skins of wild birds should not be admitted at all, whether there would be any way of bringing in these birds or water fowls without heads, tails, wings, or skin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Dressed. The bill contemplates bringing in dressed birds. We change the language to "dressed" in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression there was a dutiable rate on dressed birds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is on dressed birds, so that they can come in in that way.

Mr. MANN. Having already provided a duty upon dressed birds, and then having provided that no birds should come in with a head, or tail, or wing, or skin upon them, what will this particular provision permit to come in? What kind of a bird can the gentleman find which is not dressed, but which has neither head, wing, tail, nor skin?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, as I said awhile ago, I think the probabilities are that this line, as it appears, will not be effective, but we recognized it in the old law. We put the "n. s. p. f." behind it, and made it a negative proposition by so doing.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will permit me, I am under the impression that any appraiser would be justified in construing these two paragraphs to which he has made reference so as to admit live birds introduced for breeding purposes or for purposes of exhibition.

Mr. MANN. That is already carried in a former provision of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes; and that the feather proviso would prohibit only the importation of plumes or feathers or heads or tails or wings when an attempt was made to import them separately from the birds themselves.

Mr. MANN. Well, now, let us see. Does the gentleman contend, as to these birds that are principally valuable for plumage, that when you bring them in whole that provision will permit them to be brought in free? For instance, I remember on a recent trip to Panama seeing certain gentlemen of the House, Members of the House, using their best endeavors to get a chance to bring in a bird or two of the kind which fly in Panama, and if they had been better shots they would have succeeded. [Laughter.] Now, would they have been able to bring in those birds free if they were whole?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. There may be doubt about it, but my opinion is, as I say, that any appraiser would be justified in construing that provision as to a bird coming in whole as not in conflict with this proviso, because they could not be imported in quantities sufficient to supply the feather trade. It would not be possible to import the birds alive into the United States.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of live birds, but dead birds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

431. Bolting cloths composed of silk, imported expressly for milling purposes, and so permanently marked as not to be available for any other use Press cloths composed of camel's hair, imported expressly for oil milling purposes, and marked so as to indicate that it is for such purposes, and cut into lengths not to exceed 72 inches and woven in widths not under 10 inches nor to exceed 15 inches and weighing not less than one-half pound per square foot.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 105, line 16, by striking out after the word "use" the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of my friends, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], to this paragraph, so that I may answer their criticism that some of us on this side have raised the question of sectionalism. I do not think they have answered the question fully with regard to bagging for cotton, because the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not suggested the raising of a sectional question. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself are the ones that have charged sectionalism against us.

Mr. MOORE. I do not want to be put in the position of raising a sectional question, and do not intend to raise it except as the facts show it.

Mr. BARTLETT But you did it.

Mr. MOORE. I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to this new paragraph, 431, where I propose to strike out the language—

Press cloths composed of camel's hair, imported expressly for oil milling purposes, and marked so as to indicate that it is for such purposes, and cut into lengths not to exceed 72 inches and woven in widths not under 10 inches nor to exceed 15 inches and weighing not less than one-half pound per square foot.

This is purely and specially a sectional proposition. The gentleman from Georgia will observe that under the language, on line 17, which I propose to strike out "press cloths composed of camel's hair, imported expressly for oil milling purposes" are to come in free, mark you, provided they are to be "used expressly for oil milling purposes." Now, from that it would appear on its face that these press cloths which are to come in free are only for those who are to manufacture cottonseed oil. That is what the paragraph says; and while I do not want to raise a sectional question—and I hope I do not—I insist that when you say these things shall come in free if used "expressly for oil milling purposes" you provide for bringing them in for only one specific purpose. You play into the hands of the cottonseed-oil manufacturers, who may thus have the advantage of getting them in free, while other establishments requiring press cloths in their business must pay the prescribed rate of duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. You can make that same language apply to cloths for milling purposes generally, can you not?

Mr. MOORE. No. That is the very point I am making, if the gentleman please. I am contending that the South in this instance is taking care of its own. Of course, I do not blame the South for doing it. I am not blaming the South at all. I am simply pointing out this circumstance.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the milling industry is not confined to the South.

Mr. MOORE. I think it is in the matter of cottonseed oil.

Mr. BARTLETT. I say the milling industry, in reference to silk.

Mr. MOORE. I am speaking of the manufacture of cottonseed oil, which is coming to be a great industry in the South.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes. That goes on the free list, too, in this bill.

Mr. MOORE. Cotton seed is manufactured and pressed into oil in the South; and in order to accommodate the manufacturers of cottonseed oil you propose to give them free press cloth, while in other paragraphs of the bill you impose a duty upon the component parts of press cloth. For the particular purpose of accommodating "our friends around the corner" you give them their press cloth free.

I have a letter here which indicates just what this thing is. In it the writer says that this admission free of press cloth, composed of camel's hair imported "expressly for milling purposes"—

Is the worst piece of rank favoritism that the whole bill shows, and is probably made still worse from the fact that it concerns comparatively only a limited number of people directly, but at the same time it has been done to make a present to the southern cotton-oil mills of a very large percentage of the price they pay for the press-cloth bags they use in pressing the oil.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MOORE. Now, I want to say this: God bless the South in every effort it makes to build up its industries. God bless the South when it undertakes to manufacture cotton in competition with foreign countries or New England. God bless the South even when it undertakes to get in its cotton bagging free in order to widen its foreign market.

God bless the South when it undertakes in fair competition to take away from New England or any other portion of the country the manufacture of cottonseed oil, which is exported and often comes back through our ports again as "pure olive oil," after it has been manipulated on the other side. God bless the South in all of its undertakings to favor its own industries; but when you have control on the other side you ought to be a little consistent in your treatment of the other industries of the country. We have need of heavy fur goods in the winter, when you do not need them in the South.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think the cottonseed-oil industry is getting any great show of favoritism when this cloth is put on the free list?

Mr. MOORE. I think so.

Mr. SHERLEY. I just wanted to know what the gentleman thought.

Mr. MOORE. I think so. If you put press cloth on the free list and then provide expressly that it shall be used "only for oil-milling purposes," I think you are giving a direct advantage to the cottonseed-oil manufacturers, and there is no other way to look at it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it necessary to answer again the gentleman's charge that these provisions of the bill are put here for the purposes of protection. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not read the whole paragraph to the committee. The first portion of the paragraph reads:

Bolting cloths composed of silk, imported expressly for milling purposes, and so permanently marked as not to be available for any other use.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will pardon me, that is in the Payne law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. It is already in the law. It is a discrimination in favor of the wheat mills of the North, which the gentleman did not mention at all. It has always been carried in Republican bills for the benefit of the northern milling interests. And now the gentleman says that this is sectionalism, because the provision in this bill happens to do something for an industry located in the South, it all being in the same paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

434. Books, maps, music, engravings, photographs, etchings, bound or unbound, and charts, which shall have been printed more than 20 years at the date of importation, and all hydrographic charts and publications issued for their subscribers or exchanges by scientific and literary associations or academies, or publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation, and public documents issued by foreign Governments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, line 6, after the word "etchings" insert the words "lithographic prints."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 106, line 11, after the word "circulation," by inserting the words "not advertising matter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, line 5, after the numerals "434," strike out "books"; after the word "music" strike out "engravings"; and in line 6 strike out the word "etchings."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he intends by this paragraph that all books, maps, music, engravings, and so forth, that come in under this paragraph shall be those published only for subscribers, scientific societies, and so forth?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is a reenactment of the present law, and I am not informed fully about that.

Mr. MOORE. It would appear from line 8 that the scientific and literary associations only were to receive publications for their subscribers, and so forth. Books, maps, music, and engravings appear to be treated separately. If that is so, I shall press my amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is a reenactment of the present law. There is no change in these articles. We received no complaints about the present law and we concluded to retain it. It was not given very full investigation.

Mr. MOORE. I will say that it does appear that many books and engravings are being brought from abroad into this country, not for philanthropic purposes. There are dealers that get them in under various subterfuges, as they do other articles supposed to be admitted only for a scientific purpose. The printers and bookbinders and pressmen are protesting against this sort of thing and artists have a grievance against the vast quantity of art works being brought in under provisions of the law which are evaded. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

436. Books, maps, music, photographs, etchings, lithographic prints, and charts, specially imported, not more than two copies in any one invoice, in good faith, for the use and by order of any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific, or literary purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use and by order of any college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in the United States, or any State or public library, and not for sale, subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 106, line 16, after the word "music," by inserting the word "engravings."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

437. Books, libraries, usual and reasonable furniture, and similar household effects of persons or families from foreign countries, all the foregoing if actually used abroad by them not less than one year, and not intended for any other person or persons, nor for sale.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 107, lines 1 and 2, after the numerals "437," strike out "books, libraries, usual and reasonable furniture, and similar"; and on line 3, strike out after the word "countries," "all the foregoing."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this paragraph is happily phrased. Its purpose is to admit the household effects of families who come here in good faith. The admission of books, libraries, "usual and reasonable furniture," and similar household effects, allows a degree of latitude and discretion to the inspector at the customhouse that ought not to be tolerated. I have heard of people bringing in books and furniture under such a clause as this that were not properly admissible. They have defeated the customs laws of the country and imposed upon the credulity of the people of the United States. I think the purpose is merely to permit the admission of household effects, which is all right. I urge the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

439. Bran and wheat screenings.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be first in order. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Minnesota:

Amend, page 107, paragraph 439, by striking out, after the word "and," the word "wheat" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ground."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, not with any hope that it will be adopted, but for the purpose of showing that you are heaping insults to injury. The farmers of this country by this bill will be severely afflicted. You have destroyed their flocks, you have reduced the price they will get for their crops. You are bound to make their land waste, and now you are inviting the foul seeds—unground screenings—of foreign countries to be admitted to be sown upon them to make them forever useless.

Mr. Chairman, I am not so much alarmed over the effect of the Underwood bill on the country as are some of my colleagues. I do not believe that it will bring on a panic, because the framers of this bill have placed its burdens on those of our people who are the most patriotic and self-sacrificing.

None of our great industries that are highly organized and monopolized have been interfered with, and in many instances they have been extended privileges that they have not under the present law. Does anyone contend that the great Steel Trust, the Beef Trust, or the Sugar Trust or the Woolen Trust have been materially handicapped by the Underwood bill? The burdens of this new fiscal policy are deliberately placed on the farmers, the small manufacturers, and the laborers. The benefits are given to those who do not need them. The consumer will gain nothing. Whatever loss the producer will sustain by the lowering of his prices will result in profits to the importer, the trust magnate, the middleman, and the foreign producer, but will never reach the consumer.

The actual producer is sacrificed on the altar of free trade for the sake of redeeming platform pledges written by idealists, who disregard business principles, common sense, and fairness. I do not say that the authors of this bill were not actuated by worthy motives, but I do say that the farmers, the small manufacturers, and workmen—the independent producers of this country—have been penalized for the sake of a wrong economic principle and fiscal policy.

On the Democratic side of this Chamber we have the free trader advocating protection for the industries in which his constituents are interested and free trade on every other commodity produced in this country. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is clamoring for a 15 per cent duty on shingles, but is perfectly willing that everything else be free. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is perfectly willing that the goat industry of his State be protected to the extent of 35 per cent ad valorem, while raw wool be admitted free. The gentlemen from Louisiana throw up their hands in horror over the reduction of the duty on sugar, but insist that the northern wheat producer and flour manufacturer submit to the admission free of duty of Canadian flour and by-products. Does this not conclusively show the absurd and unscientific principles upon which this tariff measure has been constructed? This explains in part the reason for the many unfair and indefensible items in this bill and its many inconsistencies.

Political expediency is the underlying principle upon which this bill is constructed. The items of this bill relating to wheat and flour can be explained on no other ground. This is true of practically all the products of the farm, as well as a good many of the materials that go to make up the manufactured product.

To place a duty on the raw material while admitting free of duty the finished product is a discrimination against our own producer and of no benefit to the consumer. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], stated Saturday that the effect of the Underwood bill would be to slightly reduce the price of sugar, but that on other articles the reduction would be infinitesimal. Thus from the admission made by the authors of this bill it is evident that the consumer will be benefited only infinitesimally.

This bill can have no other effect than to encourage and increase importation. Every manufactured article imported into this country which can be manufactured here displaces our own products. Every agricultural product imported into this country which can be produced here displaces an equal amount of our own agricultural products.

Clearly, then, the bill is of no benefit to the consumer and of irreparable injury to the producer, and the producer and the consumer are one and the same.

How our Democratic friends can explain that they are going to reduce the high cost of living without reducing prices I can justify on only one theory, namely, that the cost of living will be reduced by reducing the purchasing power of the consumer. By limiting the demand for his product the producer will have less purchasing power as a consumer. He will, therefore, in order to live within his means, be compelled to reduce his standard of living, and in this way he will reduce his cost of living at the expense of his standard of living. This is the only logical conclusion that can be reached.

Mr. Chairman, it has been claimed by the Democrats throughout this whole discussion that they have framed this bill on the theory of reducing the cost of the necessaries of life; but they have taken our furs, one of the most necessary of necessaries, and transferred it from the free list to the dutiable list. The majority of these furs are not used for ornament, but are used as a protection against the severe northern climate. They are a matter of absolute necessity. They are worn by people in every walk of life.

If this bill becomes a law this will be practically the only country in the world that has a duty on raw furs, and why our Democratic friends placed this item on the protected list is inconceivable. High-priced furs, which are properly classed as luxuries, should be taxed, but common furs should be admitted free, so that they would be within the reach of everyone, not only as a protection against the cold but as a matter of economy. No garment can be produced for the same money to take the place of the fur garment either for comfort or for durability. The fur garment is indispensable for the people of our northern climate.

Gentlemen, there are several items in this bill that I wish I had the opportunity of voting for, but you have deprived me of that opportunity by bringing in an omnibus bill. In its consideration and discussion we have not had sufficient information or time to consider the effect of the bill as a whole. In various items of the bill you have disregarded the information furnished by the Tariff Board.

I am in favor of a tariff measuring the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad based upon the recommendation of a nonpartisan, unbiased tariff board or commission, having at its disposal sufficient means and ample power to acquire authentic information. We will never have a just and equitable tariff measure until it is freed from partisan politics. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has also offered an amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word on this particular paragraph in opposition to the remarks made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH]. He assumes that this item is in some way hostile to the farmer. In that I think his inference is unwarranted. This puts bran on the free list. The farmer is the best customer for bran, especially the dairy farmer, and, as I understand it, the dairy farmers of New York State and some parts of Michigan and Pennsylvania will probably enjoy some particular advantage from this. Certainly no farmer in any section of the country will be at any particular disadvantage. This bran item is the only item of that whole flour and wheat schedule that I think, after a careful study, is at all subject to criticism. It may be that on further consideration the committee or the other body may put bran on the same footing as flour. There is where I think it ought to be. We have a large milling industry centralized in Minneapolis, Duluth, Buffalo, St. Louis, and Kansas City.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Not now. I have only a very few minutes. They have a large growing milling industry in Canada centralized at Winnipeg. They have a very fine quality of hard wheat in Canada which makes a high-class flour. I do not believe under present circumstances that the American miller is at a disadvantage with the Canadian miller. The facts show that the importations of wheat into this country have been growing. The exportations of flour from this country have been growing, but the importations of flour into this country have not been growing. The importations of wheat during the last year were about 2,000,000 bushels and the importations of flour were in amount only about half a million dollars. The exports of flour from this country were nearly $50,000,000. In other words, the importations of flour bear the relationship to the exportations of flour that 1 does to 100.

The domestic consumption of flour is nearly $500,000,000, so that the millers of America are finding a possible foreign competition now of less than one-tenth of 1 per cent. After a very careful and sympathetic study from the standpoint of the millers themselves and in sympathy with their industry, I do not believe they are injured by the provisions of this bill. But they claim, and I think with some possible show of justice, that while the Canadian miller is at a disadvantage in some respects in competition with them now, that he will gain an advantage on this bran proposition. The Canadian miller has a large supply of the raw material of wheat, but he is at a disadvantage on labor, he is at a disadvantage on transportation, and he is at a disadvantage on fuel, and more than all that he is at a disadvantage in the local market for his bran and screenings, or mill offal.

Now, bran and screenings are 30 per cent of the wheat, 70 per cent are flour, so that this 30 per cent of his product is the real margin of profit in the milling industry. The Canadian miller has no local market for his bran. There are not enough dairy industries, there are not enough live-stock industries in the whole Dominion of Canada to use the bran, and the transportation clear over to England is more or less expensive. But they say this provision for free entry of bran into the United States will open to the Canadian miller a market for his bran and it will enable him to more profitably grind his wheat. I am not sure but there is some basis for the criticism. But that is not the basis the gentleman from Minnesota seems to take. It does seem to me that bran ought to be tied to flour. If there is free flour there should be free bran; but if there is not free flour there should not be free bran. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does the gentleman understand the purport of my amendment? It simply says "bran and ground screenings." The bill as it is now is "bran and wheat screenings." Now, one point that I am bringing out at this time is the fact that under the provisions of this bill as it is written you are affording the Canadian people an opportunity to ship over to us all sorts of foul seed, weeds, and everything of that kind. Now, we want those ground over there——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. But the gentleman was arguing that the farmer was injured, which is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. You can not injure the farm without injuring the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have about two minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have two minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just stated the term "wheat screenings" would admit all weed seeds and such things as that, and I am sure the gentleman from Alabama will disavow the intention of changing the law that we passed in the last Congress which forbids the importation of weed seeds or which relates to the importation of pure seeds by this change in this provision of the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have that go in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not intended in any way to affect the pure-food law provision.

Mr. MANN. The pure-seed law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is the same thing.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman let me state, however, under the provisions of that paragraph 429, wheat screenings includes all kinds of foul weeds, such as cockle and cheat so-called, and many other things which are foul weed seeds which can come in free.

Mr. MANN. I take it, Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill only admits free of duty wheat screenings, which are permitted to come in——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And the language of the pure-seed law is that these wheat screenings which are filled with weed seed are not permitted to be imported at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. It is not intended to change that.

Mr. FORDNEY. How can you tell when they are ground?

Mr. MANN. If they are ground up they will not grow, and therefore it will not make any difference whether it comes in at all or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

444. Broom corn.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out paragraph No. 444, line 15, page 107.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there are but two words in paragraph 444, and those two words are "broom corn." By the terms of this bill broom corn is placed on the free list. Under the terms of the present law there is $3 per ton duty on broom corn. While we had under consideration the agricultural schedule I tried to secure an amendment to put an additional tariff on broom corn as compared with what we have at the present time. I know some gentlemen have the idea that putting $25 on broom corn was somewhat ridiculous. And yet it was not. You must remember that in our country, at least, it requires several acres of ground to produce 1 ton of broom corn. Our farmers are at a very large expense, not only in the cultivation of that corn but in harvesting it, and at a large expense in preparing a shelter so that the broom corn may be properly dried and cured and put in proper shape to produce the best brooms, and in many other ways broom-corn growers are put to a very heavy expense.

Now, for instance, this bill provides $2 a ton upon common hay. One acre of land will produce from 2 to 4 tons of hay per year. Hay grows on from year to year and does not have to be replanted and cultivated and harvested. It is a very cheap product, so far as the labor that is required to produce it, and yet, gentlemen, you give the hay farmer a protection of $2 on a ton, but you take off $3 per ton on broom corn and place that upon the free list.

I can not understand why this House should discriminate against the farmers who produce broom corn. You have a tariff upon oats, a tariff upon peas, apples, and lemons, and peanuts, garlic, and onions, and so forth, and yet the men in Oklahoma who give their energy and their industry and their labor and their toil, who give, as it were, their lives to the production of broom corn to supply the needs of the country are discriminated against. Their product is placed on the free list. I do not know why this has been done, but I do know that if this bill shall become a law the farmers of my State, who produce two-thirds of the broom corn that is produced in the United States, shall know and understand that their products are discriminated against by a House in control of Democrats, and that broom corn is refused even the little protection that is given to many other products.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that 3 acres of ordinary land will produce 2 tons of broom corn, and that a few years ago it sold in the market for $240 a ton?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. It is not a fact. It will take on an average in Oklahoma, where we produce two-thirds of the broom corn in the United States, if my information is correct, about 3 acres to produce 1 ton of broom corn.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Then the land must be exceedingly poor. Then, another question——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. We may have poor land, but we have as good people as there are in Pennsylvania or anywhere else on earth, and they are entitled to the same consideration from this House.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. But is it not true that a few years ago broom corn sold in the market for $240 a ton?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. It is not a fact. It was high one year, but that was exceptional. I would like the committee to explain why they discriminate against broom corn.

So far the gentlemen have remained silent. I referred to this matter a few days ago. Not a word of explanation has been made. Why should the truck farmers around the great cities of the East be given a little protection on garlic and onions, and the broom-corn growers of Oklahoma be placed in competition with Italians, Turks, Japanese, Mexicans, and others who work for 25 cents per day? No one in charge of this bill and no one who will vote for it has attempted to explain this discrimination against the men of Oklahoma who produce broom corn. The Democratic caucus considered this bill for two full weeks. I do not know what occurred in this secret caucus. I do not know whether or not any effort was made in that caucus in behalf of the broom-corn growers of Oklahoma. But the decree has come from the caucus that no material amendments offered shall be carried. So I presume the caucus will prevail and broom corn will go on the free list. But I shall protest in the strongest terms possible.

Sir, in 1910, 11 foreign countries imported broom corn into the United States. Importations came in 1911 and in 1912. Whenever the price of broom corn reaches a price which makes it reasonably profitable for our farmers to raise broom corn, when broom corn sells for a price that gives our farmers fair compensation for their labor, then ships are loaded with broom corn grown in foreign countries, come to New York, and down goes the price of broom corn. The ocean freights are cheap; railway rates are high. Foreign broom corn comes to our markets by water transportation. Oklahoma farmers transport their product to market by railway. It is evident our farmers are at a disadvantage. I believe in protecting our own farmers against competition from those who pay none of our taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

445. Buckwheat and buckwheat flour.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 107, after line 16, by inserting:
"445½. Bulbs used exclusively for purposes of propagation."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, and all amendments thereto, be closed in five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not want but two.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this is the—may I have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]—matter to which I called attention several days ago, hoping you might give it consideration when you reached the free list. I called attention at that time to the fact that on Puget Sound, near Bellingham, the Government has an experimental garden, and it has been demonstrated there that bulbs of this kind can be raised equal to those imported from Europe. The Commercial Club of Bellingham and several individuals there have written me saying that if they could import these bulbs free for propagation purposes it would become a profitable industry.

I have always understood that the view was taken both by the Republican Party and by the Democratic Party that, unless there was some special reason against so doing, it was wise to admit free bulbs or seeds or other agricultural articles for propagation, and accordingly I offer this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Washington that I have not had the chance to investigate the question and have not got a chance to do it now. But there may be merit in this proposition. I would not say that in the end, if I had a chance to investigate it, I would be opposed to it, but I am not willing to consent that the amendment shall go in at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment and leave the matter open.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senate should put this amendment on I would give it very careful consideration. It may be meritorious, but I am not prepared now to pass upon it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

449. Cadmium.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, has the buckwheat and buckwheat flour item been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. That has been passed.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I would like to go back to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to go back to the buckwheat paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I can not consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

451. Cash registers, linotype and all typesetting machines, sewing machines, typewriters, shoe machinery, cream separators, and tar and oil spreading machines used in the construction and maintenance of roads and in improving them by the use of road preservatives, all the foregoing whether imported in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman from Alabama extend that time to 10 minutes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will make it 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time the following letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, April 16, 1913.

Hon. Mr. BORLAND, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand from the press that you recently introduced a motion in the Democratic caucus recommending that shoe machinery be placed on the free list in the tariff bill now under consideration, and, as a number of statements have since been published in the press which would tend to cause Congress to disregard this recommendation, which statements seem clearly to be inspired by parties in interest, we thought that a statement from the standpoint of an independent shoe machinery company might be of interest to you.

While it may be true, as stated, that the United Shoe Machinery Co. can build its machines abroad and import them duty free at less expense than by building them in this country, yet it is doubtful if they would find it feasible or practical to do so. But whether they do or not is a matter of no particular consequence, so far as the real merits of the question of free shoe machinery or shoe machinery with a 20 per cent or 25 per cent duty is concerned.

As we view the situation, the advantages in the removal of the duty from shoe machinery would be several in number.

We believe that the removal of the duty is most desirable and practically almost necessary, if it is desired that the hold of the United Co. be broken, for the following reasons:

Inasmuch as the tying clauses in the leases of the United Co. and the practice of placing substantially all of the royalty on the principal machines and of furnishing auxiliary machines only in connection with the principal machines, and then at a nominal rental, has made it necessary for a manufacturer of shoes either to secure his entire equipment from others than the United Co., or to secure it all from the United Co. It is practically necessary, under the present conditions, for the independent shoe-machinery manufacturer to furnish a complete line of the machines necessary to equip a factory, although he only wishes to put out, and only has capital to put out, a few machines which he deems superior to anything on the market. To manufacture all of these additional machines would require far more capital than what he has, and, as most of them are only made abroad—the manufacturers in this country having been nearly all "absorbed"—he can only get them by paying a duty which, we have found from experience, is practically prohibitive.

With free shoe machinery we would, in a number of instances, have been able to equip whole factories, and we have lost numerous customers who were users of the machines which we do manufacture and wished to continue to use them, simply because we could not supply all the machines which the customers wanted at a reasonable price, for to have done this would have required far more capital than what we had at our command, to say nothing of several years' time necessary to build the machines.

While free shoe machinery will have little or no effect on the hold which the United Co. has on the shoe manufacturers, so long as their leases are in force, yet, if the market is opened so that the independent manufacturers will have an opportunity to do business, by the success of the Government suits and the annulment of the leases, the removal of the tariff will be of great assistance to that end, in our opinion.

We hope that no one will be misled by statements as to the great "advantage" which the United Co. will secure through the removal of the tariff, or deceived by the "bugaboo" that they will shut down their fine plant at Beverly and manufacture their machines abroad, for they won't do it.

If you have any doubt as to whether the writer "knows whereof he speaks," he would beg to refer you to his Representative, Hon. A. P. GARDNER.

Thanking you for your interest in these matters, we remain,

Yours, very truly,

HAVERHILL SHOE MACHINERY CO.,
Per L. H. HARRIMAN, Treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 107, lines 24 and 25, and on page 108, beginning with line 1, down to and including line 5, by striking out the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, there is no paragraph in this bill, apparently, so much in the interest of trusts or large combinations of capital as is this paragraph providing free trade for various kinds of machinery. It is entirely possible under this paragraph for any large concern like the cash-register concern, for instance, which may have a factory in this country and a factory in some foreign country, to transfer all its business to the foreign country and still hold the market of the United States on a trust basis.

I do not care to enter into any discussion with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] with regard to his saw speech the other night, but I do happen to know that in the matter of sewing machines one large company in the United States has an establishment in Connecticut, where it pays an American rate of wage to its employees, and also has an establishment in Scotland, where it pays a British standard of wages to its employees; and it is on account of that difference in the wages paid in the United States and in Scotland that sewing machines can be sold abroad more cheaply than they can be sold at home.

We have had reports recently that the International Harvester Trust was proposing to do most of its business abroad. What is to prevent the Cash Register Co., the Linotype Co., and the type-setting machine companies, the manufacturers of typewriters, the shoe-machinery manufacturers, the manufacturers of sewing machines, and the cream-separater manufacturers from doing all their manufacturing in a foreign land, where they can get the benefit of cheap wages and cheap material, and continue the control of the American market just the same? We get nothing for the Government by way of revenue out of this business, and we lose our industries. We simply transfer the manufacture to Germany in the matter of harvesters, to England in the matter of linotype machines, to Scotland in the matter of sewing machines, to some other country in the matter of cash registers, and so on. This gives them an opportunity to make machinery with cheap labor instead of the well-paid labor of the United States, and it permits their cheap products to come across the border to our country, without any reservation whatever.

I read this bill as being in the interest of large combinations against independent operators, and with respect to this paragraph I am prepared to make the prediction that the small operator in any one of these lines referred to, the individual manufacturer making machinery, will positively be driven out of business by the passage of this particular paragraph. Who, unless he is a great capitalist, can stand as an independent against the International Harvester Co.? Who can stand as an independent against the National Cash Register Co. should they decide to transfer their business to the other side, where they can get labor so much cheaper? What small man in the iron business can stand against the Steel Corporation after all the facilities you have given it in the way of free iron ore and other raw material? Who can stand against any of these trusts? Who, with small capital, can do any business against a combination when you admit free to this country goods made by American capital under the direction of foreign or American trust magnates?

Mr. BARNHART. Is the gentleman informed concerning the enormously high prices of linotype machines and cash registers, for which this country is held up now?

Mr. MOORE. I do not know anything about the price of linotype machines.

Mr. BARNHART. Let me tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. I do know that those who operate linotype machines are special favorites of the Government and that they know the Democratic Party dare not undertake to tear down the privileges which they now receive. I know that those who operate linotype machines and who run the pressrooms of this country have in this bill everything they want, and no Democrat will raise his voice to afford protection to the independent operators who want to make machines, who want to do business, who want to manufacture paper, who want to manufacture wood pulp in competition with those who do it so much cheaper in foreign lands.

This thing may go through for a time, but when the American laborer comes to understand that his employment is taken away perhaps this bill will not be so successful as some of its advocates at this time seem to think. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on the amendment which he has offered.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

456. Charcoal, blood char, bone char, or bone black, not suitable for use as a pigment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 108, line 12, by striking out the words "not suitable for use as a pigment."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

460. Coal, anthracite, bituminous, culm, slack, and shale; coke; compositions used for fuel in which coal or coal dust is the component material of chief value, whether in briquets or other form.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay the committee at all in the progress of this bill, but in the interest of truth and fairness I want to place in the RECORD a letter relative to the statement made during this debate by my friend from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]. He was in his seat a moment ago, but I do not see him in the Chamber just now. I understood him to say that he had received no protest from any labor organization relative to the terms of this bill, and that he did not think anyone else had received any protest from organized labor, and that organized labor, in the main, was not in favor of protection. I desire to place in the RECORD at this time the protest from the International Brick, Tile, and Terra Cotta Workers' Alliance. This organization is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. This protest is signed by Frank Butterworth, president, and William Van Bodegraven, secretary-treasurer. It comes under the union label and has the seal of the organization on it.

The letter is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BRICK, TILE, AND TERRA COTTA WORKERS' ALLIANCE, Chicago, Ill., March 31, 1913.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our Trenton (N. J.) union of the tile makers have called our attention to a proposition to reduce the duty on floor and wall tile, which will be considered by the incoming Congress.

Should the present duty on floor and wall tile be reduced we very much doubt if anyone would benefit except importers or foreign manufacturers.

You are doubtless familiar with the comparative wage scales of the countries of Europe. Therefore we will not burden you with tiresome statistics.

We would, however, call your attention to this fact: That the American tile presser and the kiln placer receive $14.50 and $15, respectively, while the Belgium worker receives $3.92 and $4.90 for the same labor. We would further call your attention to the fact that the wage earners of Spain and Italy in this line of work receive much less than those of Belgium.

Should the present rate on tile be reduced our American manufacturers and tile workers could not hope to meet the competition of the underpaid worker of Spain and Italy, who we understand works long hours and at a wage that would render any attempt at competition by the native ware hopeless.

In the struggle to meet the changed conditions should the present protective tariff be lessened it will inevitably happen that the smaller and weaker tile plants must succumb and be forced to the wall and the American worker deprived of the opportunity of earning his living at the trade that he has made his life's calling.

The American manufacturer and workman in the tile industry have done much to beautify the structures of our country. Even in the comparatively short period of 30 years that they have been in existence they have outstripped European competitors in the excellence of their material and in artistic expression and execution. Our American manufacturers have done much to develop and improve the art of tile making, and even with the present protective tariff rate have not always received compensation in proportion to the results obtained.

Should the present rate be reduced the standard of the ware would of necessity become lower. In order to meet the changed conditions there would be a general reduction of wages, which are not even now sufficient in some instances to adequately maintain the American standard of living.

Trusting that you will give this, the protest of the tile workers, due consideration, we are,

Sincerely, yours,

FRANK BUTTERWORTH, President.
WM. VAN BODEGRAVEN, Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 108, paragraph 460, amend by striking out the paragraph.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, several gentlemen wish to be heard on this side, and coal is a very important item in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Well, I will say 15 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that he make it 25 minutes at least.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my request and make it 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee but two or three minutes. I shall not attempt to go into this question in detail now, because I covered the matter rather fully in my remarks in general debate. The coal industry is the greatest one in my district. Something has been said in this debate about looking to the interests of the country in general rather than to our own local interests. My opinion is that you can not injure any great industry in the country without on the whole injuring to some extent the whole country. So far as I am concerned, I shall endeavor to represent, so long as I am a Member of this body, what I believe to be the best interests of my own State and district. I have tried to do this ever since I have been here. If there is a Member of this body who is willing to sacrifice any industry in his district for the benefit of some other section of the country, I would like to see the color of his hair. [Laughter.] My experience here has been that if you do not look out for your own section no one else will do it for you. In my district there is one of the greatest coal fields in the world. It is my opinion that when you transfer coal from the dutiable list to the free list you necessarily injure that industry more or less.

I have heard gentlemen, and particularly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], boast that this bill will give the people of the country free coal. If there was anything to boast of in that connection, it must have been that it will reduce the price of coal to the consumer. You can not reduce the price to the consumer without affecting the capital and the labor invested and employed in producing coal.

I have listened attentively to most of the speeches delivered during this debate, and I have listened intently and earnestly, because I was extremely anxious to find out, if I could, by what process you gentlemen on the other side expect to reduce the cost of anything to the consumer and at the same time not affect adversely the interests of the producer. I would ask my distinguished friend from Illinois if he can explain it, but I fear he would answer me like he did the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], by asking me what I thought about it, or propound the ancient and perplexing interrogatory, "How old is Ann?"

Therefore I shall refrain from asking him or any of his colleagues how they propose to reduce to the consumer the price of coal and at the same time not affect the producer of coal. Numerous efforts on this side to get that information have been futile, and I do not wish to waste time. I shall content myself with protesting against free coal.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HELM. The district that the gentleman represents is 500 miles from any coast line, is it not?

Mr. LANGLEY. It is quite a distance. I do not recall the exact number of miles.

Mr. HELM. From what foreign country would coal be imported which would affect the price of the Kentucky coal, which has to pay a freight rate on 500 miles of railroad?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to my colleague that the gentleman from Massachusetts the other day admitted that with free coal there would be large importations of coal from Nova Scotia, and that would increase the supply and reduce the demand for domestic coal, and——

Mr. HELM. But Massachusetts is right along the coast line.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any further. The gentleman asks another question before he permits me to complete my answer to the question he has already propounded.

Mr. HELM. Kentucky has not any coast line at all.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is asking a useless question. I take it for granted that he knows where Kentucky is located and how it is bounded.

Mr. HELM. I want to inform the gentleman that it is 500 miles from any coast line.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know that is substantially correct. Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further, because I have not enough time left now to complete the statement I wanted to make. Coal coming from Nova Scotia will necessarily come in competition with the coal now shipped into New England and to the Atlantic coast market, particularly from West Virginia, and that will necessarily divert that coal to the markets to which we are sending our coal from the Big Sandy, the Licking, and the Kentucky River valleys. But, Mr. Chairman, the chief damage to the coal industry of the country will be not so much from foreign competition in the coal business itself as from the commercial depression throughout the country resulting from the general provisions of this bill, which embody an assault upon nearly all of the great industries of the country, and I predict——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this is the old fight over again that we have had here before, led by certain New England interests that want everything protected that they produce, but at the same time want free raw material and cheaper fuel. Certain Boston and New England interests got into our last Republican tariff bill as it left the House this same provision putting coal on the free list. Mr. Chairman, West Virginia and Maryland are largely supplying New England with its fuel supply by rail and water transportation. It is true that we import coal, and by placing coal on the free list we will deprive the Treasury of the United States of an annual tariff duty of $518,468, the value of the coal and coke imported being $3,027,723, and the total quantity in tons 1,367,068. By placing coal on the free list New England will import coal from Nova Scotia, and in that country the coal is from 15 to 20 feet in thickness. The operations are owned and controlled by Canadian and Boston capitalists, and you will prevent the West Virginia and Maryland operators from ever selling any more coal in the New England markets. With cheap water transportation the Nova Scotia operators will ship their coal down the south Atlantic coast, and with free coal will drive from the markets of the southern seacoast towns, cities, and near-by communities coal that is furnished from the coal fields of Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

When we have completed the Panama Canal the vessels now going to the Orient through the Suez Canal will cross the Atlantic Ocean and pass through the Panama Canal. When they reach this side of the Atlantic Ocean they will have to recoal.

This item in this bill makes it possible for the Nova Scotia people to ship by cheap water transportation the output of their mines and supply the European vessels going through the Panama Canal to the Orient with coal, so that this bill means injury to a great industry in the States of Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia. When the West Virginia operators lose the New England coal market, having invested thousands and thousands of dollars in plants, in railroads, in coal-mining towns, with an army of industrial workers, they must either retire from business or find a market elsewhere. They will find that market in our own country, in the interior, in competition with the coal mined in Tennessee and Kentucky. So that this proposed legislation does affect the interest of the district represented by my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY]. It affects the coal district represented by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP]. The L. & N., the Southern, the Three C's, and Rogers's Railroads have built their low-grade coal roads to the seaboard, anticipating the increased demand for coal in this country by the completion of the Panama Canal, but you are taking from the American coal operators and the American wage earners the opportunity of supplying that market and giving a favorable chance and opportunity for a foreign country, with foreign coals, with foreign miners, to come in and take from the Americans in whole or in part an American market. I protest against it in the name of fair play and justice to that great mining and mineral region in the Southern States, in Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, Tennessee, and Alabama. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, as a substitute for paragraph 460.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the paragraph the following:
"Coal, coke, anthracite, bituminous, culm, slack, shale, 45 cents per ton of 28 bushels, 80 pounds to the bushel."

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman a question. Is not that the existing law?

Mr. POWERS. Not exactly.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the difference?

Mr. POWERS. I have not the time to explain it at present, but it differs but slightly from the present law. I have offered this amendment with the anxious hope and fond expectation that this House will adopt it unanimously (?), and I am encouraged in that belief for two reasons. In the first place, I have noticed with what generosity (?) the Democratic majority here have been receiving meritorious amendments coming from the Republican side. I am confident, therefore, that my amendment will be received with the same open-handed generosity and hospitality, and will also meet with the same fate.

In the second place, I received a letter from a constituent of mine a few days ago calling my attention to the fact that the State of Kentucky stood seventh among the coal-bearing States of this Union in the matter of production.

Mr. LANGLEY. And it has just fairly gotten started now.

Mr. POWERS. Yes; it has just fairly gotten started now, as my colleague from Kentucky suggests; and of the coal-bearing sections of the State of Kentucky the eastern Kentucky coal field is by far the most important in area, quality, and quantity of coal. My constituent further reminded me that the eleventh congressional district, the one I have the honor to represent, is in the heart of that important coal field, and that it will injure our chief industry if coal is put on the free list. He further suggested that the eleventh district is the Gibraltar of Republicanism in the State, and that if I would just call these facts to the attention of the Democratic majority, especially to the fact that the eleventh district was the Gibraltar of Republicanism, he felt sure the Democratic majority would put coal back on the protected list without delay. I wrote to my constituent and stated that I would take pleasure in calling these things to the attention of the Democratic majority, and that I would see to it that coal went back on the protected list. Now, if you gentlemen fail to put coal back on the protected list you will cause me to violate my word to my constituent; he will be disappointed; my influence in the district will be impaired; and I know that you would not have a thing of that character happen for the world. [Laughter and applause.] But let me now speak seriously. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] seem to be very much alarmed about coal going on the free list. They both represent districts in which coal is the chief product, but neither the district represented by the gentleman from Tennessee nor the district represented by the gentleman from Kentucky is any richer in valuable coal deposits than the one I have the honor to represent.

The United States now produces annually more than 500,000,000 tons of coal. We produce more than any other country in the world. Great Britain is second with about 300,000,000 tons. We only export about 15,000,000 tons, and there is imported into this country less than 2,000,000 tons of coal annually. That is true under the existing law with coal on the protected list at 45 cents per ton. With coal on the free list there is no way to know just how much coal will be imported. As a matter of fact, coal will not be one cent cheaper to the consumer after it has been placed on the free list than it is now, and the only idea of the Democrats in putting coal on the free list is to fool the American people. The people who live along the Canadian border line and along the Pacific coast and along the Atlantic coast will be more seriously affected by putting coal on the free list than any other section of the country, because the Australian and British Columbia coals reach the Pacific coast, the Canadian coal crosses the border line, while coal from Great Britain and Nova Scotia reaches the Atlantic Coast States.

Coal has been discovered and is now produced in about 30 of the States of the Union. As everybody knows, the State of Pennsylvania stands first among the States in the production of coal—first in the production of both bituminous and anthracite. In fact, Pennsylvania produces nearly all the anthracite coal produced in the United States. She produced in 1910, 84,000,000 tons of anthracite valued at $160,000,000, while her bituminous coal production in that year amounted to 150,000,000 tons valued at $153,000,000. The other coal-producing States I will now give in the order of their coal production in 1910, together with the amount of tonnage and value of same:

States.	Tons.	Value.
West Virginia	61,671,019	$56,665,061
Illinois	49,900,246	52,405,897
Ohio	34,209,668	35,932,288
Indiana	18,389,815	20,813,659
Alabama	16,111,462	20,236,853
Kentucky	14,623,319	14,405,887
Colorado	11,973,736	17,026,934
Iowa	7,928,120	13,903,913

What I have here said shows that Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Alabama, Kentucky, and Colorado are the principal coal-producing States of the Union, and it is fortunate for them that nearly all, if not all, of them are what may be termed inland States, and therefore, in a way, by distance and freight rates, protected from some of the baneful effects of free coal.

But why should the Democrats seek to put coal on the free list? The reason is plain. They have pledged to the country that they would reduce the cost of living. The real problem of the Democrats lies in how they can reduce the cost of living and at the same time leave the business of the country undisturbed. This country is now enjoying unparalleled prosperity in all avocations and lines of industry. The only element of real discontent among the people is the high cost of living, and that is a very serious and disturbing element. How the Democrats can reduce the cost of living and yet maintain the high degree of prosperity now enjoyed by the people is the real problem confronting them. They know that they will not reduce the price of coal to the consumer by putting coal on the free list, but they are willing to jeopardize the coal industry of this country, and especially that part of it along the Canadian boundary line and along the Pacific and the upper Atlantic coasts. The whole Atlantic coast will be in the same position when the Panama Canal is opened and the coal from British Columbia, which now reaches the Pacific coast, reaches likewise the Atlantic Coast States.

The Democratic Party certainly ought at least to protect the most seriously exposed parts of our country by leaving coal on the protected list, but they are willing to sacrifice these for the purpose of being able to go before the country with the argument that they are giving the American people free coal and doing all they can to reduce the cost of living. If putting coal on the free list would really reduce the price of coal to the consumer there would be some justification in their argument, but it will not reduce the price of coal. The price of coal is fixed and determined not so much by tariff rates as by secret agreements of the big coal concerns of this country—the agreements of the middle men and others concerned all along the line. The producers of coal in the States of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Kentucky are getting only in the neighborhood of $1 per ton at the mine, while the consumer is forced to pay in the markets of the country some $3 to $4.75 per ton for the same coal, so the producers of coal are not so much to blame for its high price as the exorbitant freight rates paid and the big commissions exacted by the middle men. The average price of Kentucky coal at the mines for the last 10 years has been about $1 per ton. The Underwood bill does not reach the real reason for the high price of coal, and offers no real remedy for lowering the price of it, and all the hue and cry that the Democratic orators on the stump will make about putting coal on the free list will avail them nothing, because the consumer will know that the price he pays for his coal has not been reduced by the fact that coal has been put on the free list. I realize, of course, that the general disturbance of business which may result by reason of the passage of the Underwood tariff bill may bring down the price of coal and the price of everything else. That always results when the business conditions of the country are disturbed; and if the price of coal to the consumer is lowered at all it will be because of this disturbance and not by reason of the fact that coal has been put on the free list.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, coal is so important an article of use that if the placing of coal on the free list would make coal cheaper to any considerable number of people anywhere I think that all of us would be much inclined to favor that sort of proposition. But, Mr. Chairman, I take it that there is no one who will pretend to say that the placing of coal on the free list will ever make a ton of coal cheaper to the ordinary consumer. It may reduce it, not the amount of the present duty, 45 cents, but it may reduce temporarily 10 or 15 cents a ton coal purchased in the port of Boston by the large importers and consumers. It may reduce the price which Mr. Hill pays on coal to be burned on the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads by some 10 or 15 cents a ton, but no one claims, no one believes, that any ordinary consumer will ever get any reduction. I called attention to all this the other day, and to the fact that my State will suffer, because it will give our Canadian rivals an opportunity for a reduction of the price a few cents a ton and drive and keep us out of our northern markets.

But what I desire to particularly call to the attention of the committee in this connection at this time is this important fact, namely, that the Canadian duty on coal is the same as ours. We export annually to Canada about 12,000,000 tons of coal, and on that we pay a duty of 45 cents a ton. The wages of the miners in both Ohio and West Virginia mining that coal are fixed to a certain degree by the fact that the exporter of that coal must pay that 45 cents a ton duty. In the late reciprocity bill provision was made for a reciprocal arrangement with Canada whereby if we give her our markets for her coal free she would also give us hers. No such attempt is made in this bill. The miners of my State are to lose a large proportion of their employment, the mines a considerable portion of their output, and no attempt is made in surrendering these opportunities for labor to secure any corresponding benefits. We still continue to pay to the Canadians on the 12,000,000 tons of coal that we export 45 cents a ton. They will pay no duty on coal they send us, though every ton of increased importation deprives an American miner of an opportunity to mine coal.

It does seem to me that the majority, if they felt it incumbent upon them to attempt to fool the people—and that is all it amounts to, an attempt to fool the people into believing that they were going to get cheaper coal by placing coal on the free list—they could at least have attempted while doing that to secure a more profitable and favorable market for our miners and our exporters into Ontario and other parts of Canada from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. POWERS. They are perfectly willing to affect your industry for the purpose of going before the American people and saying they put your coal on the free list.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not like to say that a great party when it makes schedules deliberately plans to fool the people, but I understand this coal situation fairly well, and I know if the gentlemen who put coal on the free list do understand the situation—and they are not justified in doing it if they do not—if they do understand the situation, they know that there can be no possible reason for it, except the possible political advantage to be gained by the claim that they have made coal cheaper by putting it on the free list.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. If this 45 cents a ton will not increase the price of coal, why is it on there?

Mr. MONDELL. Just read my statement of the other day, and if you do not care to do that read what I have just said. Free coal will, in some parts of the Northwest and in New England, make coal cheaper by 10 or 15, possibly for a brief period 25, cents a ton cheaper to certain large railway companies and certain great manufacturing companies, but the small consumer will not get his coal cheaper, and eventually even the large purchasers will get their coal little, if any, cheaper, for if the foreigner can sell his coal cheaper than our mines without wiping out his profit that fact gives him the market without making much lower prices.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I think I represent a district that produces as much coal a year as any district in the Mississippi Valley. Our production is larger perhaps than that of almost any other district situated in that great coal-producing territory. The duty on coal, the gentleman says, does not affect the price. If coal is put on the free list, he says, there will not be a bushel sold cheaper to the consumer, and yet, he says, at the same time that if coal is put on the free list it will close up the industry in the United States.

Now, by what process of reasoning, if taking the duty off of coal will not cheapen it, does he arrive at the conclusion that it will close down the industry of the United States? I am unable to comprehend. He asserts the duty does not increase the price, but its removal, he charges, will destroy the business. It is true, in my judgment, that a duty on coal does not assist the coal miners of this country one particle, but I will tell you whom it does assist. It assists the great transportation companies of this country, and they are enabled, by a duty on coal, shutting out foreign importations, to charge a higher transportation cost than they would otherwise be able to charge in order to haul it to the extreme portions of the country. These great companies are the beneficiaries and reap the reward. And the duty on coal will not affect the coal miners adjacent to New England, but it will only enable the common carrier which transports the coal into New England and sell it to the consumers there to charge a higher transportation rate than it otherwise could charge. Now, that is what the tariff on coal accomplishes—nothing more and nothing less. In New England and the extreme Northwest the wages of the coal miners are not fixed so much by the supply and demand as by the labor unions. It is the best organized of any of the labor unions, and they regulate the wages instead of the protection that has been levied heretofore upon coal. They know fully this is the result, and their wages are by and through them maintained and not because of the tariff.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CULLOP. I can not at this time.

The only advantage and the sole purpose of duty on coal is to aid the transportation companies that haul it from the mines to the market in distant portions of the country.

That is all it does, and that is the sole purpose of putting the duty on coal. It is simply voting a larger bonus to the great transportation companies of this country which the ultimate consumers must bear, and that is why the Democratic Party proposes to strike it off, in order to give the ultimate consumer the advantage of the transportation charge instead of letting the great common carriers of the country have it, as is now the case. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Indiana think that if we put on the free list coal coming from Canada we ought to require, as a consideration for that, that our coal should go into Canada free of duty?

Mr. CULLOP. I am mighty glad the gentleman from Illinois has suggested that question. I take this position about that, that we had better give to Nova Scotia the opportunity to supply New England with coal—we would make money by it—and let us take the interior of Canada, where the thicker settlements are, and furnish them with the coal of Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. That would be an advantage for the American coal miner and coal operator if it were done. It would be far better for us and the people of both countries.

Mr. MANN. I know; but you do not do that by this bill.

Mr. CULLOP. We have not the right to legislate for Canada, and we do not propose to let them legislate for us; but, I take it, that after we have extended to them this provision they will extend the same privilege to us. It will be to their interest to do so. The levying of tariff duties is largely a retaliatory matter, and has ever been so. That is, in part, the bane of the whole procedure.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman favor, as an amendment to this bill, a provision putting coal on the free list coming from countries which admit our coal to their ports free?

Mr. CULLOP. The objection I would have to that, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, is that would not be arriving at the desired results or the benefits as quickly as we are by doing it this way. Canada will see the advantage of this, and will therefore extend the same benefits to their people. They will soon see the advantages of such a policy and adopt it.

Let no one be deceived about a duty on coal. It is of no benefit to either miner or operator, but only inures to the very great benefit of the railroad companies which carry the product from the mines to the ultimate consumers. It has been asserted here that great railroads have been built from the coal territories to the seaboard. This is true, but these were not built to haul coal into the country but to haul it out, so that our coal could be sent abroad. This was the purpose, and this purpose is being carried out. We are supplying our seaboards and shutting out foreign coal. We are also shipping it abroad. The cost of shipping coal, as a rule, for 250 miles is as much as the cost of mining it and loading it on the cars ready for shipment. The cost of transportation is the burden upon the industry and the consumers, and we hope to remedy this evil and relieve this great industry and the people from this burden, which to-day oppresses both. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] as a substitute.

The question was taken, and the Powers substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The question was taken, and the Langley substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address myself to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] to see if we can come to some agreement about reading this free-list section of the bill. Of course I do not wish to cut off from any gentleman the opportunity of offering any amendment that he desires to offer, but I wanted to suggest that gentlemen desiring to make amendments, if agreeable, would announce what amendments they want to offer now, then agree upon reasonable debate on the amendments, and then allow the Clerk to read the free list through and later come back to those amendments for consideration. I think we can make speed in that way and at the same time give every opportunity for the offering of amendments.

Mr. MANN. I believe there are 200 more items on the free list. Can we ascertain what paragraphs gentlemen wish to submit amendments on?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us have the paragraphs named.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to paragraph 227.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to offer one to paragraph 647.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to offer an amendment to paragraph 476 and one to paragraph 523.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wish to offer an amendment to paragraph 586 and paragraph 670.

Mr. MANN. Let us get these down, if we can.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will offer an amendment to paragraph 476 and an amendment to paragraph 523, covering cotton and iron ore.

Mr. GARDNER. I wish to offer one to paragraph 511 and one to paragraph 535.

Mr. PAYNE. I will wish to offer one to paragraph 653.

Mr. GUERNSEY. I wish to offer one to paragraphs 572 and 573.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to offer an amendment to paragraph 535.

Mr. SWITZER. I want to offer one to paragraph 653.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I desire to offer one to paragraph 514.

Mr. MANN. Five hundred and fourteen?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and two others, paragraphs 559 and 648.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Six hundred and forty-seven.

Mr. GOOD. Five hundred and forty-five.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Six hundred and eight, 609, 596, and 628.

Mr. GOOD. And 549.

Mr. MURDOCK. Five hundred and seventeen.

Mr. SLOAN. Four hundred and seventy-four.

Mr. MOORE. 471, 505, 535, 553, 557, 567, 572, 574, 575, 608, 659.

Mr. WILLIS. I think I shall want to offer an amendment to 653 and probably 549, if some one has not named that, as well as 552 and perhaps one or two others.

Mr. MANN. If the gentlemen will take notice, I have a memorandum of these paragraphs to which gentlemen have said they desire to offer amendments. Of course, they are not in their consecutive order: 523, 476, 586, 608, 511, 535, 572, 573, 653, 514, 559, 647, 648, 622, 609, 595, 528, 517, 549, 474, 491, 471, 505, 553, 557, 567, 572, 574, 575, 659, 653, 549, 552.

Some of these have been named by several different gentlemen.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I checked it, there were two gentlemen who indicated their desire to offer amendments to 523.

Mr. MANN. I did not in every case indicate how many gentlemen. I have some of them several times.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to offer an amendment to the lumber schedule.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we read the free list through and then have these numbers arranged in numerical order, with the privilege of gentlemen offering amendments to them as we return to them; and if some gentleman is now out of the Chamber who has a reason for offering an amendment to some other paragraph, that there be no objection to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it is a real amendment and not a motion to strike out.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly; an amendment to the proposition itself; that we read the free list through and then return to these paragraphs in their numerical order for the purpose of offering amendments, without at this time trying to limit the debate on the amendments, because on some of them there are several gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to offer an amendment to take lumber off the free list. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment. I do not know the number of the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is reserved, anyhow.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what rule is to be followed as to limiting the number of amendments upon any particular paragraph?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That will be in the hands of the committee.

Mr. MANN. That will be disposed of when we reach the point.

Mr. SHARP. Although I made no request, I expect to offer an amendment to one of these paragraphs.

Mr. MANN. Is it one of those named?

Mr. SHARP. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is only one gentleman proposing an amendment to a paragraph, I shall probably move to close debate. If there are several, I intend that they shall have an opportunity.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of this agreement is to give a little more time on the controverted paragraphs and dispose of those items about which there is no controversy, so as to avoid excessive debate on those, and lessen the time on the controverted propositions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the free list through; or I suppose——

Mr. MANN. You had better have it read through.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That the Clerk read it through; and then, after the free list is completed, that the following paragraphs shall then be read in their order—not as I give them, but in their order in the bill—for amendment.

Mr. MANN. We both have the list.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The list has been read by the gentleman from Illinois. That they then be considered in the order in which they come in the bill.

Mr. MANN. For amendment and debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that committee amendments may be offered on any paragraph while it is being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the remainder of the free list may be read through for committee amendments, and that after being so read through the committee shall return to the consideration of the several paragraphs which have been read, a list of which will be furnished at the desk for amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Clerk had better read the numbers of the paragraphs to which amendments may be offered.

The Clerk read the following list:

471, 474, 476, 491, 505, 511, 514, 517, 523, 532, 535, 545, 549, 552, 553, 557, 559, 567, 572, 573, 574, 575, 586, 595, 607, 608, 609, 622, 628, 647, 648, 650, 653, 657, 659.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the remainder of the free list for committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

470. Copper ore; regulus of, and black or coarse copper, and copper cement; old copper, fit only for remanufacture, clippings from new copper, and copper in plates, bars, ingots, or pigs, not manufactured or specially provided for in this section.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 109, line 12, after the word "remanufacture," at the end of the line, insert the words "copper scale."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

555. Miners' rescue appliances, designed for emergency use in mines where artificial breathing is necessary in the presence of poisonous gases, to aid in the saving of human life, and miners' safety lamps.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 116, line 12, after the word "lamps," strike out the period and insert "parts, accessories, and appliances for cleaning, repairing, and operating all the foregoing."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

558. Myrobolans.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 116, line 12, after the word "Myrobolans," strike out the period and insert ", fruit."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 117, line 16, by inserting after the word "coconut" the word "cod."

Mr. GARDNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the word "cod" would be qualified by the phrase a few lines below "that it must be rendered unfit for use as food"?

Mr. PALMER. No; I think that refers to olive oil.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

571. Ores of gold, silver, or nickel, and nickel matte; sweepings of gold and silver.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 118, after line 8, insert the words "ores of the platinum metals."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

573. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22, page 118, strike out the period after the word "pound" and insert a semicolon, and add the words "decalcomania paper not printed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

600. Seeds: Cardamom, cauliflower, celery, coriander, cotton, cummin, fennel, fenugreek, hemp, hoarhound, mangelwurzel, mustard, rape, St. John's bread or bean, sorghum, sugar beet and sugar cane for seed; bulbs and bulbous roots not edible and not otherwise provided for in this section; all flower and grass seeds; evergreen seedlings; all the foregoing not specially provided for in this section.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, line 6, after the word "evergreen" insert the word "coniferous."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

617. Stone and sand: Burrstone in blocks, rough or unmanufactured; rotten stone, tripoli, and sand, crude or manufactured; cliff stone, freestone, granite, sandstone, and limestone, unmanufactured; all of the foregoing not specially provided for in this section.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 124, line 9, after the word "unmanufactured," strike out the semicolon and insert: ", and not suitable for use as monumental or building stone.".

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

640. Types, old, and fit only to be remanufactured.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 126, line 15, strike out the paragraph and insert the words: "Type, stereotype metal, electrotype metal, linotype composition, all of the foregoing, old, and fit only to be remanufactured."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

650. Wood: Logs, timber, round, unmanufactured, hewn or sawed, sided or squared; pulp woods, kindling wood, firewood, hop poles, fence posts, handle bolts, shingle bolts, gun blocks for gunstocks, rough hewn or sawed, or planed on one side; hubs for wheels, posts, heading bolts, stave bolts, last blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, heading blocks, and all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn, sawed, or bored; sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, not further manufactured than sawed, planed, and tongued and grooved; clapboards, laths, pickets, palings, staves, shingles, ship timber, ship planking, broom handles, and wood flour; all the foregoing not specially provided for in this section.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 128, line 14, after the words "broom handles," insert the word "sawdust."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

652. Mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, unbleached or bleached: Provided, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose an export duty or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly (whether in the form of additional charge, or license fee, or otherwise), upon printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp the amount of such export duty or other export charge shall be imposed as a duty upon chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government; and if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall prohibit the exportation of printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp there shall be imposed a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound upon such chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 128, line 26, strike out all of paragraph 652 and insert:

"652. Mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, unbleached or bleached: Provided, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose an export duty or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise), upon printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, the amount of such export duty or other export charge upon an equal amount of mechanically ground wood pulp, or chemical wood pulp, or upon an amount of wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such chemical wood pulp, or upon an amount of printing paper ordinarily manufactured from such wood pulp, shall be imposed as a duty upon chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government; and if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall prohibit the exportation of printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp there shall be imposed a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound upon chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say that I was not listening to the committee amendment as it was read from the desk. It is to paragraph 652?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask what change is proposed in it from the bill?

Mr. PALMER. The purpose of the amendment is to make it conform to the paragraph in the paper schedule, which was amended by the committee by adding the words "upon the amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this was one of the paragraphs that was reserved for discussion. I do not care whether I discuss it for a moment now or later.

Mr. PALMER. There is no controversy about the amendment, is there?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the amendment is, but there is no controversy about it anyway. All I want to know is whether the amendment changed the rate of duty on chemical pulp?

Mr. PALMER. No.

Mr. MANN. Or whether it changed the retaliatory duty in reference to being confined wholly to chemical pulp?

Mr. PALMER. It does not change any rate of duty. It affects the retaliatory duty in this, that the retaliatory duty provides it shall be equal to the amount of such export duty imposed by such country, and so forth, upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp. There is no way to translate into the value of the paper the export duty upon the wood pulp or the wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, so that we now provide for that method by making it equal in amount to the export duty charged by the country upon the paper and by such an amount of the wood pulp or wood as is necessary to manufacture such paper.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is no retaliatory——

Mr. PALMER. It does not affect the rate at all.

Mr. MANN. There is no retaliatory duty in this paragraph levied upon paper at all.

Mr. PALMER. No; not in the free paragraph.

Mr. MANN. It is only levied upon chemical pulp. I do not know how you will translate it in any event except by a decision or regulation of the Treasury Department which may be affirmed by the court that it requires so much pulp for the manufacture of so much paper.

Mr. PALMER. We are writing that into the law that it shall be such an amount as equals the duty upon wood pulp, or upon such amount of wood pulp as goes into the manufacture of paper instead of now simply upon the wood pulp, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the export duty is upon the pulp itself?

Mr. PALMER. We do not change that.

Mr. MANN. You levy a retaliatory duty here upon sulphite paper if it happens to be print paper. It takes about 80 per cent of mechanical pulp and about 20 per cent of sulphite pulp to make print paper.

Mr. PALMER. We make the duty equal to the duty upon such amount of the pulp as would go into that paper. I have no doubt that is the way they would have to interpret it, but to make that clear we write those words in.

Mr. MANN. That very much reduces the retaliatory duty.

Mr. PALMER. I would not think so—not very much.

Mr. MANN. I had supposed from this paragraph that if Canada, for instance, levied an export duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound upon paper that would be added to the duty on sulphite pulp. You put a duty upon sulphite pulp—chemical pulp—coming here, but only 20 per cent of sulphite pulp is used in the manufacture of paper. I understand from the gentleman now that if Canada should levy an export duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound the retaliatory duty would be one-fifth of one-tenth of a cent a pound on sulphite pulp.

Mr. PALMER. Well, if the gentleman's premises are correct, his conclusion is right.

Mr. MANN. My premises are right as to quantities.

Mr. PALMER. I do not doubt it; I do not know about the proportion.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is the proportion—from 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. PALMER. This proposes that the duty shall be levied upon the amount of wood pulp that goes into the manufacture of the paper, such an amount as will be necessary for the manufacture of such paper.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that would not make any duty at all upon soda pulp, practically speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

660. Zaffer.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the committee made by unanimous consent a few moments ago the committee will now return to the consideration of 37 paragraphs which were reserved, the first paragraph being No. 471. Has any gentleman an amendment to offer to this paragraph?

Mr. MOORE. I have, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out paragraph 471, which reads "copperas or sulphate of iron."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that all debate on this——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, just a sentence. This is offered in the interest of an American industry, the continuance of which is threatened by this bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other amendment to 471? The next paragraph is 474.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, paragraph 474, page 109, by striking out the paragraph which reads as follows: "Corn or maize."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether anybody else wants to be heard about the free corn proposition or not. There was some discussion about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I took it for granted that when I made the request they would get up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the committee's attention to the figures which they furnished the House. The value of the corn imported in 1896 was $2,974; in 1903, $10,698; in 1910, $72,357. I find by consulting another authority that in 1911 it was $38,785, and in 1912 it was $47,858. It was a constant increase—and especially a great increase in 1910—and a growing revenue producer. I want to call your attention to the fact that of all the great cereals, wheat, oats, corn, barley, and rye, that rye is the only one that is placed upon the free list with corn or maize. I want to call your attention to this further fact, that in each case of wheat, oats, and barley there is forecasted a decrease of importation and a decrease of revenue. I want to state that if this bill, as a great many think and it is probably true, goes into effect and lasts but two years, it is not very important. But if this legislation is to last longer than that time, corn is entitled to the same consideration as that of the other important cereals. It is not a question alone of what our importations have been, but what our potential importations may be. There was a time when the United States furnished nearly all of the corn for the world. Our principal competitor in the matter of corn production and export is the Argentine Republic, and its exports now amount to four and three-quarters times the amount of the United States exports. While our exports amount to only about 40,000,000 bushels, their exports amount to 190,000,000. This indicates a fact patent to all of us, that the time has come when the exports and imports will be practicaly the same, and if any of the grains are entitled to protection, as wheat and oats and barley are, corn should be placed in the same category. I was going to mention peanuts, but I understand that is entirely a shell game, as worked in this bill.

I want to call your attention to this fact, that down in the State of Alabama a boy by the name of Junius Hill has been endeavoring to do what he can to see what can be done in the production of corn. That little boy, something over a year ago, produced 212 bushels of corn on 1 acre of Alabama soil. I do not know what the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] or the chairman of this committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD] think about Alabama boys, but I know if that boy was in our State, and I think it would be true of nearly every other State in the Union, and any favors were to be granted we would grant them to the boy in America who was producing corn. And in the struggle for the markets of the East, where they use great amounts of this domestic-produced corn, it seems to me that the long end of the lever should be given to the Alabama boy or the American producer whether he is a boy or man.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is it not a fact that the reason for admitting rye and corn free is to encourage the industry of distilling whisky and furnishing raw material cheap to the distiller?

Mr. SLOAN. I would not pass on that proposition. I am not familiar with that article, but I fancy if I were I would be inclined to rate that corn of that little Alabama boy as 15 per cent better than the corn that was raised by the Pedros and Josés down on the plains of the Argentine, and I would give him that much advantage over everybody else who did not live under the American flag and who did not pay taxes to support our local and State governments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 474? If not, the Clerk will read paragraph 476.

The Clerk read as follows:

476. Cotton, and cotton waste or flocks.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert after the word "cotton" the words "$5 per bale."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 109, line 22, after the word "cotton," at the beginning of the line, insert the words, "$5 per bale."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, on page 337 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee the value of the imported raw cotton or unmanufactured cotton was $20,217,292, which was admitted to this country free last year. We are raising 60 per cent of the entire world's output of cotton and are exporting of this amount about one-third, and at the same time, under this provision of existing law, admitting cotton free, we are receiving in imports in competition with the American cotton, raw cotton, in our own country, cotton of the value of $20,000,000 per year. Now, in the discussion of the cotton schedule on May 2 I had a controversy with some of the gentlemen on the other side in reference to the importation or exportation of American and Japanese cotton goods. In this connection I wish to submit the following letter, with certain tables from the Department of Commerce:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, May 3, 1913.

Hon. R. W. AUSTIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your telephonic request of to-day, I am sending you herewith tables showing the exports of manufactures of cotton from the United States to China in the fiscal years 1906 and 1912; the imports of cotton goods into the United States from Japan in the fiscal years 1911 and 1912; and the total exports of cotton goods from Japan to China in the calendar year 1912.

Very truly, yours,

O. P. AUSTIN,
Assistant Chief of Bureau, Division of Statistics.

Exports of domestic manufactures of cotton from the United States to China, fiscal years 1906 and 1912.

Mr. DONOVAN was recognized.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] a question?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not true that on May 2 you asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] if my statement was true, namely, that in 1906 we exported in cotton goods to China $29,000,000 and six years thereafter, 1912, $7,000,000, or a falling off of $22,000,000, and that Mr. PALMER denied that that was true and said that, on the contrary, our exportations to China were increasing?

Mr. DONOVAN. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I will print in the RECORD a statement from the Department of Commerce verifying my figures and statements on that question.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is looking for information on cotton. Can the gentleman state the transportation rates from Galveston to Liverpool for cotton?

Mr. KITCHIN. If you want me to answer, I can not.

Mr. DONOVAN. Can the gentleman state the number of yards of cotton print that are made out of a pound of cotton or a bale of cotton?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not.

Mr. DONOVAN. How could the gentleman, as a member of this committee, find intelligently the difference in expense between the cloth on the other side and on this side, not knowing how much it cost the manufacturer on the other side to take his raw cotton from this country over there or to return the manufactured goods here? How do the committee intelligently find the difference, in order to fix the tariff upon cotton fabrics? That is the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, I think he has wandered away from this side of the House. That side of the House attempt to fix their tariff rate on the difference in cost at home and abroad. Those figures are very necessary for the Republican side of the House. This side of the House levies a revenue tariff.

Mr. DONOVAN. I thought the gentleman was going to answer a question or ask one. I did not suppose he was going to take up my time as these amateurs here have done. [Laughter.] I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that when the whole force of his tongue is turned on it becomes shockingly mixed with fiction. He, as chairman of the committee, ought to be able to say, or some member of the committee ought to be able to say, why they fix the rate upon cotton, because unless they know the cost of transporting the cotton from this to the other side, manufacturing it there, and returning it here there must be something wrong when, according to the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], they can send $65,000,000 of their product here. Now you have reduced that to 25 per cent. If under the present conditions we can import $65,000,000 and you reduce the duty practically 50 per cent, it necessarily means that the importation will be at least double under your bill. Surely these things ought to be explained intelligently. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I find that this great expert at repartee is one of the cleverest Members that ever came over the pike; but when you undertake to pin him down and ask him an abstract question he turns the answer over to some other Member. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut asked for information of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee how much it cost in the way of freight to ship cotton from this country to England. Then he asked how much cotton print could be made from 100 pounds of cotton—two intelligent questions. Having asked two intelligent questions the gentleman from Alabama very naturally said that the gentleman belonged on the other side of the House. [Laughter.]

It is true that these questions were not answered except to say, "Why, we are legislating in the interest of the great mass of the American people." No matter what questions may be asked in this debate in order to get information for an intelligent understanding of the question, the only answer that is given is, "We are not legislating in the interest of the manufacturers, we are legislating in the interest of the great mass of the American people." If you would read the number of times that that expression has been used in this debate, it would cover page after page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and if you will read the number of times that intelligent questions have been asked and answered you can put it in three lines.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer the two questions? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I will not. I do not know. But if I were writing a tariff bill I would know. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Connecticut, who represents a cotton manufacturing district, can he answer his own questions?

Mr. DONOVAN. I am here as a pupil and not a teacher. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gives an intelligent answer concerning the question, but will the gentleman vote for a proposition to create a tariff commission which will report accurately this information to this legislative body so that it can have it when it comes to legislate? He will not. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Did I understand that question to be directed to me?

Mr. MANN. It was.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman repeat it? I lost the first part of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman evidently has lost a part of the intelligence that he has displayed heretofore.

Mr. DONOVAN. It is true that I have lost part of it, but I will have to go elsewhere to get the information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments to paragraph 457, the Clerk will read the next paragraph, which is paragraph 491.

The Clerk read as follows:

491. Fresh-water fish, and all other fish not otherwise specially provided for in this section.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out all of paragraph 491.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strike the fresh-water fish and other fishes from the free list. Fishing is one of the great industries of Alaska; perhaps it is the greatest. It is also one of the great industries of the Pacific Northwest. I am not going to argue the question of oriental labor. I have discovered that it is entirely useless to appeal to the Democratic side of this House to protect the people on the Pacific coast from competition with oriental labor. I will only say this much, that in the State of Washington and in Alaska no alien is permitted to fish and no alien is permitted to be in a fishing crew. All of our fishing is done by American citizens. The fisheries of British Columbia are vast, and they are rapidly developing. The Government is erecting at Prince Rupert a great cold-storage plant, where the catch can be stored until it is ready to be shipped. The Government also pays a bounty to the fishermen; but greater than all that, the British Columbia Government, or the Canadian Government, pays one-third of the cost of transportation of sending the fish into the markets of this country The great fish markets of this country are along the northern border—Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York, Boston—and they are all reached as directly from British Columbia as they are from the fisheries of Alaska or the State of Washington. So that they have every advantage in getting into our markets with their fish. We receive nothing whatever in return, and I again want to call attention to the fact that this bill gives free markets for the industries and products of British Columbia, while they levy a heavy duty on our products. And that is the way the Democratic Party proposes that we shall go out and get the markets of the world—by making our markets free for the products of other countries and permitting other countries to maintain a duty on our products.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, did not the Democratic Party do its best, in conjunction with a section of the gentleman's party, to get a reciprocal agreement for free fish?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. When?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Last year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That was in the Canadian reciprocity pact?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. You kept fish just as it is now. You proposed to make fish free, but you made no arrangement that ours should go in there free.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Having tried to do so, but failed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It was not provided in the bill. The gentleman refers to the reciprocity measure?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is mistaken. The reciprocity measure did not make provision for letting our fish free into British Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Fresh fish was on the reciprocal list.

Mr. GARDNER. Has not the gentleman from New York overlooked the fact that the bounty provision was not repealed—the bounty that Canada pays to her fishermen and the transportation which she pays for her fishermen? That was not affected in the reciprocity treaty.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from New York; if I am wrong, I got my information from the department. At any rate, the tariff still remained and this bounty still remained. The gentleman will remember I was against the reciprocity bill——

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I do remember perfectly well the gentleman's attitude. I merely want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Democratic Party made an honest effort to get into their markets by the Canadian reciprocity act, and having failed we are trying to relieve our own consumers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other amendment to paragraph 491? If not, the next paragraph is paragraph 505.

The Clerk read as follows:

505. Guano, manures, and all substances used only for manure, including basic slag, ground or unground, and calcium cyanamid or lime nitrogen.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 112, line 17, after the word "manures," insert in parentheses "(excepting puer)."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Is not the gentleman aware that the article to which the amendment refers is not used for manure, but used for tanning leather?

Mr. MOORE. That is the point, and I am very glad the gentleman is familiar with the article. [Laughter.] This commodity is found in various parts of the United States, in fact all over the civilized world, and at least 5,000 people have been employed in preparing it for the market. In certain foreign countries it can be produced cheaply, and gathered and assembled, as it were, with much more ease and at much less expense than it can be in the United States. In Constantinople in particular and throughout Turkey it is a prolific commodity, and the reason for asking that it be excepted from the free list is that it is entirely possible to collect and transport this article, pay the freight all the way across the deep blue sea, land it at the wharves of the large ports of New York and Philadelphia for 85 cents a bushel, whereas the labor cost of producing it in the United States is $1.25 per bushel.

Mr. MANN. Is it an edible product?

Mr. MOORE. It is not edible nor is it valuable as a fertilizer. Its collection is valuable from a sanitary point of view. It is a commodity, however, essential to the tanning trade. There is nothing to take its place. Its collection from the highways and byways by the scavengers engaged in the business is really a benefit to the community. Horticulturists ought to approve of it because it is of no benefit to the green grass growing about the squares. Now, I have said there are, or were, at least 5,000 people whose employment in one form or another is dependent upon this article. It is assembled and sold for tanning purposes, and in the treatment of morocco is said to have no superior.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think these people would be very glad to get a job of collecting this material after this bill is passed and there is not any other work to do even if it remains on the free list?

Mr. MOORE. I think the gentleman is entirely right. The collection of this commodity in this country is not special to any locality; there is no special interest here to be served, and the people who do this work are poor people. People from Virginia have sent in petitions asking for the protection of this article, as well as those from New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. They ask a specific duty upon this commodity, because it can be picked up in Constantinople and laid upon the wharves in New York, which the gentleman [Mr. HARRISON] so handsomely represents, at 85 cents a bushel. This is unfair, when it can not be produced here for less $1.25 a bushel. There ought to be a tariff duty of at least 50 cents per bushel imposed upon the article.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman tell us whether this is a Philadelphi.. industry which he is protecting?

Mr. MOORE. I have just said that it is as plentiful in New York as in some of the other cities, and that warehouses are in New York and in Virginia and some parts of New Jersey. My purpose in offering this amendment at this time is to have this article excepted from the free list in order that the article, without specific duty, may be dropped into the basket clause for such advantage of the rates as it may there obtain.

Mr. LOGUE. Does my colleague consider that a single manufacturing industry in Pennsylvania will be closed if this is put on the free list?

Mr. MOORE. My colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE], who has just put this pointed interrogation, knows full well that the lowly people who are engaged in this business are performing a distinct service to the public, and they are forced to compete, even in their lowly state, with the downtrodden people in Constantinople and throughout Turkey almost to an extent which is most dispiriting.

Mr. LOGUE. In reply to my colleague from Pennsylvania I would say that those who come over here from the places that he has mentioned never come here in anticipation of performing merely this kind of American industry. They have a little ambition for something higher.

Mr. MOORE. Of course they have. The gentleman certainly will not oppose this amendment, knowing what he does about the trade?

Mr. LOGUE. I do not think it will interfere with the production of a single pound. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 505? If not, the next paragraph is 511, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

511. Hides of cattle, raw or uncured, or dry salted or pickled.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a little more time desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Was there any reservation made as to paragraph 535?

The CHAIRMAN. There was.

Mr. MOORE. I thank you.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in eight minutes, five minutes to be given to the gentleman from Massachusetts and three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. GARDNER. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama what rate is charged in this bill on horsehides?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will look into it and answer the gentleman when he gets through with his argument.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, in the meantime, while the gentleman is looking that matter up, I shall just say a few words in connection with a letter presented to-day by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], a letter which mentioned my name. It was written by the secretary of the Haverhill Shoe Machinery Co. in connection with the question of putting the product of the United Shoe Machinery Co. on the free list. Mr. L. H. Harriman is the author of the letter. He closes with this sentence:

If you have any doubt as to whether the writer knows whereof he speaks, he would beg to refer you to his Representative, Hon. A. P. GARDNER.

Now, I might as well say once and for all that the Haverhill Shoe Machinery Co. and the United Shoe Machinery Co. are both of them established within the limits of my district. The plant of the United Shoe Machinery Co is situated in Beverly. Beverly is in my district and Haverhill is in my district. Mr. Harriman is a patent lawyer and an exceedingly able one. He makes the statement that he believes that we ought to admit shoe machinery free of duty. I do not think so. He believes that there is no danger of shoe machinery being made abroad and imported. I disagree with him there. He implies that the "tied lease" system of the United Shoe Machinery Co. is not proper as a method of doing business. In that I certainly agree with Mr. Harriman. In fact, I have said so before the Committee on the Judiciary. However, I do not think that it is the "tied lease" system or yet the high protective duty which gives the United Shoe Machinery Co. the strong position which it occupies. I rather think that its remarkable organization for rapid repairing has much to do with the company's success.

Let me say in passisg that, although I personally do not believe in the "tied-lease" system, and I think it improper, yet, so far as I know, a majority of the shoemakers in my district—that is to say, a majority of the shoemakers who use the United Shoe Machinery Co.'s machinery entirely—have ranged themselves on the company's side. Most shoe manufacturers with little capital favor a system of leased machinery, as it tends to equalize conditions between them and their richer rivals.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those of us who do not understand the terms of the trade, will the gentleman from Massachusetts define what he calls the "tied leases"?

Mr. GARDNER. The "tied leases" are leases by which shoemaking machines on which the patents have expired are "tied" to machines upon which the patents have not expired. Under the "tied-lease" system it is exceedingly difficult for a shoe manufacturer to hire the best modern machines except in connection with old machines, like the Goodyear machines, on which the patent has expired. For the most part the United States Machinery Co. controls the best modern machinery connected with the "bottoming" of the shoe. The series of processes by which the bottom of the shoe is attached to the upper are called "bottoming." If I am correctly informed, when a shoe manufacturer desires to hire "bottoming" machinery, he finds that each of the various recent inventions is tied in what is known as a "series." As a general rule, each series must be leased as a whole, and in that way dead patents are revitalized, or so it looks to the ordinary layman.

My impression is that the United States Machinery Co. does not at all control the machinery situation with respect to "turned" shoes. "Turned" shoes are shoes with flexible soles, which are manufactured inside out.

I am not at all up to date on this question, but, on the whole, I think that my statement conveys a correct impression, even though my details may be all wrong.

Of course there is great difference of opinion on the merits and faults of the "tied-lease" system.

Now, is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] ready to answer the question I propounded to him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] that the hides of horses are provided for in paragraph 609 of this bill, which provides for the admission, free of duty, of skins of all kinds and hides not specially provided for.

Mr. GARDNER. They come in free?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I wanted the statement of the gentleman that the intention is to admit them free.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is. There is a similar provision in the Payne law.

Mr. GARDNER. This bill does admit them free?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it admits them free.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in rising at this time on this schedule is to commend the committee on the fact that they have continued to place hides on the free list.

During the debate here on several occasions the fact has been mentioned that when hides were put on the free list the price of shoes and leather did not come down, as was anticipated, and I take this occasion to say, and to say to the Members of this House, that the reason why there was no reduction was the fact that our packing interests, who receive about 85 per cent of the hides of this country as soon as they are taken off, not only had cornered the market in this country, but the market of the entire world, and the moment the tariff was taken off the price of hides was just as high on the other side of the water as it was here.

The shoe manufacturer and the leather manufacturer were absolutely helpless, because they were getting their raw material—and hides are the raw material of the leather manufacturer—from an absolute trust.

And I want to say in passing that hides are one of the best things on the face of the earth to speculate in, because the high price of hides does not stimulate the production. No matter what the price of hides are, you will have no more of them because the price is high. The packing interests and the men engaged in the tanning business have a line on the production of hides of all classes of animals throughout the entire world, and they know within a small percentage just how many calfskins and how many cattle hides and all other hides and skins are taken off each year; they know where they are tanned and the uses to which they are put, and control the market price.

I say this simply by way of explanation, that whenever you remove the duty from a commodity that is controlled by a trust on both sides of the water, or a world-wide trust, the only thing you gain by putting the article on the free list is that you give the duty, which otherwise would be paid into the Treasury of the United States, right over to the interests that control the commodity. It did not help us one whit to put hides on the free list.

I do not wish now to speak of the shoe question, although I want to define my position on it later. I simply wanted to call your attention to these facts, so that you will understand why leather goods and shoes did not come down when hides were put on the free list four years ago.

Mr. KAHN. Then it was your experience that the fact that a commodity in which you were interested, namely, hides, had the duty removed had absolutely nothing to do with the price, and that there was a combination in the commodity even after the duty was removed?

Mr. KREIDER. Absolutely; the trusts controlled the commodity on both sides of the water. Thus a world-wide combination exists to-day on a number of articles put on the free list by this bill, and the removal of the duty will not reduce the price of any commodity in which there is a world-wide trust, but is a direct benefit to the trust controlling the commodity.

Mr. KAHN. And the tariff has nothing to do with it?

Mr. KREIDER. Nothing at all, so far as the lowering of the price is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. Are there any other amendments to this paragraph? If not, the next paragraph is 514.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 113, by striking out paragraph 514.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask that the Clerk read paragraph 514.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read paragraph 514.

The Clerk read as follows:

514. Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment prevails, I will follow it with another amendment transferring the articles covered by it to paragraph 109 of the metal schedule, which provides that hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel not otherwise provided for in this section shall bear a duty of 12 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] a short time ago seemed to be somewhat puzzled or bewildered as he examined some of the provisions of this bill; but when he comes to examine a provision like this paragraph under consideration it seems to me that the gentleman will be utterly paralyzed.

This particular paragraph provides that band iron used for baling cotton shall be admitted free. The provision in the metal schedule to which I referred provides that other band iron shall bear a duty of 12 per cent.

It is true that in this particular paragraph to which I have just referred there is a provision that band iron used "for baling cotton or any other commodity" shall be free; but I know of no other commodity for which it is so used, so that it practically means that a special privilege is granted to the southern planter, in order that he may bale his cotton with cotton ties that are admitted free of duty, although we have heard so much talk here against special privileges being granted.

Why, Mr. Chairman, save and except that lamentable time when our Democratic friends were in control before, when they passed the Wilson bill, nobody ever thought of inserting in a tariff bill any such a provision as this. But now we have in this bill not only this provision, providing that band iron used for baling cotton shall be free, but we have also in paragraph 417 a provision that bagging suitable for covering cotton shall be admitted free, whereas other bagging, that may be a little finer woven, but which is used for covering wheat or covering wool, shall bear a duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. This section which the gentleman is discussing does not limit this to band iron used for baling cotton. It says, "cotton or any other commodity."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was not listening. I just stated that.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman stated that it was a special privilege granted to the cotton raisers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I read the words which the gentleman has quoted, but after I had read them I said that cotton was the only commodity that was so covered, and therefore that it applied strictly and solely to cotton.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to my esteemed friend, the gentleman from Tennessee—and I regret very much that I can not yield to him now—that he has stated here that this is not in his judgment a sectional bill, and he has given as his reason for that statement that certain products of the South, of which he enumerated a long list, have been placed on the free list, or the duty very much lowered thereon; but he seems to have failed to notice that so far as those particular products are concerned they are also the products of the North, and that those provisions apply alike to products of the North and of the South.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to tell the gentleman that the last time our friends on the other side enacted a tariff bill cotton went down to 4 cents a pound, and this provision is to try to compensate them for the lowering of the price of their product.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think that has any application whatever to that situation.

Mr. BARTLETT. When was that?

Mr. AUSTIN. Under the Wilson bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is not true, though.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] did succeed in getting an answer from the gentleman from Alabama. He commented on it as not being satisfactory, and I do not care to repeat his comments; but I will ask if anyone here can answer why such a provision as this is made, and under what theory, reason, or principle any such provisions are put in this bill? And after some one has answered that I should like to inquire of my Democratic friends why, before the election, when they were considering this question of jute bagging, they then provided that it should be free, not only when used to cover cotton but when used to cover any agricultural product? For that was the provision in their so-called "farmers' free-list" bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. They do not use jute bagging for anything else except cotton. They use burlap for other things, not jute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Do I understand the Chair to say that all time has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am sorry for that, for I want to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any amendment to paragraph 523?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph 523, which is as follows:

523. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, and the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendment be limited to five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the discussion on pig iron a few days ago, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] made this statement:

In conversation with Mr. Schwab last night he made a statement that the worst enemy to the profits of the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the United States was their Representative in Congress, Mr. PALMER.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Following, Mr. LLOYD said that—

Mr. Schwab said that he himself had put into the business $35,000,000 in seven years and that he had made 20 per cent on his investment during that time.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the man who led the unsuccessful fight for free iron ore when the Payne-Aldrich bill was up for tariff consideration was Mr. Schwab. This provision of the Underwood bill will give Mr. Schwab free iron ore, and he is the largest importer of iron ore in the United States. If he has made 20 per cent on $35,000,000 per annum, that is $7,000,000 in profit a year, and in seven years a profit of $49,000,000 on the investment of $35,000,000.

Now, if the largest importer of iron ore in the United States is making $7,000,000 a year profits in running the Bethlehem Steel Works, why should we vote out of the Treasury of the United States $263,767, the amount of duties per annum on foreign iron ore and make that a present to Mr. Schwab, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., and to the Pennsylvania Steel Co.?

Why, the Democratic platform says that under a Republican protective tariff we are making "the rich richer and the poor poorer." Your proposition is to give Mr. Schwab free iron ore, to give him 15 cents a ton on every ton of iron ore, when he is making 20 per cent on an investment of $35,000,000. You are depriving American citizens who own the iron-ore mines and the American citizens who work our mines of this money, whch you send to Cuba, Spain, Sweden, and Chile under this bill. You are giving these importers of foreign iron ore $263,000 out of the Public Treasury—the people's money—when they do not need it and do not deserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any further amendment to paragraph 523? If not, is there any to 532? If not, are there any amendments to 535?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are several gentlemen who wish to be heard on paragraph 535. Can we agree upon a time for debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so.

Mr. MANN. I would like 25 minutes on this side. I want to give one gentleman more than 5 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Can not the gentleman make it 20 minutes on that side and 10 on this?

Mr. MANN. No; I wish the gentleman would make it 25 minutes on this side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that debate on paragraph 535 and amendments thereto be limited to one-half hour, 25 minutes to be given to the gentleman from Illinois and 5 minutes to this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on paragraph 535 and amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes, 25 minutes to be given to the gentleman from Illinois and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph by striking out the period in line 21, on page 114, and inserting instead a colon and adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That whenever any of the foregoing articles are exported to the United States, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in the United States, or the price at which such goods are consigned is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to the United States at the time of its exportation to the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such article on its importation into the United States a special duty (or dumping duty) equal to the difference between the said export or actual selling price of the article for export or the price at which such goods are consigned and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption, provided that the said special duty shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem in any case.

"'Export price' or 'selling price' or 'price at which such goods are consigned' in this section shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to the United States.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of this section and for the enforcement thereof."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the agreement there were to be 25 minutes upon this side. I ask unanimous consent that I may have control of that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARTLETT). That was provided for in the order that was made. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, there has been perhaps a little too much caustic discussion in the last few days as to whether or not organized labor favors this bill. At all events, the president of the International Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, Mr. John S. Tobin, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in opposition to reducing the tariff on boots and shoes in any way. Moreover, an organizer from the International Boot and Shoe Workers' headquarters, Mr. Thomas O'Hare, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in protest against free boots and shoes. Mr. O'Hare was formerly a practical shoe worker and an organizer for British unions. In case there should be any misstatement as to who paid the expenses of those witnesses, I am authorized to say that the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union paid their expenses entirely. Mr. Tobin appeared on his own initiative. As to Mr. O'Hare, he was detailed from the union headquarters at my request. I had in the past received most valuable information from him as to conditions in the boot and shoe industry of Great Britain, where he was formerly an organizer. I asked permission to pay Mr. O'Hare's expenses. I offered the money to him. He declined. Next I wrote to the union headquarters. They would not hear of it. That statement seems to dispose once for all of any lurking suspicion that these union men had their expenses paid by boot and shoe manufacturers.

Mr. Tobin testified to various things. I shall not go too deeply into his evidence before the committee, but here is one significant passage. Mr. Longworth asked this question:

Do you believe that the placing of shoes on the free list would have a tendency to reduce the standard of living of the American shoe workers?

Mr. TOBIN. Without any question.

Mr. RAINEY. Why, Mr. Tobin? Because they would be paid less wages?

Mr. TOBIN. The foreign shoe manufacturer would then find a very large market in this country, and he would apply himself to making the American style of shoes. The American supervision in their factories would yield that result, with the American machinery which they are now working, and very diligently, within the last two or three years particularly.

Mr. Tobin memorialized Congress the year before last, and in his memorial he used these words:

To put shoes and finished leather on the free list or in any way reduce the present tariff would compel the American shoe manufacturers to meet foreign competition through the only avenue open to them, namely, to attack the wages of the shoe workers and thereby bring about a lower standard of wages than at present, which would result in an industrial warfare and no doubt eventually would lower the standard of wages and consequently lower the standard of living.

There has been a great change in the situation since the days when we used to export Goodyear-welt shoes in large quantities to England to be sold by English retailers. In the last 10 years the American Shoe Machinery Co. has spread its machinery all over the face of the earth, and to-day it can equip a factory in Hongkong as completely and almost as rapidly as it can equip a factory in the city of Brockton, in the State of Massachusetts. So the situation has changed, and yet, as I said the other day, my expectations of the future when the Payne law was passed have been entirely disappointed. When the boot-and-shoe duty was cut in half by the Payne law I thought that the result was sure to be a very large importation of boots and shoes. Such has not been the case. Our exports of shoes amount to $16,000,000 a year, and our imports are a negligible quantity. Therefore, I understand perfectly well why the Committee on Ways and Means felt itself justified in putting boots and shoes on the free list.

If I had the time I should elaborate on my reasons for thinking that action a mistake. Inasmuch as I have only 12 minutes, I shall be forced to curtail my remarks and disarrange the order of my speech. It is not so much the immediate future which I fear. I am fearful of what may happen as soon as English manufacturers and American manufacturers have looked around them and have come to the realization that the provision for free boots and shoes is going to last four years, anyway. Perhaps it would be too risky for the British shoe manufacturer to go to work and equip his factory to produce American goods on American lasts with American patterns if there were danger that in a year or two the United States might put a high duty on boots and shoes.

But, with free boots and shoes guaranteed for four years, I think it extremely probable that Englishmen may consider it wise to equip their factories for the American trade. Unquestionably there is grave danger lest some American shoe manufacturers, finding labor conditions at home unsatisfactory to them, may establish foreign shoe factories. By means of American supervision and American machinery, coupled with a low wage scale, such manufacturers ought to be able to send shoes into this market which would undersell similar American-made articles by 25 to 30 per cent. As yet, Great Britain is our only serious rival in the manufacture of boots and shoes. Great Britain and the United States have been running neck and neck in the matter of shoe exports. Great Britain is always a little ahead in exports though, of course, far behind in amount of product. Now, note this: Whereas our export of boots and shoes to France and to Germany has increased very much in the last decade, on the other hand our export to Great Britain has fallen off during the same period. Our export to Great Britain in 1902 and 1903 was a little over $2,000,000. Nowadays we have an export of shoes to that country of about $1,800,000 a year. In 1906 the United Kingdom exported a little smaller amount of shoes than did the United States. Since that year Great Britain has shown such an increase that to-day her export of boots and shoes exceeds our by 7.6 per cent.

I now invite your attention to this chart showing the international wages in the shoe industry. The output is not shown. Nothing is shown but the actual wages paid. These figures are made up from various sources, largely from the official reports on the boot and shoe industry published by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

As you see in the chart, England, taking the average of the whole industry, pays its shoe workers about 55 per cent of what we pay our shoe workers. Scotland does a little better, Ireland not quite so well. In Germany, as you will observe, the wages in this industry are 45 per cent of ours. In Switzerland 35 per cent, in Austria 38 per cent, in Denmark 41 per cent, and in Norway 45 per cent. Except in Scotland, England, and Ireland the average European wage of the shoe industry is less than half what it is in the United States. Of course all these wage figures would be entirely unconvincing if we could form no comparison between the output of an individual European workman and the output of an individual American workman. On this question of comparative output our information is by no means complete. Certain things we know, however. We know that our shoemakers are almost all on piecework. We know that some British shoemakers are on piecework, but that more of them are on weekly wages. In a few minutes I shall give you some direct comparisons. Meanwhile let me offer an illustration showing the relative output in a day's work at home and abroad as measured by one of the most important processes of shoemaking, to wit, welting.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARTLETT). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman three minutes additional.

Mr. GARDNER. I am informed by Mr. O'Hare, of whom I have spoken, that the British workman is permitted by his union to welt a maximum of 200 pairs of shoes in the course of a day.

In Brockton, Mass., as I understand it, the men affiliated with the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union welt from 250 to 280 pairs of men's Goodyear welts daily. From the point of view of output, if welting is a fair standard of comparison, our manufacturers have an advantage over Great Britain in the ratio of 250 or 280 to 200. In the matter of wages, however, our manufacturers are at a far greater disadvantage in the ratio of 55 to 100.

In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee appears a table showing the relative cost of producing shoes in Great Britain and in the United States. From this table it appears that the cost of shoemaking in Great Britain exceeds the cost elsewhere except in the United States. It also appears that in Great Britain the highest cost is found in the town of Leicester and in the class of shoes known as Goodyear welts. In Leicester, the center of the British shoe industry, it costs 81 per cent of what it costs in America to produce a pair of men's Goodyear welts. In all other parts of England and in all other kinds of shoes the proportionate cost of shoemaking is even less in comparison with ours.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. I desire five minutes more on this side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of debate on this be extended 10 minutes—5 minutes on this side and 5 on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this paragraph be extended 10 minutes—5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 5 minutes by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may be out of the Chamber at the time, so I wish to say now that I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] and five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment to strike this paragraph from the free list and place the articles therein named upon the dutiable list. That automatically would subject the articles named in this paragraph to the protection afforded in the provisions of what is known as the dumping clause or the special dumping duty in section 4 of this bill. But according to the Democratic interpretation of this law, articles upon the free list are not subjected to the protection afforded by this dumping clause provision. Boots and shoes, if they remain upon the free list, will not have the protection that is afforded articles that are left on the dutiable list. Take the fabrics of the cotton factories in North Carolina and New England, and you have reduced the duty for the purpose, I understand, of increasing importation. Therefore, you have taken all the duty off of shoes for the purpose of increasing the importation of boots and shoes. Now, in one case you protect the manufacturer of cotton fabrics against having dumped into this country cotton goods procured at a price in a foreign market lower than they are sold for there, but you give to the shoe manufacturer no protection against this unjust and unfair competition.

I can see very readily why this dumping clause should not apply likely to all the articles named in this free list. We have no objection to dumping rubber in here, or coffee, or something of that kind, but the shoe industry is a great industry. We produce shoes here. A great many people depend on this industry for their living, and I see no reason why in the interest of fair play, that the men engaged in this industry, the employees, should not have the equal protection with the men who are engaged in the steel industry, the iron industry, and the cotton industry, and the textile woolen industry. I can see no reason for this unjust discrimination. Therefore, I think that in all fairness if boots and shoes are left upon the free list, and a number of other articles on the free list that are produced in this country in considerable quantities, this provision should be adopted or there should be another special dumping clause applying to those articles on the free list that we produce in this country as well as being produced abroad, protecting the manufacturers and the persons engaged in those industries equally as you protect the persons engaged in the industries whose products stay upon the dutiable list.

I yield back the rest of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to go into details of the shoe question. If I did, I should want about four hours instead of the short time yielded to me.

STATES POSITION IN RELATION TO SHOE INDUSTRY.

In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] a few days ago, I want to set myself straight with the membership of this House as to the business in which I am engaged in private life. I want to say that I own stock in three different shoe manufacturing concerns, two of which are located in the district which I have the honor to represent. I also want to say that the remarks made on this floor by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am president of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association of the United States is correct. The shoe manufacturers have indeed greatly honored me by electing me as president of their association. To have and maintain the confidence and respect of the trade in which we are engaged is an honor and pleasure that any man can well be proud of.

SHOE INDUSTRY NOT A MONOPOLY OR TRUST.

Again, I am exceedingly gratified and delighted to be the head of an organization that represents an industry with an output valued at probably $600,000,000; has an invested capital of over $200,000,000; employes hundreds of thousands of workmen, to whom are paid annually about $150,000,000 in wages; at which the finger of scorn has never been pointed and never will be pointed because of monopolistic or trust control in any way, shape, or form. [Applause on the Republican side.] The shoe manufacturers of this country have never combined for the purpose of either raising the price of the shoes they manufacture or lowering the wages of the men whom they employ. The manufacturers of the trade which this association represents are in free and open competition with each other. I want to call your attention to another fact, gentlemen, especially in view of the statements that have been made here as to trusts and monopolies; there is no shoe manufacturer or combination of shoe manufacturers that is to-day producing over 5 per cent of the entire production of shoes in the United States.

SHOE INDUSTRY ASKS NO FAVORS, BUT IS ENTITLED TO A SQUARE DEAL.

I am not here asking for favors or special privileges for the shoe industry, or any member of the industry. I do not intend, at this time, to speak in favor of the shoe manufacturers, but if I did I would call your attention to the fact that this bill does not give the shoe industry a square deal. You devoted entire pages of this tariff bill to wool, sugar, and other industries, none of which is equal in importance to the shoe industry, yet in one sentence, in one paragraph, you place the entire shoe business of the country, without regard to quality, kind, class, or grade, on the free list in open competition with the world. Not only this, but were I to speak at this time for the shoe manufacturers of the United States, I would call attention to the fact that you are subsidizing the industry in favor of the foreign manufacturer, by allowing some 30 articles used by the manufacturer and in the manufacture of shoes to remain on the dutiable list. In effect, you say to the foreigner, You can not send cotton linings, cotton goring, cotton galloon or webbing, or thread, nor silk thread and silk galloons and goring, nor buttons or hooks and eyelets, nor cardboard for cartons, nor box shooks, and a number of smaller items into this country without paying a duty, but if you will use your cheap foreign labor and make these articles into shoes, all can come in free. Is this a square deal? But I must not dwell any longer on this subject.

PROTEST IN BEHALF OF MY DISTRICT.

Mr. Chairman, I am here to represent the people in my district, and I want to register my protest against this bill in so far as it relates to the farming, mining, manufacturing, and all other lines of trade carried on in my district.

AGRICULTURAL SCHEDULE.

The agricultural schedule is an insult to the American farmer. My district is a large agricultural district. In it are located the fertile and beautiful Lebanon, Cumberland, and Lykens Valleys, and they are inhabited and the soil is tilled by the most industrious and intelligent people on earth, commonly known as the Pennsylvania Germans; their reputation for thrift and economy is known throughout the entire country, and if it is the purpose of the framers of this bill, as it seems to be, to fool the average farmer, I want to say here and now that they will not fool the Pennsylvania Germans. When you pretend to give them protection in one section of this bill and take it away in another you are not fooling a single one. By providing for a duty of 10 cents per bushel on wheat and putting flour and bran, the products of wheat, on the free list, you are not only legislating against the farmer but more directly against the milling industry in my district and the country.

INCONSISTENCY OF CATTLE DUTY.

You have provided for a duty of 10 per cent on cattle and sheep and all other live animals not specially provided for, and again, you have put beef and all products of cattle and sheep on the free list. There are a large number of farmers in my district who buy cattle in the fall known as stockers or feeders, which they fatten during the winter months and sell in the spring.

This bill is a direct handicap to these farmers. It prevents them from securing a supply of these cattle from the border States of Mexico and from Canada in the fall of the year when they buy their stock, but compels them to sell their fattened cattle in the spring in free and open competition with the product of the large packing interests who own and control packing houses in Canada, Mexico, and the South American countries, whose product may now be brought into this country free of duty in direct competition with stall-fed cattle. After the farmer has bought his cattle in the protected home market and has fattened them, the beef he has produced must be sold in open and free competition with these outside countries. This is a direct handicap to the farmer, and not only to the farmer but to the butcher and small slaughtering house as well, who do not have Canadian or South American connections. If they must sell in an open market, why not let them buy in an open market? By your duty on live cattle you are also compelling all dairymen who would replenish their herds of milch cows, for which they are paying an extremely high price at this time, to pay a duty of 10 per cent on every cow they might wish to bring into this country to help to increase the supply of milk, a very necessity of life.

DUTY ON PRODUCTS SOLD IN HOME MARKET NO BENEFIT.

You have tried to cater to the farmers and fool them by allowing a small duty on butter, cheese, eggs, and garden products of various kinds, which is of absolutely no use to them at all, because they know and you should know that on these articles it is entirely a matter of production and consumption and that the price is regulated by the demand.

INTERESTED IN A MARKET.

But, Mr. Chairman, the farmers are very much interested in having a demand and a market for their product. They know and realize that the wage earners of the country are their customers, and they know full well by past experience that when the wage earners are steadily employed at a fair wage, they know that when the mills, the mines, the manufacturing establishments, and iron works of all kinds are running on full time that they need not worry about their market; but when these industries begin to shut down, to lay off help, or reduce wages, then their market conditions suffer in the same proportion, because their customers will not have the money with which to buy.

REDUCE COST OF LIVING.

Mr. Chairman, we are told that this bill is framed for the express benefit of the consuming public and to reduce the cost of living. We admit that if this bill compels the shutting down and closing of our mills, mines, manufacturing and industrial establishments to such an extent that the wage earners do not have the money with which to buy the products of the farm, the necessaries of life, then the cost of living will be reduced. Then the products of the farm will again flood the market, and the wage earners will not have the money to buy even at low price; but, rest assured, when this is again brought to pass by the passage of a vicious tariff bill, notwithstanding the solemn promise of the Democratic Party platform and orators in the last campaign that "legitimate business shall not be destroyed or injured," the American people will rise in righteous indignation and condemn the party that pretends to legislate in the interests of the consuming public but which legislation can only result in disaster.

DEMAND PROTECTION FOR AMERICAN LABOR.

It seems that the framers of this bill have slashed the duties regardless of the consequences. There are thousands upon thousands, yes millions, of wage earners whose earning power is threatened by this bill, and I want to enter as emphatic a protest as is possible against the passage of such an un-American piece of legislation. It has been stated on the floor of this House by the leaders of the Democratic Party that they do not intend to give protection to American labor or any industry, but that the quantity of imports has been the governing factor in writing a tariff law. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I indorse the position of the Republican Party in their stand for the protection of American labor. We are not asking for any special privileges for any industry, but we do ask that in all industries the wages of the workmen shall be protected against free and open competition with the underpaid foreign labor.

We ask you, and sincerely hope, that a tariff board or commission may be appointed to ascertain the difference in the labor cost of production between home and abroad, to the end that a tariff bill may be written that will protect the wage earners. We invite members of such a commission to enter our manufacturing establishments and see how much money is contained in the pay envelope of the American workman, and then see how much money is contained in the pay envelope of the workmen of foreign countries in similar lines of industry, and then write a tariff that will put the American wage earners on such a basis that their present scale of wages may be maintained.

STANDARD OF LIVING AND WAGES.

It is an acknowledged fact that all that the workman has to sell is his labor. This he has been able to sell to good advantage during the last 10 or 15 years, and because of this fact he has established a standard of living that is higher than he has ever had before. Let it be remembered that the standard of living is just as high as the wage scale will permit it to be. The moment that you pass legislation that will cut down the earning capacity of the wage earner, you are cutting down the purchasing power of the wage earner and the Nation. The wage earners are the great consuming public, and national prosperity is absolutely impossible when the wage earner is not prosperous.

We are thoroughly in sympathy with our Democratic friends in their attempt to legislate for the reduction of the high cost of living, but we most earnestly protest against the wrecking of industrial prosperity and the putting of the wage earners on a starvation basis to accomplish the result.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one industry in all the length and breadth of the American manufacturing business which has demonstrated its ability to stand alone, not only in its own market but also in the markets of the world, without the protection which tariff rates give to it, it is the American boot-and-shoe industry.

I want to say that the hearings which were held by the Committee on Ways and Means in January were in many respects most impressive. They were the most interesting feature of congressional life that I have ever been associated with, and I was particularly impressed by the men who came out of New England, representing the great industries of that section of the country, discussing before that committee the tariff as it affected their industries. They were mostly young men, showing by their methods and their manners that they were able and brilliant men and men who possessed tremendous courage. I never was able to understand before, until I looked into the sharp eyes of those Yankee manufacturers, why it was that the American manufacturer in so many lines of trade is to-day beating the world. And probably one of the most able of those men, certainly one who impressed me most favorably, was a young man who came before our committee representing the American boot-and-shoe industry, who said that he was himself practically the largest manufacturer of boots and shoes in America, owning mills which produced $20,000,000 worth of shoes per annum.

That was Mr. McElwin. He was a fair witness. Of course he was looking out for his own, but he said three or four things which are so highly significant and which, to my mind, so entirely justify the act of this committee in putting boots and shoes on the free list that I shall content myself simply with reference to those things.

The first was this: When he was asked by a member of the committee at what point he would lay a rate, between zero and 10 per cent, which would result in some competition with the American manufacturer, however small, despite his large knowledge of the boot-and-shoe industry, he could not name such a rate. To-day the American producer manufactures over one-half billion dollars' worth of shoes in this country per annum, exports $16,000,000 worth per annum, and there are no importations.

The imports of less than $200,000 cover carpet slippers and various specialties. Boots and shoes do not come into this country. Yet when we have reached the day when we must have something come through the customhouse, or we men upon this side of the House be charged with a violation of our pledges to the people, we asked this able representative of the trade where he could put his finger on a rate which would result in any boots and shoes coming into this country, and he said he could not do it.

The next thing Mr. McElwin said, which was very significant, was this: When I asked him whether he was engaged in the export trade he said, "Not largely; but by the way," he said, "we are going into it right now."

And not only he, but every big manufacturer of boots and shoes in the country is preparing to go into the export trade. Why? Because of the third thing that Mr. McElwin said, which impressed me so deeply that I have remembered it ever since. That was that the reason for the large exports of American shoes is found in that first line of the advertisement of the Walk-Over shoe: "In 87 countries the Walk-Over sets the style for shoes."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PALMER. If I may have two minutes more——

Mr. GARDNER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have such time as he desires to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARTLETT). The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have such time as he desires to conclude his remarks.

Mr. PALMER. No, no.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the request.

Mr. PALMER. Two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. PALMER. The significant thing about that is this, that where the value of an article produced by an American manufacturer consists of something else than its intrinsic worth, as for instance, its style or its fashion, it can not be stolen by a foreign manufacturer.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. PALMER. In a minute. Where an article sells in all the countries of the world upon its style it is the style of the producing country that makes it sell. The reason why we are such large exporters of shoes is because the American style, devised, invented, and perfected by the American producer, is attractive to the eyes of the world. It can not be copied with success. The world will not buy a counterfeit. Now I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. Supposing that the manufacturer in a foreign country buys American machinery, American patents, and American lasts, and has American floor superintendents, how can he produce a different shoe?

Mr. PALMER. The American manufacturer of automobiles produces just as good a car as the Fiat or the Mercedes, but the people who want that kind of a product insist upon it, because it is a foreign car. They insist upon an Italian, a French, or a British car. The same thing is true of the American shoe. It has such a reputation the world over, because it is American, that the foreign imitation will never seriously interfere with the American producer. I do not believe there is a shoe manufacturer in the country who has any real fear that the American market will be seriously "inroaded" if we put boots and shoes on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, paragraph 535, lines 19, 20, and 21, by striking out all of the paragraph after the word "unfinished" in line 19.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to strike out harness and saddlery from the provisions of this paragraph. In effect it would restore them to the dutiable list, in accordance with the amendment which I offered Saturday to paragraph 377; and at that time I stated that I should offer it to paragraph 535 when it should be reached. I now redeem my promise and statement to this committee, as well as seek to clear any possible confusion in the pending bill and prevent any possible injustice to a very deserving industry scattered all over the country.

On Saturday evening when, in the consideration of paragraph 377, I had read from the desk a letter from one of the leading Democrats and one of our leading and public-spirited citizens from our section of the country which stated, in substance, that the harness and saddlery business of the border States would be seriously injured by the free-trade provisions of the pending bill; that the largest manufacturing concern on the American continent was located at Winnipeg, ready now and looking forward to the passage of this provision for free harness and saddlery. This large concern in Winnipeg was making its organization and seeking the services of American traveling men to solicit for their business and take it away from our own people, removing the benefit of the trade to Canada. The passage of this provision in the bill would inevitably result in depriving the American manufacturer along the border of a fair chance and a fair return in the harness and saddlery business. The American manufacturer is obliged to use many articles now on the dutiable list and which will remain on the dutiable list under your bill and he pays his share of the taxes in this manner and in many other ways for carrying on his business and aiding in the support of our institutions. The foreign manufacturer would have exactly the same market, would have as good organization in taking it away from us, as the American would have; and yet the foreigner would pay none of the taxes, securing many of his materials without the taxes and burdens you place upon the competing American manufacturer.

This good Democrat declared that such a provision and such a condition in the bill of his party was grossly unfair. I agree with him, and I am unwilling to believe you are acquainted with the situation or you would not permit such an injustice. Free trade in harnesses certainly will not help the Treasury, since it takes away revenues from it. It will not help the consumer, the farmer, and the teamster will not get harnesses any cheaper, because any difference will be absorbed by the dealer, who will push the goods where he can make the largest profit for himself. But it will injure a good many American citizens who now pay their share of the expenses of the Government by giving the competing foreigner free admission for his competing goods without his paying any expenses of our Government, and giving them the same splendid market of our people, who are obliged to bear the burdens.

In addition, the harness and saddlery business is depressed now by the development of the great automobile industry, and this will be increasing as time goes on. If this amendment passes, the letter of my good Democratic friend states that it would be necessary for many of the small concerns which are now competing highly with each other to combine, to sell out one to the other to reduce overhead expenses, and eliminate some competition among themselves, in order to meet the increased competition from Canada and over across the sea. In other words, it will eliminate quite a number of small American business manufacturing concerns in order that those remaining can be strong enough to compete with the foreign concerns over across the border and over across the sea. Your free trade does not help the consumer, it does help the foreigner, it does injure the small producer. It will result in eliminating lines and in necessary combination in order to live at all. The adoption of my amendment will prevent confusion, prevent injustice, protect American labor and employers, and care for our own people first of all. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is scarcely an industry among the people I have the honor to represent on this floor that is not seriously threatened by the provisions of this bill. Woolgrowing sheep, cattle and horse raising, coal mining, potato raising, sugar-beet raising are all seriously endangered, and now we have reached a manufacturing industry—that of making harnesses and saddles—which is placed in competition with all the world.

Among the most promising of the small industries of my State is that of the making of high-grade, handmade stock saddles and harnesses. This industry, I think, was injured somewhat by the reduction of the rate in the Payne bill. If stock saddles and harness now go on the free list our handmade stock saddle and harness industries are very certain to be injuriously affected by competition from Mexico, Canada, and Europe.

Mr. Chairman, while this may seem a small matter, it is in fact a matter of great importance to us. The prosperity of our small manufacturing industries touches me deeply. The other day in my temporary absence from the House the accidental gentleman from Colorado, who lives in Denver, called attention to the fact that we had but few manufacturing industries in our State. I regret that fact, and I want to save this one. The gentleman from Colorado had the advantage of me because I was not here. Whether he is here now I do not know, for I never had the pleasure, so far as I recall, of meeting the gentleman, and I do not know what he looks like. I can only imagine him as he described himself the other day in that speech. He painted a picture of himself as a Janus-faced composite of Gambrinus and Carrie Nation, with, in the language of heraldry, a stein rampant and hatchet passant, or en passant, as our French friends would say. He adorned the picture by relating how artfully he had fooled 17,000 Prohibitionists in his State out of their vote by temporarily holding the hatchet rampant and the stein passant. [Laughter.] Although the gentleman did refer to me in rather harsh terms, the sympathy I have for him is unmixed with any other emotion.

I sympathize with him, for I realize how badly he must feel with every industry of his great and glorious State, her mines, her farms, her forests, her mills, her factories, all threatened with destruction by this measure, and he, tongue-tied with party caucus paralysis, unable to rise here and defend any one of those great industries. I sympathize with him also because he seems to have confused an election to Congress with an appointment on the Interstate Commerce Commission; but if it be true, as he modestly told you the other day, that he controls the decisions of that great commission—at least he assured us that they were Kindell decisions—even though that be true, I suggest to him in the most friendly spirit that when the magnificent potato industry of northern Colorado, the greatest in the world; her splendid sugar-beet industry, the largest in the United States; her great mining industries; her farming industries—when all of them are burdened under this bill and are paralyzed by it, he will not be able to fill the aching void that will be left in the stomachs and pocketbooks of his constituents by a railroad rate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the other side has consumed all its time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the boot and shoe industry receives to-day no help from the present tariff, and the provisions of the bill before us will prove an aid to the industry. The small rates on its finished product are of trifling assistance, but the duties placed by the Payne bill on the materials which go into the manufacture of shoes impose a heavy burden on the industry. The provisions of this bill will place the boot and shoe industry on a better industrial foundation than that on which it rests to-day. The bill, it is true, removes the duty of 10 per cent and 15 per cent on various classes of boots and shoes, but it also follows out the policy which our party adopted in framing this bill by placing on the free list the principal articles which enter into the manufacture of shoes and greatly reduces the rates of duty on many of the other articles used by this industry. The proposed act puts on the free list sole leather, grain, buff leather, patent leather, upper leather, and calfskins, and reduces the duty on shoe knives and shoe laces, dextrin, cotton thread, linen thread, and the other component parts which go into the manufacture of the shoe.

Following is a table showing some of the materials which enter into the cost of making shoes on which there will be a material reduction in the rate of duty:

The shoe industry is one of the great industries of this country. My own State—Massachusetts—produces 46.1 per cent of the total output of shoes. It is an industry of which we may be justly proud, and I am gratified that Massachusetts has furnished so large a part of the organization and the workingmen who have led in this great industry. The growth of the industry is the strongest testimonial of the brains and energy of those who have created it. From a total output for the United States valued in 1899 at $290,047,087, it has grown until in 1910 the output was valued at $515,797,642—a growth in a decade of 76.8 per cent. That the shoe industry will be seriously affected by free shoes I do not believe. We have seen the effect of lowering the duty in the Payne law. The duties on shoes were lowered in that act from 25 per cent to 10 and 15 per cent. The manufacturers protested at that time, yet there are no results from that decreased duty from which we could infer that the industry is threatened with any injury by placing boots and shoes on the free list, as is done in this bill. The last year of the 25 per cent duty there were importations of $104,000, and the next year when shoes were subject to the 10 and 15 per cent duty the importations were only a little greater.

To-day, the very last year of which we have the returns, the importations are only valued at $216,000, and Turkish slippers and other inexpensive slippers form the larger part of this. The importations of shoes are but a trifle compared to the production of the industry.

Each year we have shown the strengthening force in the organization and the capabilities which the shoe manufacturers have displayed. Five years ago the exportations were but $11,469,559. They have increased each year until this last year—1912—the exportations were over $16,009,002. That shows the strength of the industry. Those exportations are made in direct competition with the countries whose competition in our market is most feared. We are sending shoes not only into neutral markets where they do not manufacture them, but we are sending shoes into markets where manufacturing of shoes itself thrives. From 1908 to 1912 the exportation of shoes from this country to Austria-Hungary increased from $140,000 to $563,000. In addition to that, we paid a tariff duty of over 5 per cent. Into France the exportations increased in the last five years from $238,000 to $501,000 despite a duty of 12.3 per cent. Into Germany, whose competition is most often now held up before us as something we should fear, our exportations increased from $589,000 in 1908 to $920,000 in 1912, and that despite the fact that we were paying a duty of 6.5 per cent.

To Italy our exportations increased from $29,973 in 1908 to $383,932 in 1912, and we paid a duty of 9.5 per cent. Our exports to the United Kingdom have not changed materially. For Scotland and Ireland there has been a decrease of about $250,000 in the last four years, while for England there has been an increase of about an equal amount. Despite a duty of 28.5 per cent which we pay, we have increased our exports to Canada from $1,215,248 to $2,457,007 in 1912. In South America our increase has been even more marked and exports to Argentina, Brazil, and Chile have increased in five years respectively from $94,661 to $377,407; from $151,407 to $234,817, and from $28,196 to $171,502. Exports to all of South America have increased from $548,000 in 1908 to $1,192,000 in 1912. Removed from the restrictions which the tariff lays on his industry the manufacturer should be able to meet his competitor on equal terms and not only retain his domestic market but extend his export sales to increased volume.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the considerable disparity in time I venture to ask unanimous consent that I may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may have three minutes additional. Is there objection?

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any further amendment——

Mr. MANN. What became of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. It was lost.

Mr. MANN. It was disposed of?

Mr. SWITZER. Was my amendment voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the amendment was voted on, but he is informed at the desk that it was voted on.

Mr. MANN. I think it was not voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph is 455.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 11, strike out the period and insert "and mannit."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, mannit is produced in Sicily. It is used as a medicine by the Latin people. There is none produced in this country, and I desire to have read in my time a letter from Langley & Michaels Co., San Francisco, explaining the necessity for putting mannit on the free list.

The Clerk read as follows:

REQUEST THAT MANNIT BE PLACED ON THE FREE LIST.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 30, 1913.

The Honorable WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Mannit has been commonly classified under the present Payne Act, Schedule A, paragraph 65, as a chemical and medicinal substance, in the preparation of which alcohol is used, subject to 25 per cent duty. It will therefore probably be considered under the general classification provided in paragraph 18 of the Underwood bill, namely, 10 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem, but this classification does not meet the properties of mannit, nor does any other classification cover it in the proposed bill. We therefore request that you place it on the free list with manna for the following reasons:

Mannit is used for medicinal and industrial purposes. It is a sugarlike substance crystallized from manna, which is the sap extracted from a tree grown principally in Sicily. Mannit is therefore a vegetable substance refined, but it does not contain alcohol and alcohol is not used in its preparation. Textbooks state that alcohol is used in its preparation, but it is only done in very rare instances. Ninety-eight per cent of the entire production is refined simply by crystallizing from solution of manna in pure water. The mannit of commerce is all produced in Sicily and Italy. None is produced or refined in the United States. The world's production and supply does not exceed 165,000 pounds annually, but it has an important part in the health of the Latin races in Europe and South America, and also in the United States.

We understand that application was made to the Ways and Means Committee through the Italian Chamber of Commerce in New York by one of our foreign correspondents and producers to have mannit placed on the free list with manna, which latter has always been and still is on the free list. We heartily indorse this request, because mannit and manna are both used for the same purposes—as a sirup and laxative, principally among the Latin races.

Manna is never over 40 per cent pure, balance being molasses and gums without any medicinal properties. The only reason that manna is used instead of mannit in the United States is because it can be procured so much cheaper, being duty free. Mannit is better adapted to children and delicate women because of its purity, and for this reason is almost exclusively used in preference to manna in foreign countries. The American consumer should therefore also be able to procure the mannit more reasonably. Mannit could also be used in America for industrial as well as medicinal purposes, if obtainable without duty.

The above reasons summarized show:

1. Manna and mannit applicable for the same purposes.
2. That it is possible to increase foreign commerce without in any wise injuring home industry, on the contrary helping it.
3. Public and humane policy to supply our people with the "pure drug" instead of the impure.
4. Use of the more desirable product prohibitive, because mannit has been improperly classified heretofore.

We therefore join others in requesting that you place mannit on the free list by having paragraph 548 of the Underwood bill, instead of only "manna," read "manna and mannit" free.

Respectfully,

LANGLEY & MICHAELS CO.,
By C. F. MICHAELS,
Vice President.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any further amendment to paragraph 545? If not, the next paragraph is 549.

Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. MANN. I think there is some little discussion on 549. Why not dispose of 552 before taking a recess, and then go back?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can come to an agreement on 549, I will rise and let debate come after.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman after this amendment is discussed I want to offer then another amendment, if this is not adopted. I was in hopes the gentleman from Alabama would be agreeable to it.

Mr. MANN. That is on meat. Let us dispose of 552 and then go back to 549, and do it before the recess.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any amendment to 552?

Mr. WILLIS. I have an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the gentleman willing to have an agreement for 15 minutes debate on all amendments pending, 5 minutes to go to this side?

Mr. WILLIS. I would like to have four or five minutes.

Mr. MANN. There is the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Wyoming, and the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I have two amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman can offer both of them.

Mr. GOOD. And if this is not adopted, when I offer to strike out this paragraph I want three minutes on that.

Mr. MANN. Make it 18 minutes on this side.

Mr. SWITZER. Does that include all amendments offered?

Mr. MANN. On meats.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that there may be 30 minutes debate on this paragraph, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and 10 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph 549 and all amendments thereto shall close in 30 minutes, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3321, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes to make a statement about something that is printed in the RECORD relative to myself that does not state correctly my attitude.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] in the RECORD of May 3, on page 990, inserted a letter or a statement from Mr. Walter H. Langshaw, of New Bedford, Mass., which contains the following statement:

There is certainly not over 15 per cent of our products in this country that is on fancy and figured work. A large portion is made in New Bedford, and plants have been equipped to do this work, and the little consideration shown for the increased cost in adjusting the rate of duty as compared with other classes is singular considering Chairman UNDERWOOD's significant remark, when asked by a Congressman from this district to give New Bedford more consideration. He said, "New Bedford mills are rich; they can stand it."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not reflect on the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], because I suppose he did not notice this when he put it in the RECORD. That statement was published in some New England papers. It was denied in those papers before this letter reached here. I simply want the RECORD to show that there is absolutely no truth in the assertion, and that I never made such a statement anywhere at any time. I want the RECORD to show its falsehood.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At 8 o'clock p. m., the recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose before recess, paragraph 549 was under discussion, and an agreement had been entered into whereby there was to be 20 minutes' debate, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. GOOD. An amendment was pending which was not reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

After word "section," line 18, page 115, add:

"Provided, however, That none of the foregoing meats shall be imported into the United States from any foreign country unless and until the President, after due investigation, has found and proclaimed that the Government of any such foreign country has established and is maintaining a system of meat inspection which is the substantial equivalent and is as efficient as the system established and maintained by the laws of the United States in the Department of Agriculture; and especially that the system of such foreign country provides for the examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats before they are allowed to enter into any slaughtering, packing, meat canning, rendering, or similar establishment in which they are to be slaughtered and the meat or meat products thereof are to be used for food: And provided further, That no meat imported into the United States from any foreign country shall be sold in the United States until it is examined and inspected, after arrival and before sale, by inspectors appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture; and the provisions of an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, relating to post-mortem examinations and inspections of the carcasses and parts thereof of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats are hereby made applicable to carcasses, parts thereof, and meats so imported into the United States from any such foreign country."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in hopes that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will accept this amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no doubt he will do it.

Mr. GOOD. The amendment simply provides that no meats shall be imported under this act until the country that exports the same shall have adopted a meat-inspection law at least as efficient as our own.

The act making appropriations for the support of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, provided for a very efficient meat inspection—not only a post-mortem examination but an ante-mortem examination. Under the provisions of that law it is necessary to-day for every packing house to have a meat inspector, who shall inspect every animal that is brought there for slaughter, and those that are rejected are required to be kept separate. They are slaughtered, and the meat is again inspected, and even those carcasses that pass the first examination are reinspected.

But, mind you, the quarantine laws do not apply to fresh meats. They apply only to live animals.

Now, what is the proposition here? The proposition is to take off the duty of 1½ cents a pound on meats and to allow all meats from all the countries of the world to come in our market free, uninspected, without any inspection except the inspection that is provided for in the pure-food law, and that inspection simply provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that some inspector has made a report and states that some inspection has been made and that there has been added no substance injurious to health. There is no provision with regard to meats that are tubercular, or anything of that kind, or of an examination and real inspection being required. Nobody eating imported meats would know whether or not the meats were injurious to health or not.

Now, I submit that in legislating in the interest of the American people, it is just as important that our people shall not have diseased meats from Argentina, as it is that they shall not be served with diseased meats by our own packers. To-day the "big four" have their packing houses in Buenos Aires. Armour & Co., Swift & Co., the S. S. Co., Morris & Co., and even Cudahy, are building factories there, and under the provisions of this bill they can bring their meats in free of duty and without a post-mortem or ante-mortem examination. How are we to know whether or not the meats we shall eat which will be imported from South America are wholesome? If it was essential to have an ante-mortem examination when Congress passed this appropriation act, so far as our own meats are concerned, is it not doubly important that now, when we are allowing free meats to come into open competition with our meats, there should be an ante-mortem as well as a post-mortem examination at foreign slaughtering plants exporting foreign meats to the United States?

I have studied the provisions of the law that we passed in 1908, and I do not see how that law could be improved upon. It seems to me that every safeguard was thrown around that meat-inspection law for the benefit of the American consumer. But with one stroke of the pen, by writing in this bill "free meats, uninspected," we throw that law and all of its provisions to the winds, and the American farmer and the American independent packer are obliged to compete in the sale of their product with meats made from cattle that are suffering with disease, meats of cattle that have been rejected and could not be brought into this country as live cattle.

We have a very effective remedy in the present law. The duty of 1½ cents a pound regulates the importation of these meats that have not been inspected, that are frozen and sent to the market of the world. When such meats are imported into this country as chilled meats they have to pay the duty of 1½ cents a pound, and that has served as a bar to the beef from South America that is not inspected.

Mr. MOORE. Would not the gentleman's argument apply equally to bread, biscuits, wafers, and so forth, that will come in uninspected?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think so. As I understand, we have no law affecting those articles excepting the pure-food law; but here we have altogether a different subject to deal with, and the inspection of meats has become a very important thing, one of the most important in the Department of Agriculture.

While in every packing plant we have our inspectors, and our beef must be rigidly inspected, post mortem and ante mortem, yet the meat from Argentina is to have no inspection at all. Is this in the interest of the American consumer? Is it even fair?

That hereafter, for the purpose of preventing the use in interstate or foreign commerce, as hereinafter provided, of meat and meat food products which are unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food, the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may cause to be made, by inspectors appointed for that purpose, an examination and inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats before they shall be allowed to enter into any slaughtering, packing, meat-canning, rendering, or similar establishment in which they are to be slaughtered and the meat and meat food products thereof are to be used in interstate or foreign commerce; and all cattle, swine, sheep, and goats found on such inspection to show symptoms of disease shall be set apart and slaughtered separately from all other cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, and when so slaughtered the carcasses of said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats shall be subject to a careful examination and inspection, all as provided by the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, as herein provided for.

That for the purposes hereinbefore set forth the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made by inspectors appointed for that purpose, as hereinafter provided, a post-mortem examination and inspection of the carcasses and parts thereof of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats to be prepared for human consumption at any slaughtering, meat-canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishment in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for transportation or sale as articles of interstate or foreign commerce; and the carcasses and parts thereof of all such animals found to be sound, healthful, wholesome, and fit for human food shall be marked, stamped, tagged, or labeled as "Inspected and passed"; and said inspectors shall label, mark, stamp, or tag as "Inspected and condemned" all carcasses and parts thereof of animals found to be unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food; and all carcasses and parts thereof thus inspected and condemned shall be destroyed for food purposes by the said establishment in the presence of an inspector, and the Secretary of Agriculture may remove inspectors from any such establishment which fails to so destroy any such condemned carcass or part thereof, and said inspectors, after said first inspection, shall, when they deem it necessary, reinspect said carcasses or parts thereof to determine whether since the first inspection the same have become unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or in any way unfit for human food, and if any carcass or any part thereof shall, upon examination and inspection subsequent to the first examination and inspection, be found to be unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food, it shall be destroyed for food purposes by the said establishment in the presence of an inspector, and the Secretary of Agriculture may remove inspectors from any establishment which fails to so destroy any such condemned carcass or part thereof.

The foregoing provisions shall apply to all carcasses or parts of carcasses of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, or the meat or meat products thereof which may be brought into any slaughtering, meat-canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishment, and such examination and inspection shall be had before the said carcasses or parts thereof shall be allowed to enter into any department wherein the same are to be treated and prepared for meat food products; and the foregoing provisions shall also apply to all such products which, after having been issued from any slaughtering, meat-canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishment, shall be returned to the same or to any similar establishment where such inspection is maintained.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not your purpose to place the foreigner on the same basis with the American producer in this bill, so far as the restrictions of inspection are concerned.

Mr. GOOD. That is the object—to be fair.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the gentleman know that this bill, from the beginning to the end, is in the interest of the foreign producer and against the American? And why should he ask the opportunity for equality in this particular that is not granted in any other particular in this bill?

Mr. GOOD. I thought that inasmuch as this provision affects the public health of the great American people, they on that side would be willing to put this amendment through.

Mr. SLOAN. But do you really expect it from the party in charge of this bill? What is your expectation about that?

Mr. GOOD. No doubt the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill will accept this provision. At least, I hope he will.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, under general leave and following up the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], I submit the following letter from a large Philadelphia concern relating to the placing of biscuits, bread, and wafers on the free list:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 3, 1913.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You are, of course, aware that the present tariff duties on imported biscuits are as follows:

Biscuits, bread, wafers, cakes, and other baked articles when sweetened with sugar, honey, molasses, or other similar material, the selling price of which biscuit is based at 15 cents per pound or less, the present duty is 3 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem.

Some articles valued at more than 15 cents per pound the present duty is 50 per cent ad valorem.

Biscuits, wafers, cakes, etc., not otherwise mentioned the present duty is 20 per cent ad valorem.

This indicates that every kind of sweetened biscuit imported from a foreign country pays a duty based upon its valuation.

Under the new tariff bill now being considered for revision at Washington, Schedule G, item 203, reads "biscuits, wafers, etc., combined with chocolate, nuts, fruit, or confectionery of any kind, and without regard to the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem."

ITEM NO. 430.

"Biscuits, cakes, etc., not especially provided for in this section will be admitted free of duty."

This practically means that Schedule G, item 203, will result in a decrease in the duty of more than 25 per cent.

Item No. 430 will involve a decrease in duty of over 20 per cent.

We have it upon reliable authority that the most skilled bakers in foreign countries do not receive on an average over $7.50 per week, and that a great many bakers are working at a wage of from $5 to $6 per week.

Compared with this wage schedule the best bakers in this country, as you know, receive from $15 to $30 per week, and this enormous difference in the wages would impose a severe handicap upon any American manufacturer.

Should this reduction in tariff come about it will make it comparatively easy for a foreign manufacturer to come in and compete with us, particularly since they have a very much lower wage schedule than we have.

As you perhaps know, we have large manufacturing establishments in each of the following cities: Boston, Mass.; Chicago, Ill.; Kansas City, Mo.; Omaha, Nebr.; Chelsea, Mass.; St. Louis, Mo.; Minneapolis, Minn.; and Dallas, Tex.; employing many thousand people, and should the proposed reduction come about it would naturally throw a great many of these people out of employment, or in any event, of course, would force very heavy reductions in salaries paid in order to meet such competition.

We particularly bring your attention to the fact that the value of imported biscuit consumed in the United States is very small, and the effect of the reduction in tariff would be but of little benefit to the general public, while on the other hand American biscuit manufacturers are placing goods on the market annually to the value of about $100,000,000.

We feel that the existing schedule of tariff on biscuit products is entirely satisfactory, and we sincerely hope that the present schedule be maintained, and we earnestly solicit your cooperation and efforts to see that no change is made.

Thanking you for your attention and consideration, we are,

Yours, very truly,

LOOSE-WILES BISCUIT CO.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I had an amendment which I expected to introduce, but it embodies substantially the provisions of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and I therefore wish to speak in favor of his amendment and shall not introduce the one I had in mind.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is of tremendous importance. It is not a matter that goes to the question of a protective tariff or a revenue tariff, but it goes simply to the question of the maintenance of the public health.

My attention was most forcibly called to this situation not long since by a discussion which I saw in one of our leading agricultural papers, which article I shall insert in the RECORD. The article, in full, is as follows:

FREE MEATS.

In connection with the effort now being made to encourage the importation of meats by removing the duty therefrom it will be well for the public to stop and consider the influence such a change might have upon the health of our people. In the United States to-day we have the most rigid and effective system of meat inspection that is maintained in the world. It is admittedly the most thorough, and has been brought to its present high standard of efficiency at an enormous cost to the Nation and its live-stock producers. The Federal appropriation for our meat inspection is annually $3,200,000. In addition to this the States and cities spend another million. Then there is annually condemned in Federal plants $3,000,000 worth of meats, the latter loss being borne by the stockmen. Without considering the meats condemned by State and city inspectors, we find the cost of our meat inspection to be $7,200,000 annually. All this is for the protection of the public health, and the money is well expended.

Now it is suggested that by placing meats on the "free list" we would import large quantities of meat from Canada, Mexico, China, South America, Australia, and New Zealand. With the exception of Canada, not one of these countries has what could be called a system of meat inspection, and most of them have no inspection at all. Canada had none until about three years ago, and even yet her system is not comparable with that in force here. Where any of these countries maintain inspection it is largely a farce, kept up for the issuance of certificates so as to facilitate the export of meats.

The law under which our meats are inspected does not cover imported meat, and the inspection of such meats is provided for only in the pure food and drug act, under direction of the Bureau of Chemistry. This bureau requires imported meat to be accompanied by a certificate of inspection, but it accepts certificates from countries having no adequate system of inspection. In fact, none of these countries can supply a certificate of inspection that is worth anything as a guaranty of the purity of the meat. Under existing regulations this meat is inspected on arrival here, but this inspection is only to determine its state of preservation. Inspection of the meat itself can determine nothing else. We are therefore without any adequate law covering the inspection of imported meats, and in the absence of such a law, under free trade, this country will become the dumping ground for the diseased and filthy meats of the world.

What we most need is an amendment of the meat-inspection act of 1906 so as to require that meat can not be imported except from countries which maintain a standard of inspection equal to that in force in this country. Such an amendment must give our meat inspectors full authority to keep close supervision over the system in force in other countries.

Germany excludes foreign meat not by a tariff but through sanitary regulations that no country can comply with. We do not advise such measures, but the American people have a right to insist that imported meats shall carry the same freedom from disease as is demanded from our own meats.

In this ably written article attention is called to the fact that our meat-inspection service is now costing us something like $3,200,000 per annum. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has lucidly explained, we have a splendid inspection service. Our meat inspection is not simply inspection of the carcass, but it is an inspection of the live animal. I venture to say that it is not possible to have a satisfactory meat inspection when that inspection is limited simply to the meat. There must be an inspection of the animal before it is slaughtered.

In this country not only is the Government now spending $3,200,000 per annum, but in addition to that last year there were condemned as unfit for food the carcasses of slaughtered animals worth $3,000,000, which loss was borne, uncomplainingly, by the stockmen of this country. And yet we are proposing to say by this bill, by this provision in it, that the stockmen of the Argentine, New Zealand, and elsewhere shall be allowed to send in their meats free of duty and practically without inspection. If this bill shall pass, undoubtedly there will be large importations of meat from Canada, from New Zealand, from Mexico, from Central America, perhaps, and certainly from South America; and so far as I am informed there is not one of those countries, with the possible exception of Canada, that has any meat-inspection law worthy of the name, and the Canadian meat-inspection law is not at all satisfactory.

So far as I am informed there is absolutely no inspection in Argentina, New Zealand, or any of those places. As the gentleman from Iowa has pointed out, the only thing upon which we would have to rely would be the provisions of the pure food and drugs act, under the authority of the Bureau of Chemistry and all that bureau can do is to inspect the meat to determine whether or not improper preservatives are used. They can tell nothing about the health of the animals. They can simply tell whether the meat appears to be in proper condition for food, and whether or not it is decomposed, but they can not tell anything about the health of the animal.

It seems to me that this is a matter clearly above the range of politics; that it is a matter that pertains to the public health. As I said, we have a splendid meat-inspection service. We demanded it and we ought to have had the law long ago. It was finally put on the statute book by the Republican Party. Now we have the law and it is in successful operation at a tremendous expense to the Government of the United States and to the various States and cities who have their own inspection law, in order to do what? Not to protect any industry; it is not a question of the tariff, but to protect the public health and to protect the lives of the people that are to eat this meat. If we should pass this bill without the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, we should simply open the gates so that the stockmen of New Zealand and Canada and Mexico and the Argentine can send their meat in here absolutely duty free and without inspection. I do not believe that the gentlemen who prepared this bill intended that that should be done, but obviously that is the effect of the provisions of the bill. I do not believe that that aspect of it has been called to the committee's attention, and therefore I hope that the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be accepted by the committee and written into the law in the interest of the health of the people of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, sometime ago I introduced a bill at the beginning of this Congress prohibiting the importation of fresh and cured meats into the United States unless some provision was made at the point of slaughter and preparation substantially in conformity with the provisions of the meat-inspection law of the United States. I have prepared an amendment which I intended to and I think I shall still offer at the proper time, on page 204, as a separate paragraph following subsection 1 of section 8, which prohibits the importation of neat cattle and hides from any foreign country until such time as the Secretary shall officially determine and give public notice that such importation will not tend to the spread of infectious diseases among the cattle of the country.

It seems to me that perhaps that is a proper place in the bill for an amendment of that sort.

But I do hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be adopted at this time and place. If it is it will be unnecessary for me to offer the amendment that I have prepared. But in case the gentlemen conclude that they have not had time to examine the matter carefully, and therefore can not accept it at this time, I hope before we reach the other section that they will have given the matter some attention and will realize its importance and will accept the amendment then if they do not accept the amendment now offered.

It is of the very greatest importance, if we are to have the free importation of meats in the United States—and I am not in favor of that, but the majority has willed it and I suppose it will be done—if we are to have free importation from all the world it is not asking too much of foreigners to ask that they shall have the meats they send as carefully and thoroughly inspected as the American must have his meats inspected at the place of slaughter here at home.

It is an amendment in the interest of the health of the American people. Gentlemen on the other side have from time to time insisted that the sole motive that had actuated them in the preparation of this bill was the welfare of the people. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that that is so, they certainly can not desire to expose the people of the country, and particularly the people in the crowded, congested districts of the great cities, to the dangers that will beset them from Argentina and Australia, where they can slaughter animals that are diseased and ship them here with no examination but that provided for under the pure food and drugs act.

As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] have clearly explained, that examination in the very nature of things can not be sufficiently efficient to be amply protective of the health of the people. Meats from tubercular cattle, after they have been cooled and chilled and preserved—if they are preserved—retain no trace whatever of the diseased character of the meat. The only way in which we can be protected from these great dangers is by the form of inspection that we require in our own country, and I call upon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and his colleagues, if they insist upon putting these articles on the free list, that they provide that they shall be shipped here in a pure and healthful state.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, meat may be more dangerous to health when untaxed than when it is taxed, but people usually do not consider it so. There was $816,958 worth of meat imported into the United States last year that paid a tax. The gentlemen on that side of the House are responsible for the laws of the country up to this time for the last 20 years, because they have been in control of the Government and we have not, and every word that has been said on the other side in the last 20 minutes, if it were true—that these meats can come in now and endanger public health—is an indictment against the Republican Party for not protecting the health of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But, fortunately for them, the indictment that they bring against themselves is not true. They have overlooked a law that this side of the House helped them put on the statute books some years ago, known as the pure-food law of this country. Section 11 of that act provides:

> Meat and food products imported into the United States shall be accompanied by a certificate of official inspection of a character to satisfy the Secretary of Agriculture that they are not dangerous to health, and each package of such articles shall bear a label which shall identify it as covered by the certificate, which certificate shall accompany or be attached to the invoice on which the entry is made.

Therefore, unless there is a certificate accompanying each shipment of meat into the country to-day, whether it is taxed or untaxed, the Secretary of Agriculture can prohibit its entry into the United States unless he is satisfied that it will not be injurious to health. That being true, I think it is absolutely unnecessary for us to debate an amendment that really is not germane to this bill and has not had careful consideration, that is offered here in a perfunctory manner, without opportunity for the committee to consider it.

No gentleman on that side of the House appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means, which announced over two years ago that we intended to put meat on the free list, to ask us to protect the health of the American people, which they are now complaining about, although some of the distinguished gentlemen who have been involved in this debate appeared before the committee and asked us to protect certain interests in their own States from competition from abroad.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman did not intend to say that he was reading from the law a moment ago, did he?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The pure-food laws, with rules and regulations.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, he was reading a regulation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That accompanies the law.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the law, he will find that regulation could not be enforced in that form if any one resisted it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the gentleman now not only indicts his own side, as he did a few moments ago, but he is now proceeding to indict the law he put on the statute books himself.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman make a distinction between a law and a regulation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Your Secretary of Agriculture, a very distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, from the State of the gentleman from Iowa who has just made this indictment, is the man who wrote this regulation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not now. I will say this to the gentleman: Of course, I understand that this proposition is introduced to try and create an issue. You do not dare stand up and say you are not in favor of free meat to the American people, but you are trying to create a side issue.

The distinguished Secretary of Agriculture from the State of Iowa wrote this regulation in conformity with what he believed he was authorized to do by the law which you enacted, and I will say to you that we do not propose at this late hour to attempt to revise a law without careful consideration. But the Democratic Party will have your law carefully investigated by a Democratic Secretary of Agriculture, who thoroughly understands his business, and if it is necessary to protect the health of the American people, the Democratic Party will write a law on the statute books that protects them. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that that side of the House is not interested in any provision that provides for the health of the American people. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The only interest that appeals to that side of the House is the question of prices. When you touch the question of the high cost of living in this bill you have touched the point that appeals to the gentleman from Alabama. This Democratic circular which I called attention to the other night [laughter on the Democratic side] has a great many items in it that refer to the meat schedule. Why, what did the circular do? It led the voters to believe that the Payne law increased the tariff on fresh meats. On the contrary, the Payne law reduced the tariff on fresh meat 25 per cent.

Now listen to this Democratic logic. They say that the reduction of 25 per cent in the tariff on fresh meats was followed by an increase in the price to the consumer of 150 per cent. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if a decrease of 25 per cent in the Payne law on fresh meats increased the price to the consumer 150 per cent, how much will it increase the price to the consumer by striking the tariff all off? [Applause on the Republican side.] But this whole proposition is false. It is also amusing, about as amusing as a little incident I heard the other day of a church congregation that had an economic craze. The church wanted to buy a new hymn book, and a man came around and said he would give them hymn books free if they would let his firm print an advertisement in it. They said all right, and in due time the books came, and the first Sunday morning after the hymn books arrived the choir rose in its place and sang:

Hark! the heavenly angels sing,
"Beecham's pills are just the thing!
Peace on earth and mercy mild,
Two for a man, one for a child."

[Laughter.]

The congregation repudiated the hymn book, and the people of the United States will repudiate the tariff bill, written on a platform such as the one you present to the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama referred to the pure-food law and, addressing this side of the House, referred to it as "your law." He never uttered a truer utterance. It was the Republicans who wrote the pure-food law upon the statute books without much help from the other side of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We gave you our votes, that is all.

Mr. MANN. No; you did not give us all the votes by any means.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Practically all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill puts sheep upon the dutiable list at 10 per cent; it puts mutton upon the dutiable list. If you kill a sheep you can bring in the wool free, you can bring in the mutton free, you can bring in the blood free, you can bring in the bones free, you can bring in the intestines and their contents free, you can bring in the hoofs free, you can bring in the skin free, you can bring in the tallow free, you can bring in the horns free; I do not know whether there is a tariff on the bleat or not, but there is nothing else that is not free after the animal is slaughtered, and yet you propose to put a tariff upon the live animal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 549? If not, the next paragraph is 552.

The Clerk read as follows:

552. Milk and cream, including milk or cream preserved or condensed, or sterilized by heating or other processes, and sugar of milk.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 23, after the word "cream," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, President Wilson in his celebrated address from "the throne" declared against "hothouses" and any "artificial arrangement" by which we may progress in this country, and the committee in the formation of this bill in paragraph 553, "mineral salts obtained by evaporation," and so forth, has lived up to the President's philosophy. It provides, with reference to mineral salts, which are used in many instances by and for the sick, that an authenticated certificate shall be produced and satisfactory proof had that they, the mineral salts, are "in no way artificially prepared."

Thus the committee and President Wilson agree in regard to "artifice" in a constructive work of this kind. Paragraph 552, preceding the one referred to, puts "milk and cream" on the free list and provides that they shall be admitted free, "including milk or cream preserved or condensed or sterilized by heating or other processes, and sugar of milk." In other words, milk and cream which are produced from the cows of Germany, Holland, Canada, or elsewhere may be condensed or sterilized and put into cans, if you please, by those artifices presumed to be superior to ours and transported across the water and sold to the consumers of the United States. But apart from the inconsistency shown in these two paragraphs, which are in juxtaposition here, is the fact that we condense and sterilize milk in the United States. We are amply able to do the work here, and we do it successfully and as well as it can be done in Holland, in Germany, or England, or Canada. Whether the philosophy of the President has slipped a cog or not, we ought to permit the American condenser and sterilizer of milk to do business here at the same old stand. It would give us milk a little fresher, it would give us a better chance against deterioration, and it would aid us in the matter of pure food.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 552? [After a pause.] If not, are there any amendments to 553? [After a pause.] If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 557?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, Mr. Chairman. I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 116, lines 16 and 17 and 18, strike out the paragraph which reads as follows:
"Moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured, not otherwise specially provided for in this section."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a large number of men are engaged, along the Atlantic seaboard, at least, for I have seen many of them, gathering seaweeds and moss and vegetable substances during the summer time. They find a use for it in upholstery and other industries. In this occupation, which has grown rapidly in recent years, a large number of men obtain a livelihood. In this bill it is proposed to put moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances on the free list, thus enabling those in foreign countries to send it here in competition with those who gather it here. If we refer to paragraph 383 in this bill we find there is a protection of 10 per cent guaranteed to the manufacturers of seaweed, moss, and vegetable substances brought in from other countries. As the tariff now stands, it is an inducement for those on the other side to send material in here. The manufacturer is protected, but the producer of the raw material is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 557? [After a pause.] If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 559?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 116, strike out paragraph 559, which reads as follows:
"559. Cut nails and cut spikes of iron or steel, horseshoe nails, hobnails, and all other wrought iron or steel nails not specially provided for in this section; wire staples, wire nails made of wrought iron or steel, spikes, and horse, mule, or ox shoes, of iron or steel, and cut tacks, brads, or sprigs."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the paragraphs in this bill, or one of its provisions, which can do no one any good, which loses the Government some revenue, and harms a great many. I know of no object for its introduction, except some people claim that it might reduce the price to the consumer. It will not. Cut nails and cut spikes, horseshoe nails, wire nails, and wire staples are so cheap now that any reduction might be made in the wholesale price, and which would be free as a result of this provision, would not result in a reduction of price to the consumer.

But this is not the chief objection to this section. It is a repetition of what has been running all through this bill—a provision putting the tariff on the partly finished product, as was contained in the metal schedules, where all the articles out of which these articles are made are on the dutiable list, and the finished product described in this paragraph is made free of duty.

It seems to have been especially invented in order to benefit the Steel Trust, which controls the material out of which these articles are made, and to drive out the small manufacturers. It is a special invitation to every small manufacturer in these lines to move his plant over into Canada, where he can get this material without being subject to so many restrictions, or to transfer his plant to some other country and then ship his product in here free of duty.

Now, what defense can there be for a provision like this? What excuse has been given anywhere along the line for paragraphs of this kind? Gentlemen on that side have sat still because they had no reason to give, and gave no excuse that would justify it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 559? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 567?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 117, lines 18 and 19, after the word "bean" in line 18, strike out the words "and olive oil rendered unfit for use as food or for any but mechanical or manufacturing purposes."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is an object lesson in Democratic consistency, and I introduce the amendment very largely for the purpose of awakening the Democratic conscience.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is that? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. The amendment provides for striking out the words "olive oil rendered unfit for use as food or for any but mechanical or manufacturing purposes." I understand the purpose of the Democratic Party, and the real purpose of this bill, to be to reduce the cost of living. Now, it is proposed to put on the free list olive oil that is rendered unfit for use as food, but which will be used "for manufacturing or mechanical purposes." Why does the Democratic Party throw this sop to the manufacturers? Why should the manufacturers have free olive oil which is unfit for use as food? If the Democratic Party wants to be consistent, and will be in this instance, it will adjust itself to paragraph 47, which provides that olive oils or fruit oils which come in for use as food shall be dutiable at the rate of 20 per cent. The food product is taxed at the rate of 20 per cent, but the manufacturer gets his oil free. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can not support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Olive oil rendered unfit for use as food or for any but for mechanical or manufacturing purposes is now on the free list in the Payne law.

When the chemical bill was presented by the Democratic side of the House it proposed to put this article upon the dutiable list, and the distinguished gentleman [Mr. HARRISON of New York] in charge of the bill stated that this drew the dividing line. "Why," he said, "should we place a tax upon olive oil used for food and permit olive oil used for manufacturing purposes to be admitted free?" "Why," he said, "should we charge the man a tax who eats oil and give free oil to the man who uses it in manufacturing?"

I offered an amendment to restore to the free list olive oil used for manufacturing purposes, or denatured olive oil; and I congratulate the gentlemen on that side of the House that their committee finally accepted the amendment which I then proposed. I was going to say I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] on his change of mind, but I am told—although I do not know how correct the statement may be—that this change of putting denatured olive oil on the free list was made over his protest, notwithstanding he was in charge of the chemical schedule of the bill. I have been told that the arguments which I presented to the House a year ago in reference to a number of these items persuaded the other members of the Democratic end of the Ways and Means Committee, so that they overruled my distinguished friend from New York, and they decided to put these articles upon the free list, although he insisted that these articles used in manufacturing ought to be put upon the dutiable list. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I never realized how eloquent my words were until I heard them proceed from the lips of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] And I venture to say if the gentleman from Illinois had been on the committee, making my speeches for me, olive oil, denatured, would have remained upon the tax list as it was on our bill last year.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] in presenting this matter to the House entirely overlooks or neglects to state that denatured olive oil has been on the free list ever since the days of the Wilson bill. It has been in the Dingley bill and in the Payne bill, and our bill only proposes to continue it in the same place. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, on the olive oil that is used for food, the Republicans left a tax which equals 40 per cent ad valorem, and we have reduced that to 20 per cent ad valorem. Under these circumstances I can not see the force of the gentleman's argument. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. The other people see it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] offers an amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph may close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. I notice, on page 118, line 1, the words—

And also spermaceti, whale, or other fish oils of American fisheries.

In an earlier part of the bill, page 9, paragraph 45, whale oil is to come in at 5 cents a gallon. Under the Payne bill whale oil comes in at 8 cents a gallon. Under that provision of the Payne law a new industry was started on the Pacific coast. A company known as the Tyee Co. was organized to manufacture whale oil. That company built several American vessels in American shipyards and paid $80,000 apiece for their construction.

There is a competing company operating in British Columbia that buys similar ships in Norwegian shipyards and pays therefor $23,000 each. That company also employs a Chinese crew and pays Chinese wages. The American company paid the wages that prevail on the Pacific coast. It also fed its employees at a cost of $1 per day for each man employed, while the Chinese employed by its Canadian competitor fed themselves. It also has had to pay the duty under the law for the harpoons, the hemp lines, and the bombs that are used in the business, and thus the expenses of the company were very considerable.

The company created a market in the United States for whale oil. It is used in the manufacture of liquid soap. The company was compelled to sell its first production at a loss to Glasgow manufacturers, because there was no demand for it in this country; but during the past two years it has been able to dispose of its product at remunerative prices to the soap manufacturers of the United States. The men who had invested their money in the business felt they had established a new American industry.

When it was found that the Democrats had obtained possession of Congress in both branches and that a Democratic President was elected the company realized that there would be a reduction in the duty on whale oil. The company had to fit out in March to do business, because the ships go to the Arctic Ocean to catch the whales there and render out the oil. This year they would have expended $150,000 in purchasing supplies and paying wages to American workmen. But realizing that the duty was to be cut, they found that it would be impossible for them to continue in the business. They did not expend a dollar in outfitting; they engaged no crew; they refused to advance $150,000 that would have been required to proceed in their business, although that business had been placed on a paying basis. They are selling out all of their supplies and their ships, and they have gone out of business.

The cut from 8 cents to 5 cents per gallon has put them out of business; they went out of business in anticipation of this cut. Yet gentlemen on the other side say that the fact that the Democrats elected a Congress and a President in 1892 had no effect upon the business of the country, because the Wilson tariff was not enacted until 1894. But I want to show the House a practical demonstration of the fact that men will not put their money into enterprises when they realize that a political party is put into power that will cut the duty so that an American industry can not be continued profitably. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, has the time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two minutes remaining yet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will take advantage of the two minutes remaining to say that I regret that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has got himself in such a stew over this matter. His constituents certainly were not mind readers. They started to go out of business before this bill was introduced, and not all the items in this bill have reduced the Payne rate; so they still had a chance. But I think the gentleman from California has most successfully demonstrated the fact that his constituents were busted and going out of business before this bill started. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there is anything to yield for.

Mr. KAHN. As a matter of fact, the company sent one of its representatives to appear before the Ways and Means Committee when you had hearings in anticipation of preparing this bill, and they were so well satisfied, as a result of the hearings, that the rates were to be cut that they decided to go out of business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but, as a matter of fact, I do not think the committee or any member of it had reached any conclusion on whale oil at that time, and no decision was rendered to the public in this matter until the 7th day of April, before which time your constituents had busted. The gentleman ought not to charge the bust to the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KAHN. Well, they were pretty well-to-do before that.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. Are there any amendments to paragraph 567? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 572?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 118, line 15, after the word "bags," strike out the words "used chiefly for paper making."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I am persuaded that the newspapers of the country, which the Democratic Party is now trying to serve, are not wholly unanimous as to the reduction of duty on paper stock, print paper, wood pulp, and things of that kind, and it may be that the party is overstepping the mark if it expects to have the united support of the journalists of this country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do we have the support of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in putting print paper valued at less than 2½ cents a pound on the free list? Can not the gentleman from Pennsylvania join with us in that effort?

Mr. MOORE. I am frank to say that you do not have my support in any proposition that is not amply protective. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a statement from the leading progressive newspaper in the United States; I may say it is the organ of the Progressive Party—the North American, of Philadelphia—whose fulminations each morning are the spirit and inspiration of those who believe in this holy cause. It is undoubtedly at variance with the Democratic Party on tariff matters, in that it charges the Democratic Party with bossism, and sets out a platform which undertakes to state its position, as follows:

"TARIFF SITUATION.

"This is apparently the Democratic policy as to the tariff:

"To pass the present bill, far superior to the Aldrich Act, by time-worn foes and caucus control.

"To resist all progressive amendments.

"To oppose all efforts to establish a nonpartisan tariff board of experts."

That is the first proposition. I have in my hand, now, a statement, double-leaded, from the same North American, a paper that is worth the 1 cent that we pay for it, which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read:

"AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

"Rumors are in circulation that the Public Ledger's advance to 2 cents a copy is only the first step toward similar action on the part of all other Philadelphia morning papers; that the change is to be made at different times, so as to avoid conflict with the Federal law against combinations. While we can not speak for any other paper, the North American has no intention of raising the price to 2 cents. The price of the daily North American will remain at 1 cent, although such a newspaper at such a price is the cheapest of all commodities. Since we did not find it necessary to make any change when the cost of the best quality of print paper, such as we always have used, was at high-water mark, we feel that an advance at the present time would be unwarrantable, in the face of probable reduction, due to new tariff regulations."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Public Ledger is a great newspaper and it is worth 2 cents; I do not object to its raising its price. And the North American is a great paper and it is worth 1 or 2 cents, whichever it cares to charge, but it states that it does not intend to take advantage of the lower duty and thus increase the price to the consumer, as it charges the Ledger with doing. And so the North American is consistent in this respect and differs from other journals of the country. I quote from what it said in an editorial July 24, 1911:

"The North American, like every other American newspaper of large circulation, will be a beneficiary of the measure. But we must repeat what we have said over and over again during the debates in Congress. That merely because we consider honest and equitable a reduction of the paper schedules of the tariff which would save the North American large sums of money every year is no reason why this newspaper should give its indorsement to an agreement which is to our self-interest, but in nearly every other clause is a sham and a perversion of real reciprocity and an imposition upon millions of people.

"And this position we maintain in no holier-than-thou pose of saintly unselfishness, but in our fixed belief that the only permanently profitable way for a newspaper to act with the people is the square deal.

"We dissent emphatically from the view held by thousands of newspapers and thus expressed by the Hearst papers, whose benefits under the Taft pact are estimated at more than $400,000 annually:

"Having fought all other popular battles unselfishly, have we not earned the right to fight our own?"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has vouched for the integrity and truthfulness of the Philadelphia North American, and has also stated that under the Payne bill the conditions of the wage earners are most excellent, and I want to read from that paper that he has vouched for an extract as to the conditions in Philadelphia. I read from the North American of the 28th of April. It can not be said that this is a last year's paper:

"Any large body of wage-earning families, if dropped below a now fairly well defined standard of living, speedily becomes a seed bed for the nurture of the inefficient and criminal individuals who are the bulk of the goods on sale in the business of prostitution. With low income belong overcrowding, bad sanitation, anemia, degenerating amusements, a shortened term of education, religious decay—all the conditions which work directly against health and decency; which corrupt the general morale of life among both children and adults as to modesty, reticence, cleanliness of mind and person, reserve or control of action; which make it almost surely a losing fight to try to raise a family of children to decency as it is understood among thoughtful wage earners.

"But for the existence of such conditions the commission would have been fatally limited in considering and publicly discussing the evils upon which rest the most hideous and humanly destructive of vices. How vitally it regards them is best evidenced by the fact that it constitutes as the cornerstone of its findings the need for a living wage, thus emphasized:

"Large groups of men in Philadelphia earn annually a wage about $200 below the amount estimated as a 'living' wage in this city for a family of father, mother, and three children. Such a family status as to income insures deterioration physically and socially for the individual and for the family as a unit and social group. Exceptions to this truth are negligible."

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that the North American always tells the truth.

Mr. MOORE. No; I did not. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. He is absolutely apologizing for his own witness. If he were a lawyer he would know that the invariable rule of law is that when a man introduces a witness he vouches for his integrity, unless the witness takes him by surprise, and the gentleman is never taken by surprise.

Mr. CULLOP. And he is not allowed to impeach him.

Mr. BURNETT. No; he is not allowed to impeach him; when he undertakes to impeach his own witness he impeaches himself. I believe in the integrity of the gentleman's witness against the statement of the gentleman himself. [Laughter.] Here is the witness, the very same witness the gentleman vouched for a minute ago. He undertakes now to say that it is a lying witness. I do not believe it. I believe his witness told the truth one time, and I think it tells the truth now.

Mr. Chairman, that is a deplorable condition, to think that in the city of William Penn and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]—the twins, Penn and the gentleman from Pennsylvania—there are actually men who, under the Payne law, are to-day earning $200 less than it takes to support them. I presume that the gentleman from his princely salary, and from that of the institutions and the steel trusts of his country, will make up the difference and allow these people to keep from going to the poorhouse. At least, I hope he will do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offered an amendment to strike out paragraph 572?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 118, line 15, after the word "bags" strike out the words "used chiefly for paper making."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will change my request and ask that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, shortly before the recess for dinner this evening the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a statement in regard to the reasons why there should not be a tariff on fine cotton goods, and, as I understood it, he stated that it was because fine cotton goods could not be made in this country of as fine grade as they are made in lands across the seas. He stated the reason for that was that there was need of humidity in the atmosphere, which was provided in foreign lands, but could not be produced in this country either naturally or by a humidifying process, this being necessary for the successful manufacture of fine cotton fabrics in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state for the information of the Chairman and for the information of the committee that in the city of Fall River there are very many of the 111 cotton mills located there which make the finer grades of cotton yarn that are equal to any cotton yarn made anywhere in the world, and in the adjoining city of New Bedford, about 12 miles away, there are a large number of cotton mills, nearly every one of which makes the finer grades of cotton yarns and the finer grades of cloth, not equaled anywhere else in the world. Since 1909 more than 15 mills, of a million dollars' capital each, have been built in New Bedford for the purpose of manufacturing fine cotton goods.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. DONOVAN. I wanted to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, because it is a direct contradiction of the position the chairman of the committee took in regard to the manufacture of cotton just before the recess.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that I stated that a great many gentlemen gave a great many reasons why this could not be done, and that this is one of the reasons why it can not be done. The reasons impressed me, whether it impresses the gentleman from Massachusetts or not.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There is no need for any attempt to make an impression upon me, because I have eyes and ears. I see this process of the manufacture of the finer grades of cotton goods every day when I am at home. The business is carried on there, and I will state to the gentleman that humidifiers are successfully used every day in a great many manufacturing cities and towns in the United States.

The Almighty has furnished the district which I have the honor to represent and also the district represented by my Democratic colleague, Mr. THACHER, with an atmosphere which makes this section of Massachusetts the center for manufacturing cotton goods, and nothing like the atmosphere that exists there can be produced by machine humidifiers; but I will state further that humidifiers are used in the city of Woonsocket, which is represented on this floor by Mr. KENNEDY, of Rhode Island, and they are used successfully very largely throughout the Southern States, where Mr. Parker, who appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means, makes cotton goods of the finer grades of yarn that are coming in competition with the finer grades that are made in Fall River and in New Bedford; and if the gentleman had been familiar with the goods made there and had seen the samples of the goods made, he would not for one moment question the fact that they can make the cotton goods in many of the manufacturing centers in this country, and the reductions proposed in the bill now under consideration relative to cotton goods will make competition from abroad prove very injurious, not only to the manufacturers, but to every person employed in the mills, and I will add that the wages paid in these finer grades of goods are larger than paid in any other line of the cotton industry.

Mr. Chairman, if the Committee on Ways and Means had expeditiously and earnestly pursued their inquiries relative to the manufacture of fine cotton goods from American operatives and manufacturers instead of gaining their information as I very much fear from those who were more interested in the manufacture of goods abroad and who were anxious to enjoy the advantage of the American market, and provide competition which should stimulate the American manufacturer to use greater economy, I think they would have produced a better bill and the country would have had the opportunity to enjoy greater prosperity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, on last Saturday evening, I believe it was, I stated that the working conditions in West Virginia in respect to miners were the worst anywhere in the country; that they were paid less. And I was replied to by gentlemen on the other side of the House that I did not know anything about West Virginia or enough about this tariff bill to have the right to vote on it. I have spent some time in securing statistics, and they bear out what I said on Saturday night, and more. I have a statement prepared here, but I want to say that in West Virginia they not only pay less per ton than any coal-mining district in the United States, but that the labor cost per ton in mining coal in the United States is cheaper than anywhere in the world.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I happened to be out of the Chamber for a moment, and I want to know if the gentleman is discussing the coal question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that the gentleman can not interrupt the gentleman by a parliamentary inquiry, he can make the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not want to do that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I trust that this will not be taken out of my time. I will give statistics and documentary evidence in proof of the statements which follow.

During the discussion of the tariff schedule on coal the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] complained very seriously about putting bituminous coal on the free list, charging that if this were done the mine workers employed in the mining industry of his State would suffer as a result. He further charged that myself or any other Democrat would not get an audience from the mine workers of his State if we were to favor this tariff schedule as it applies to bituminous coal. He further stated that the mine workers, regardless of their political beliefs, all favored a protective tariff on bituminous coal.

I have made some investigation to ascertain what advantages the present 45 cents per ton tariff rate has been to the mine workers of West Virginia. The coal produced for eastern shipments in competition with Canadian coal is mined chiefly in the nonunion coal fields of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and West Virginia, where worse conditions of employment prevail than in any mining section of this country.

I am going to prove to the satisfaction of every Member of this House that the conditions of employment and the general environment of the mine workers in West Virginia, in the very district that Mr. AVIS comes from, are a disgrace to American civilization.

During all these years the mine workers of West Virginia are supposed to have been protected by a tariff on coal; they have received the smallest wages of any mine workers in the United States. In proof of this the Census Bureau figures for the year 1912 show that the average wage cost of producing a ton of coal in West Virginia was 58 cents against 68 cents in Pennsylvania, 74 cents in Ohio, 81 cents in Indiana, and 82 cents in Illinois. The wages paid per ton in West Virginia is about 20 cents per ton less than the average price paid, taking all coal producing States as an average. In addition to being the poorest paid mine workers in the United States, an abundance of evidence can be produced to show that the coal companies maintain a system of peonage at the mines in the very district where the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. AVIS] comes from. For more than one year the miners of West Virginia in the Kanawha field have been engaged in a strike for industrial freedom. They demanded the abolition of the guard system, which consists of a band of gunmen or thugs employed by the coal companies to brutally beat or murder them, if necessary, should they rebel against the conditions of employment. They demanded honest weights, which means that the coal companies were stealing weight from them. They demanded the abolition of the company stores, commonly known as "pluck-me" stores, where the miner is finally robbed of the last cent of his earnings. They demanded a shorter workday. In other States mine workers have had an 8-hour workday since 1898. In West Virginia they are still required to work 10 or more hours. They demanded semimonthly pays and numerous other improvements in conditions.

The mine workers in West Virginia do not receive as good treatment as the negro slaves received from their masters before their emancipation. West Virginia seceded from Virginia because the citizens disagreed on the question of negro slavery, and I repeat that the conditions of the mine workers are worse than those of the negro slaves at any time in history.

In the district where the gentleman from West Virginia comes from martial law has been declared, and men and women charged with violation of law are tried by court-martial and sentenced to terms in the penitentiary. They are denied the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of West Virginia. Mother Jones, the best-known and most-loved woman among the toiling miners of the United States, has been arrested by the military authorities and detained as a prisoner near the military camp for more than two months and denied the right of a trial by jury. This old gray-haired veteran, who has devoted her life to social uplift work, now in her eightieth year, is held a prisoner because she dared to raise her voice in protest against the wrongs and injustices inflicted on the mine workers, their wives, and families in West Virginia.

This is the condition that prevails in West Virginia, where the coal companies are howling for a protective tariff. In West Virginia, where the coal company corporations dominate the politics of the State, the coal companies get the benefit of the protective tariff, and they are then protected by the military authorities of the State in exploiting the mine workers and keeping them in a condition of slavery. The mine workers have no protection. Should they rebel against the conditions of employment enforced upon them they are beaten up, shot down, or ordered to leave the State. Anyone going from another State to assist them to organize for their protection is treated likewise.

Reports from the proceedings of the court-martial hearings recently held in the gentleman's district show that citizens of other States were deceived by the misrepresentation of labor agents in the employ of these coal companies, who induced them by flattering promises to go to West Virginia. Men passed through this very city, the Capital of the United States, who were held prisoners in the railroad cars at the Washington Union Station, taken into West Virginia mining camps, and there held against their will; men who never saw a coal mine were forced to go to work in them under threats of being killed. They were deprived of communicating with the outside world, and denied the privilege of leaving the place where they were detained at the mining camp under threats of being killed.

I have here copies of numerous affidavits presented at the court-martial hearings in the gentleman's district to prove my assertion. In addition to this, two men were recently convicted in the courts of Pennsylvania for violating the Mann white-slave act, and are now serving terms in the penitentiary, convicted for transporting a number of young women from towns in Pennsylvania to the coal-mining camps in West Virginia, to be used for immoral purposes. These girls were deceived and led to believe they would be given suitable employment in hotels.

Let me further add that West Virginia has the highest fatal-accident list per thousand employees of any other State in the Union or any other coal-mining country in the world, all of which is a discredit to the State. The mine workers need no protective tariff, but they do need the protection of our Federal Government; and I hope the Kern resolution now pending in the Senate will be passed and an investigation held, the results of which will shock every liberty-loving citizen of this and other countries. West Virginia might properly be termed the Siberia of America. The mine workers' organization, having 400,000 members, have not declared themselves against putting coal on the free list. No complaint has come to me or to any other Congressman to my knowledge, notwithstanding the fact that two representatives of this great organization are here permanently stationed in Washington to look after their interests.

Let the gentlemen from West Virginia notify the coal corporation to abolish the practices now in effect that make slaves of the mine workers; let them grant the same conditions of employment and wages that the mine workers have in other States; and it will not be necessary for them to pay immigration commissioners and other agents to induce immigrants to go to West Virginia to work in the mines; and the mining industry will not require a protective tariff, and the Republican governor of West Virginia will not be required to declare martial law or deny citizens of this country the rights and liberties guaranteed by the Constitution of these United States.

The following extract from the Literary Digest of April 5, 1913, relative to strike conditions in West Virginia, is further evidence of the un-American conditions which recently existed in the West Virginia coal fields:

Although the prolonged and warlike miners' strike in West Virginia seems to the press to be rapidly approaching a settlement, it promises to leave behind it a vital constitutional question which will not be answered until the United States Supreme Court has spoken. This question is, Can the civil law be suspended in time of peace and trial by jury for civilians be superseded by a drumhead court-martial? In the Paint Creek and Cabin Creek districts of Kanawha County, the scene of the rioting and bloodshed described in our issue for February 22, a state of martial law exists and justice is administered by a military commission. Among the many prisoners who have come before this commission are five labor leaders—"Mother" Jones, C. H. Boswell, John W. Brown, Charles Batley, and Paul J. Paulsen—who, after demanding in vain a trial by jury, have challenged its jurisdiction by refusing to put up any defense against the charge of murder conspiracy, thereby hoping to enable their lawyers to carry the case by appeal to the Nation's highest tribunal. John Brown, in a letter to his wife and published in the Socialist New York Call, makes clear his view of the situation in the following passages:

"If it was only myself personally that was concerned, I would, for the sake of gaining my liberty and being free to go to you and the children, go before this court and defend myself. Nor have I the least doubt in my mind that I would come clear. But, my dear, there are principles involved in this case infinitely deeper than the fate of any one citizen. If the capitalist class get away with this, then constitutional government is dead, liberty is dead, and justice for the working class is a thing of the past.

"Already have they scuttled the ship of state; they have strangled justice; they have cut the throat of liberty. They have stolen the jewel of liberty from the crown of manhood and reduced the victims of the burglary to slavery and to prison; and, I repeat, if we let them get away with it, then in the future, wherever and whenever the interests of the working class and the capitalist class reach an acute stage, out will come the militia, the courts will be set aside, and the leaders railroaded to the military bull pens and thence to the penitentiaries. Here lies the great danger.

"This case can not now be settled until it has reached the bar of the Nation's conscience. In order to do this the sleepy old public must have another victim. We boys have made up our minds to go to the pen; this will give the lawyers a ground to test the case before the Supreme Court, and we will trust to our comrades to keep up the agitation.

"The history of this case must go to the common people. It must be told o'er and o'er again, until the deafest ear will hear and the numbest brain will act. The American people must see Holly Grove and Hansford as I saw them of February 8, 9, and 10. They must not only see, but they must hear the moaning of the broken hearts and the wailing of the funeral dirge; they must see the hot tears of orphans and widows falling on the glassy eyes and bullet-mangled faces of dead husbands and fathers; they must see these tented dwellings in the dead of winter and the poor wretches that occupy them. Aye, they must not only see, but they must know the cause."

These prisoners will base their appeal, according to the United Mine Workers' Journal (Indianapolis), upon the following clauses of the constitution of West Virginia:

"The military shall be subordinate to the civil power, and no citizen, unless engaged in the military service of the State, shall be tried or punished by any military court for any offense that is cognizable by the civil courts of the State. * * *

"The provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State are operative alike in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom or violation thereof, under the plea of necessity or any other plea, is subversive of good government and tends to anarchy or despotism."

In the local courts the contentions of the prisoners have met with little encouragement. Judge Littlepage, of the United States circuit court, after first issuing a writ of habeas corpus on the theory that the defendants had a right to a trial by jury, reversed his opinion and decided that "a Federal judge has no right to interfere with a court-martial duly organized under the laws of the State," and at the same time the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals upheld the governor's right to declare martial law and to appoint a military commission.

Outside the State affected, however, we find a widespread tendency on the part of editorial observers to agree with the defendants that this suspension of civil law establishes a dangerous precedent. "This thing of trying civilians by court-martial is a dangerous proceeding, for, if allowed, there is hardly any limit to its abuse," remarks the Houston Post; and the New York Evening Post agrees that it is a "vicious practice." "West Virginia does what the United States can not do," says the New York World, "it suspends the civil law in time of peace." This paper continues:

"The President of the United States is specifically forbidden to suspend the writ of habeas corpus except in cases of invasion or rebellion. The governor of West Virginia exercises that power in the presence of a sordid disagreement over work and wages.

"There can be no such thing as martial law under Federal sanction even in time of war except in territory in which the civil authority has ceased. The civil courts of West Virginia, in full operation, are ignored by tribunals presided over by militiamen.

"More than the welfare of one monopoly-ridden State is involved in this tyranny. It menaces the peace of every State. It is a wrong that will rankle in millions of hearts. It is an injustice that will embitter political and industrial controversies from sea to sea. It is an error that even the most infatuated of employers must see can lead only to mischief and reprisal.

"The American people will not be denied trial by jury. They will not submit to despotism. If the puppets of privilege who now dragoon West Virginia do not know this, some of their powerful friends and backers among the coal magnates should instruct them speedily."

And in the Buffalo Express we find the situation thus tersely stated:

"The United States is at peace with all the countries of the world. Within our own borders there is no civil strife of which the Federal Government has taken cognizance. Yet in West Virginia a State military commission may pass its judgment of life or death on persons who are accused of murder in connection with the strike riots in the Kanawha mining district. Among the defendants is Mother Jones, 'the angel of the miners.' The issue to be decided in a court-martial in her case is the same that arose at Lawrence during the trial of Ettor, Giovannitti, and Caruso. The right of free speech similarly was involved in the rioting at Little Falls. At Lawrence a jury of 12 men decided that the speeches of the defendants did not incite murder. In West Virginia the same question is to be decided according to military practices."

Although Gov. Hatfield has not seen his way clear to lift the edict of martial law imposed by his predecessor, his personal investigation of conditions and his blending of firmness with clemency are believed to have been large factors in bringing the difficulty as far along the road to settlement as it has come. Thus he has released, on promise to keep the peace, the majority of the miners held for trial by the military commission, and since his intervention the operators of the Paint Creek district have made concessions which bring between 3,000 and 4,000 miners back to work. This leaves about 7,000 miners of the Cabin Creek district still on strike.

In the Paint Creek region, according to Mr. John P. White, international president of the United Mine Workers, the demands of the men have in the main been granted. Among the points gained, we learn from the dispatches, are: The right to organize, payment twice a month, and the employment of checkweighmen. The character of these concessions, remarks the Springfield Republican, "shows that the coal companies in the West Virginia fields have been backward in the treatment of their employees compared with the Pennsylvania coal companies." In this connection the New York Tribune, which seldom sides with the strikers in a labor war, remarks:

"If anywhere in the world workmen need organization in order to protect their interests it is in the West Virginia coal-mining district, where the strike is. * * *

"In the West Virginia coal fields the mine operators are the landlords, the local merchants—for the miners trade at the company stores—and they are very much of the local government so far as there is any in those mountains. Indeed, they have always been a large part of the State government, too. Each way the miner turns he comes up against the employing corporation. When he rents a house it must be at the company's terms. When he buys food and clothes he must pay the company's prices. And when he seeks his legal rights, it must be from authorities that are likely to be subservient to the great local industry. It is a species of industrial serfdom to which he is subjected. * * *

"All American instinct for fair play opposes leaving workers as defenseless against aggression and oppression as these West Virginia miners, unorganized, are."

Memoranda relating to classification of mines according to the number of hours operated and the average expense at mines for salaries, wages, and other purposes.

The classification of mines according to the number of hours operated covers all the mines reported in each State. The number of hours reported by the mines is the number of hours per shift. Miners and miners' laborers—i. e., wage earners paid by the ton or by the mine car—are not held strictly to this number of hours work per day.

In regard to the average expense per ton for salaries, wages, and other purposes, it should be noted that all mines have been excluded from the accompanying tables for which the expense reported included the cost of making coke at the mines, i. e., the expense shown relates strictly to coal mining.

It should also be noted that those mines have been excluded from this table at which the production of coal was merely incidental to the development of the property.

The average expense per ton shown for wages is not the average amount paid per ton to miners and miners' laborers, but is the total of all wages paid. In addition to the amount paid by the ton or mine car to miners and miners' laborers this item of average wages also includes an average amount per ton paid to engineers, firemen, blacksmiths, carpenters, drivers, trappers, cagers, trackmen, tipple men, etc., i. e., men paid by the day, who constitute about 25 per cent of the total number of wage earners in the Ohio and Pennsylvania mines included in this table and 34 and 37 per cent of the wage earners in the mines of Maryland and West Virginia, respectively, included in this table:

It seems to me that I have given sufficient information to satisfy any fair-minded person. The statement made by me Saturday night that the working conditions for miners were worse in the West Virginia mines than any other mining locality in the United States was a moderate statement, and I repeat that such a condition is a disgrace to American civilization, and should bring the blush of shame to public-spirited and conscientious people's faces.

I wish to here insert the dissenting opinion of Judge Ira E. Robinson, of the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, as further evidence that the constitutional rights and liberties that our Revolutionary forefathers spilt their blood for have been violated in the State of West Virginia.

DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE IRA E. ROBINSON, OF THE SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The majority opinion boldly asserts that the sacred guaranties of our State constitution may be set aside and wholly disregarded on the plea of necessity. It had long been supposed that such a doctrine was forever condemned and foreclosed in this State. It was believed that the ringing denouncement against that doctrine in the opening sentences of our constitution was sufficient to bar it from recognition by any citizen, official, or judge. The unmistakable words were supposed to be too clear ever to endanger our people by a disregard of their meaning. Hear them: "The provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State are operative alike in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom or violation thereof under the plea of necessity or any other plea is subversive of good government, and tends to anarchy and despotism." (Art. I, sec. 3.)

How closely akin are these words to those that were uttered by the Supreme Court of the United States shortly prior to the adoption of our constitution: "The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances. No doctrine, involving more pernicious consequences, was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism, but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false, for the government, within the constitution, has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence." (Ex. parte Milligan, 4 Wall., 120.)

A decision based on that which our people have so clearly condemned and inhibited from recognition in our State government, and which the highest tribunal in the land has so plainly declared to be pernicious and to have no place in our form of government, meets my emphatic dissent.

It is not difficult to comprehend why our State constitution contains such a clear and unmistakable protest against the disregard of constitutional guaranties under the plea of necessity. During the decade immediately preceding the making and adoption of that instrument this doctrine of necessity was a live issue before the American people. Indeed, just at the close of the Civil War, and immediately thereafter, the doctrine was one of the foremost issues of the times. Events brought it vividly before the Nation. Those who applied the doctrine during the war at its close for the summary trial and execution of noncombatants were met with the accusation of murder from both North and South. Even in one of the counties of this State a citizen was summarily deprived of his life under the plea of military rule and the doctrine that necessity suspended the constitution. Instances of this character, as well as the many instances of imprisonment without civil trial, caused the question to come immediately before the statesmen of the times and, by the debates upon it, to come directly before all the people. The people had become thoroughly familiar with the subject. Great men of the North, foremost among them the illustrious Garfield, had thundered against the doctrine. And at last the great judicial tribunal of the Nation had set its seal of condemnation upon it. (Ex parte Milligan, supra.) But even after this, and only two years prior to the assembling of our constitutional convention, the question came again before the country in the celebrated cases in North Carolina arising from the use of the militia of that State in the suppression of the Ku Klux Klan. (Ex parte Moore et al., 64 N. C., 802.) These cases, because of the marked clash between the military power and the judiciary, again made the country to notice the question and to observe that the principle of necessity, though denounced by the Supreme Court of the United States, was claimed for the purpose of ignoring the guaranties of a State constitution. And again, in the face of the most stubborn resistance from the executive and military arm of the government of North Carolina, the principle that the plea of necessity could deprive one of constitutional trial by jury was rejected, with marked emphasis, in an opinion by the eminent Chief Justice Pearson of that State.

So it was that when our constitutional convention assembled in 1872 the persistent claim that necessity could abrogate a constitutional provision naturally came to be considered. That convention saw, by the recent example in North Carolina, that notwithstanding the condemnation that this doctrine of necessity had received from the greatest and most cautious minds of the country, it was likely still to be claimed in State government. Hence, the strong men of that convention deemed it essential to make clear pronouncement against such a doctrine ever finding hold in West Virginia. They had become fully advised about the question by having been face to face with it. The people who approved and ratified the constitution were advised by the same experience. They hated the doctrine that a constitution might be set aside or declared inoperative at the will of an official created by that constitution itself, as all lovers of constitutional government hate such a doctrine. Therefore, as a part of their compact of government, they adopted the forceful declaration against abrogating the guaranties of that compact, at any time, on the plea of necessity. Let us again bring that declaration to mind: "The provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State are operative alike in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom, or violation thereof, under the plea of necessity, or any other plea, is subversive of good government, and tends to anarchy and despotism." Can there be any mistake about the meaning of these words? Were they put in the Constitution for mere sound? No; they were put there to bind—to be sacredly kept.

Martial law can not rightly be sanctioned in West Virginia in the face of this constitutional declaration. For, as the majority opinion admits, martial law is a departure from the constitution, a plain violation thereof, under the plea of necessity. It substitutes the law of a military commander for the law of the constitution. It is the total abrogation of orderly presentment and trial by jury, so jealously guarded by the constitution. Then, since martial law is such a plain departure from the constitution, that instrument itself brands martial law as subversive to good government and as tending to anarchy.

Having made this general declaration against martial rule, the makers of our constitution went further. They provided that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should not be suspended. This was a radical change from the constitution of 1863, and was radically different from the Constitution of the United States. Our constitution of 1863 had provided: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended except when in time of invasion, insurrection, or other public danger the public safety may require it." The Constitution of the United States provides: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it." But in the making of our present constitution, in dealing with the great writ of freedom, no exception was made. Again unmistakable, imperative words were used: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended." (Art. III, sec. 4.) The people clearly meant something by the change. They evidently meant exactly what they said—that the great writ, which any citizen deprived of his liberty without due form of law may command, should in no case be suspended under a claim of necessity for military rule. Having so plainly declared in general terms against the doctrine of necessity in the former provision, as we have seen, they made this provision as to the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus to conform to that former declaration. They well knew that the exceptions contained in their former constitution, if retained, would lead to the temptation of encroachment on the guaranties of the constitution they were making. By providing that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should at all times be available, they were simply again providing against the claim that constitution guaranties may be suspended on the plea of necessity; for, as long as the writ of habeas corpus is available, constitutional guaranties can not be ignored. That which Blackstone said about the constitution of his country is equally applicable to ours: "Magna Charta only, in general terms, declared that no man should be imprisoned contrary to law; the habeas corpus act points him out effectual means, as well to release himself, though committed even by the king in council, as to punish all those who shall thus unconstitutionally misuse him." (Book IV, 439.) This great, effective writ, by the terms of our State constitution, is always available to any citizen deprived of a constitutional guaranty. Since it is so available at all times, how can any departure from the constitution be allowed? Indeed the provision that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended is itself virtually a prohibition against martial law, for the availability of the writ and the recognition of martial law are totally inconsistent. "Suspension of the writ of habeas corpus is essentially a declaration of martial law." (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 10, p. 465.) "Promulgation and operation of martial law within the limits of the Union would necessarily be a virtual suspension of the habeas corpus writ for the time being." (De Hart's Military Law, 18.) "The declaration of martial law in the State has the effect of suspending it." (Cooley, Principles of Constitutional Law, 301.) "Practically, in England and the United States, the essence of martial law is the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus; that is, the withdrawal of a particular person or a particular place or district of country from the authority of the civil tribunals." (Halleck's International Law, vol. 1, p. 502. See also May's Constitutional History, ch. 11.) The great Lincoln so understood it. In his proclamation he merely suspended the writ of habeas corpus. (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 6.) The founders of our State government really could have inhibited martial law by no stronger terms: "The privileges of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended."

Not content with the two declarations against martial law which we have seen, the founders grew even more specific. They again said, "The military shall be subordinate to the civil power; and no citizen, unless engaged in the military service of the State, shall be tried or punished by any military court for any offense that is cognizable by the civil courts of the State." (Art. III, sec. 12.) There is no ambiguity in these words. He who runs may read. They directly strike at martial law; they directly inhibit martial law; for the height of martial law is the supplanting of the civil courts by military courts. But this provision expressly ordains that military courts shall never take the place of the civil courts of the State for the trial of civil offenses. No military sentence for a civil offense can rightly stand in the face of these words. Nor can these words rightly be overlooked in order to uphold any such military sentence. To do so is to make the constitution a rope of sand.

The men of the constitutional convention of 1872 had all witnessed the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and the trial and sentence of citizens by military courts. They had learned that departure from the constitution, though dictated by the best of motives, was liable to abuse. Experience admonished them to guard against anything of the kind in the future of their State. They no doubt believed that by the three provisions which we have noticed they had banished all claim for martial law in this State. Determination to do so was plainly dictated to them by the experiences through which they had passed. By those experiences they had come to know the truth of that which Hamilton had written long years before, "Every breach of the fundamental laws, though dictated by necessity, impairs that sacred reverence which ought to be maintained in the breast of rulers toward the constitution of a country, and forms a precedent for other breaches, where the same plea of necessity does not exist at all, or is less urgent and palpable." (The Federalist, No. 25.)

Can these direct provisions of our constitution be overcome by any implication that the people meant to retain martial law whenever an executive declared it necessary? Is there a presumption, as the majority opinion claims, against intent on the part of the people to abolish martial law? Can any such presumption prevail against the direct declarations which absolutely negative any such presumption? No; the principle of martial law can not be inherently connected with any constitutional government in which the constitution itself directly declares against the principle as our Constitution does.

It is said that the State must live. So must the citizen live and have liberty—the constitutional guaranties vouchsafed to him. The founders of our State government saw fit to exclude this claimed theory of implied or presumed right of self-defense in a State. They knew it to be absolutely unnecessary as to any State in the American Union under the Constitution of the United States. They knew that it was even more likely to lead to abuse than to good. They could well afford to disclaim it by positive prohibitions against its exercise; for the Constitution of the Union fully protected the State. Were they not consistent in denouncing and prohibiting a principle of self-defense wholly out of harmony with constitutional government and in relying on the safety vouched to the State by the General Government of the Union of which it is a part? Was not the guaranty of the great General Government sufficient for the continued life of the State? That guaranty speaks plainly, "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence." (Art. IV, sec. 4.) Does the State for its preservation need methods so at variance with constitutional guaranties as is martial law when it may obtain the power of the Union to suppress even domestic violence? Can not the militia and the United States Army pacify any section of the State, or the whole State, by methods strictly within the Constitution and laws? It was so believed when the Federal Government was formed. (Federalist, No. 42.) Referring to this guaranty by the General Government, a renowned author and judge says: "This article, as has been truly said, becomes an immense acquisition of strength and additional force to the aid of any State government in case of internal rebellion or insurrection against lawful authority." (Cooley, Principles of Constitutional Law, 206. See also 1 Tucker's Blackstone, App., 367.)

It is claimed that the power given by the constitution to the governor, as commander in chief of the military forces of the State, to call out the same to execute the laws, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion authorize a proclamation of martial law. Are these words to undo every other guaranty in the instrument? Can we overturn the many clear, direct, and explicit provisions, all tending to protect against substituting the will of one for the will of the people by merest implication from the provision quoted? That provision gives the governor power to use the militia to execute the laws as the constitution and legislative acts made in pursuance thereof provide they shall be executed. It certainly gives him no authority to execute them otherwise. In the execution of the laws the constitution itself must be executed as the superior law. The governor may use the militia to suppress insurrection and repel invasion, but that use is only for the purpose of executing and upholding the laws. He can not use the militia in such a way as to oust the laws of the land. It is put into his hands to demand allegiance and obedience to the laws. It therefore can not be used by him for the trial of civil offenses according to his own will and law, for so to use it would be to subvert the very purpose for which it is put into his hands. By the power of the militia he may, if the necessity exists, arrest and detain any citizen offending against the laws; but he can not imprison him at his will, because the constitution guarantees to that offender trial by jury—the judgment of his peers. He may use military force where force in disobedience to the laws demand it, but military force against one violating the laws of the land can have no place in the trial and punishment of the offender. The necessity for military force is at an end when the force of the offender in his violation of the law is overcome by his arrest and detention. There may be force used in apprehending the offender and in bringing him to constitutional justice, but surely none can be applied in finding his guilt and fixing his punishment.

It is further claimed that the statute which says that the governor may declare a state of war in towns, cities, districts, or counties where invasion, insurrection, rebellion, or riot exists is legislative authority for martial law. (Code 1906, ch. 18, sec. 92.) The readiest answer to this argument is that a declaration of war is not a declaration of martial law. The mere presence of war does not set aside constitutional rights and the ordinary course of the laws. Civil courts often proceed in the midst of war. Again, if the act could be construed to contemplate martial law, it would be plainly contrary to the provisions of the State constitution which we have noticed and would be utterly invalid. Moreover, it is not within the power of a State legislature, even when not so directly forbidden as is ours, to authorize martial law. Martial law rests not on constitutional, congressional, or legislative warrant; it rests wholly on actual necessity. Nothing else can ever authorize it. And that necessity is reviewable by the courts. These views are ably supported by one of the most thoughtful and impartial students of the martial law that recent years has produced—himself Judge Advocate General of the United States Army—G. Norman Lieber. In his learned review on the subject, published as a War Department document, hereinafter to be specifically cited, he says: "It has also been asserted that the principle that the constitutional power to declare war includes the power to use the customary and necessary means effectively to carry it on lies at the foundation of martial law. I can not agree to the proposition. It is positively repudiated by those who justify martial law on the ground of necessity alone, and the Supreme Court of the United States stands committed to no such theory." This is high authority, coming, as it does, from a military source. The Judge Advocate General rests not content with individual assertions; he resorts to the decisions and to sound reasons for his conclusions. He repudiates the view of the minority judges in the Milligan case. He says further: "If the question were at the present time to arise whether the legislature of a State has the power to declare martial law, we would, in the first place, consult the Constitution of the United States, and there we would find this prohibition:

"'No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State, deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.'

"The Constitution of the United States affords protection, therefore, against the dangers of a declaration of martial law by the legislature of a State as well as against the danger of its declaration by Congress. The principle holds true both as to the United States and the States, that the only justification of martial law is necessity.

"It is a well-settled principle that when a person is invested by law with a discretionary power his decision within the range of his discretion is conclusive on all, and therefore binding on the courts. This rule has been applied to the subject of martial law, and it has been contended that the officers who enforce it are acting within the range of their discretion, and are protected by the principle which makes them the judges of the necessity of the acts done in the exercise of a martial-law power. From my standpoint such an application of the principle is entirely wrong for the reason that if martial law is nothing more than the doctrine of necessity called out by the State's right of self-defense the officer can have no discretion in the matter. He will or he will not be able to justify according to his ability to prove the necessity for his act; he will find no toleration of the plea that the necessity for his act, and therefore its justification, can not be inquired into by the courts because he was acting within the sphere of his lawful discretion. The officer is not by any law vested with a discretion in this matter. Such a discretion and the doctrine of necessity can not exist together.

"But this necessity need not be absolute, as determined by events subsequent to the exercise of the power. The Supreme Court has, as we have already seen, laid down the rule much more favorable to the person using the power. It is worth repeating:

"'In deciding upon this necessity, however, the state of the facts, as they appeared to the officer at the time he acted, must govern the decision, for he must necessarily act upon the information of others as well as his own observations. And if, with such information as he had a right to rely upon, there is reasonable ground for believing that the peril is immediate and menacing, or the necessity urgent, he is justified in acting upon it, and the discovery afterwards that it was false or erroneous will not make him a trespasser. But it is not sufficient to show that he exercised an honest judgment, and took the property to promote the public service; he must show by proof the nature and character of emergency, such as he has reasonable grounds to believe it to be, and it is then for a jury to say whether it was so pressing as not to admit of delay, and the occasion such, according to the information upon which he acted, that private rights must for the time give way to the common and public good.' (Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How., 427.)

"Under the Constitution of the United States there can never be any justification for the exercise of the military power to which these remarks relate other than the rule of necessity as thus applied."

In the North Carolina cases, supra, it was sought to justify the acts of the governor on provisions of the constitution and statutes of that State similar to those relied on in the cases before us; that is to say that the governor may call out the militia, and may declare a state of war to exist. But the constitution of that State provided exactly as ours provides: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended." That which was said by the chief justice of North Carolina, in an opinion approved by his associates, aptly applies to our own Constitution and laws and to the cases under consideration:

"Mr. Badger, of counsel for his excellency, relied on the constitution, Article XII, section 3, 'The governor shall be commander in chief and have power to call out the militia to execute the laws, suppress riots or insurrections, and to repel invasion,' and on the statute of 1869–70, chapter 27, section 1, 'The governor is hereby authorized and empowered, whenever in his judgment the civil authorities in any county are unable to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of life and property, to declare such county to be in a state of insurrection, and to call into active service the militia of the State to such an extent as may become necessary to suppress the insurrection'; and he insisted that:

"'1. This clause of the constitution, and the statute, empowered the governor to declare a county to be in a state of insurrection whenever in his judgment the civil authorities are unable to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of life and property. The governor has so declared in regard to the county of Alamance, and the judiciary can not call his action in question, or review it, as the matter is confided solely to the judgment of the governor.

"'2. The constitution and this statute confer on the governor all the powers "necessary" to suppress the insurrection, and the governor has taken military possession of the county and ordered the arrest and detention of the petitioner as a military prisoner. This was necessary, for unlike other insurrections, it was not open resistance, but a novel kind of insurrection, seeking to effect its purpose by a secret association spread over the country, by scourging, and by other crimes committed in the dark, and evading the civil authorities, by masks and fraud, perjury and intimidation; and that

"'3. It follows that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended in that county until the insurrection be suppressed.'

"I accede to the first proposition; full faith and credit are due to the action of the governor in this matter, because he is the competent authority, acting in pursuance of the constitution and the law. The power, from its nature, must be exercised by the executive, as in case of invasion or open insurrection. The extent of the power is alone the subject of judicial determination.

"As to the second, it may be that the arrest and also the detention of the prisoner is necessary as a means to suppress the insurrection, but I can not yield my assent to the conclusion. The means must be proper as well as necessary, and the detention of the petitioner as a military prisoner is not a proper means; for it violates the Declaration of Rights, 'The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended.' (Constitution, art. 1, sec. 21.)

"This is an express provision, and there is no rule of construction or principle of constitutional law by which an express provision can be abrogated and made of no force by an implication from any other provision of the instrument. The clauses should be construed so as to give effect to each and prevent conflict. This is done by giving to article 12, section 3, the effect of allowing military possession of a county to be taken, and the arrest of all suspected persons to be made by military authority, but requiring, by force of article 1, section 21, the persons arrested to be surrendered for trial to the civil authorities on habeas corpus should they not be delivered over without the writ.

"This prevents conflict with the habeas corpus clause and harmonizes with the other articles of the Declaration of Rights, i. e., trial by jury, etc., all of which have been handed down to us by our fathers and by our English ancestors as great fundamental principles essential to the protection of civil liberty.

"I declare my opinion to be that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus has not been suspended by the action of his excellency; that the governor has power under the constitution and laws to declare a county to be in a state of insurrection, to take military possession, to order the arrest of all suspected persons, and to do all things necessary to suppress the insurrection, but he has no power to disobey the writ of habeas corpus or to order the trial of any citizen otherwise than by jury. According to the law of the land, such action would be in excess of his power.

"The judiciary has power to declare the action of the executive, as well as the acts of the general assembly, when in violation of the constitution, void and of no effect."

No power for the recognition of martial law could be found in our constitution, even were those provisions which directly condemn and prohibit it not in the instrument. To say that merest implication or presumption totally at variance with express inhibitions, and directly overthrowing all the important guaranties of the instrument itself, may be resorted to for the purpose of justifying martial law, introduces a new rule of constitutional construction. The constitutional purposes of the militia can not rightly be so subverted. True, the militia exists by the constitution. But that military establishment is not raised by it ever to take the place of the constitution, is creator. The mere raising of a militia does not signify, as the majority conceive, that it is raised for martial law. It is raised to enforce the laws by constitutional methods. It is raised to comply with the great military organization of the Federal Government under the provisions of the Constitution of the Union. (Art. 1, sec. 16.)

Let us look at some guaranties of our constitution that may now lightly be ignored by the force of the majority decision that may be cast aside by the governor of this State and he not be made to answer for ignoring them. Let us see what express words of the instrument other than those already observed are torn down by this resort to mere implication and presumption. Let us see provisions which the people as a whole deemed necessary for good government and sought to place beyond power of change which are now held to be under the control of the commander in chief of the militia by resort to a denounced plea of necessity judged by a single individual. It is well enough at least to preserve them here:

ART. 3, SEC. 4. * * * "No person shall be held to answer for treason, felony, or other crime, not cognizable by a justice, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. No bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of a contract shall be passed."

ART. 3, SEC. 10. "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and the judgment of his peers."

ART. 3, SEC. 14. "Trials of crimes and misdemeanors, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be by a jury of 12 men, public, without unreasonable delay, and in the county where the alleged offense was committed, unless upon petition of the accused, and for good cause shown, it is removed to some other county. In all such trials, the accused shall be fully and plainly informed of the character and cause of the accusation, and be confronted with the witnesses against him, and shall have the assistance of counsel and a reasonable time to prepare for his defense, and there shall be awarded to him compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor."

ART. 3. SEC. 17. "The courts of this State shall be open, and every person, for an injury done to him, in his person, property, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay."

Can the absolute, unrestrained, and unreviewable will of the governor be substituted for these provisions? That it may, is the decision of the majority of this court. One gross error of that decision is that it bases the right to martial law solely on the decision and proclamation of the governor and not on actual necessity. No mere decision or proclamation can justify martial law, even where it might be legally recognized. It can only be justified by the absolute necessity of fact for it. War may be so effective as to make the necessity for martial law. War must have made it wholly impossible to enforce or invoke the civil laws before martial law can be invoked. Even then, the military commander is accountable before the civil laws when the exigency has passed. His judgment as to the necessity may be reviewed. There must be ultimate responsibility. It is even so as to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, when a Constitution authorizes the suspension. (Cooley, Principles of Constitutional Law, 300.) The military commander may be compelled to show reasonable ground for believing that the infringement of personal and property rights was demanded by the occasion. (Stephen, History of Criminal Law, 214.) We have seen these principles enunciated by Lieber, above. (See also Ballantine, post.) And as long as there is a civil court that has the power to try an offender for breach of a civil law, martial law can not be applied for the trial of that offender. (Blackstone, Book I, 413.) If a civil court exists that may take cognizance, then necessity for martial trial does not exist. As long as the civil law can be executed by the presence and operation of civil courts, martial law, through military courts, can not take its place. Martial law can only operate where the civil law has become inoperative by the absence of courts. It is the actual, physical annihilation of the civil courts by the war that makes the only necessity upon which trial by martial law may ever be had. It is not merely the decision of the executive or the legislature that military courts will be more effective than the existing civil courts that can make the necessity. Nothing short of the absence of civil resort for trial can ever justify military trial of civil offenses. "If, in foreign invasion or civil war, the courts are actually closed, and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, on the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, thus overthrown, to preserve the safety of the army and society; and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course. As necessity creates the rule, so it limits its duration; for, if this government is continued after the courts are reinstated, it is a gross usurpation of power." (Ex parte Milligan, supra.)

We shall now soon proceed to see how these principles, announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, sustained preeminently by the best thought of all constitutional government, as a research will show, apply to the cases of the petitioners, Nance and Mays. But before proceeding thereto it will be necessary to show the actual status of these cases. It may be inferred from the majority opinion that Nance and Mays are mere prisoners of war. They occupy no such relation. Nor are they merely detained by the militia in the suppression of riot, insurrection, or rebellion. Their petition for writs of habeas corpus and the returns of the warden of the penitentiary thereto make no such cases against them. Nor was it argued at the bar or in the briefs that they have any such relation.

It plainly appears that they are citizens of Kanawha County, not connected with the military service, charged before a military commission for violations within that county of certain provisions of the statutes of West Virginia amounting thereunder to misdemeanors, arrested by the militia, tried by military commission pursuant to the order of the governor, sentenced for specific terms in the penitentiary, and transported thereto for imprisonment for their respective terms of sentence by the approval of the governor as commander in chief, all at a time when the criminal courts of Kanawha County were open, able, and with full jurisdiction to try the charges against them. In other words, these petitioners are held, as the returns show, on specific sentences, one for five years, the other for two, in the penitentiary as civil offenders tried and committed by a military court under the guidance of the following military order:

STATE CAPITOL,
Charleston, November 16, 1912.

(General Orders, No. 23.)

The following is published for the guidance of the military commission organized under General Orders, No. 22, of this office, dated November 16, 1912:

1. The military commission is substituted for the criminal courts of the district covered by the martial-law proclamation, and all offenses against the civil laws as they existed prior to the proclamation of November 15, 1912, shall be regarded as offenses under the military law, and as a punishment therefor the military commission can impose such sentences, either lighter or heavier than those imposed under the civil law, as in their judgment the offender may merit.

2. Cognizances of offenses against the civil law as they existed prior to November 5, 1912, committed prior to the declaration of martial law and unpunished, will be taken by the military commission.

3. Persons sentenced to imprisonment will be confined in the penitentiary at Moundsville, W. Va.

By command of the governor:

C. D. ELLIOTT, Adjutant General.

The returns of the warden do not pretend to justify his authority to hold petitioners other than under sentences for specific terms by this military commission. He justifies under no other commitments. It is to the commitments that we must look in these proceedings to determine the legality of the imprisonment. Says the great commentator: "The glory of the English law consists in defining the time, the causes, and the extent, when, wherefore, and to what degree the imprisonment of the subject may be lawful. This it is which induces the absolute necessity of expressing upon every commitment the reason for which it is made, that the court upon an habeas corpus may examine into its validity." (Blackstone, Book III, p. 133.)

What actual necessity justified the creation of this military commission and the recognition of its powers to supplant the civil courts? As we have seen, nothing but the complete lack of power of the civil courts for the trial of the charges against Nance and Mays, arising by the annihilation and inoperation of those courts, could, if martial law was at all allowable, justify their military trial and sentence. Could Nance and Mays have been tried for the offenses with which they were charged by the civil courts, under the ordinary forms of law, as an actual fact? We know by the record of these cases, we know judicially, that they could have been so tried. But an answer that is attempted is this, that the governor by his proclamation had set off the portion of the county in which the offenses were committed and the offenders were arrested as a martial-law district. Again we say the mere proclamation could not alone make the necessity. The physical status must make it. No physical status existed, like the destruction of the ordinary courts, to make it necessary to try Nance and Mays other than they would have been tried if no disturbances had existed in Cabin Creek district. Those disturbances had not interrupted the very court that would have tried them if there had been no such disturbances. Those disturbances did not physically prevent the transportation of Nance and Mays out of the riotous district to the county seat for trial. If they could be transported out of that district to Moundsville for imprisonment, as they were, they could readily have been transported to Charleston for trial. It is said that the process of the court was prevented from execution in that district by the disturbances. That made no necessity for trial there. Surely the militia, which was in possession of the district, could execute all process of the court or cause the sheriff so to do. That was a very proper sphere of the militia in a riotous district. (Ballantine, post.) It can legally assist in the execution of the process of the civil courts.

Thus, it may assist in the execution of the laws. But plainly it can not supplant operative civil courts. The militia must aid the courts, not supplant them. Both are created by the same constitution. They belong to the same people. They must work in harmony as the people contemplated when they established both. The proper province of the army in such cases of disturbance as those on Cabin Creek was observed in the beginning of the Government, at the time of the whisky insurrection in western Pennsylvania in 1793. "President Washington did not march with his troops until the judge of the United States district court had certified that the marshal was unable to execute his warrants. Though the parties were tried for treason, all the arrests were made by the authority of the civil officers. The orders of the Secretary of War stated that 'the object of the expedition was to assist the marshal of the district to make prisoners.' Every movement was made under the direction of the civil authorities. So anxious was Washington on this subject that he gave his orders with the greatest care, and went in person to see that they were carefully executed. He issued orders declaring that 'the Army should not consider themselves as judges or executioners of the laws, but only as employed to support the proper authorities in the execution of the laws.'" (Garfield's Works (Hinsdale), Vol. I, p. 162.)

The offenses of Nance and Mays were cognizable by a civil court. That is, they were capable of being tried in the proper criminal court of Kanawha County, by a jury, upon presentment and indictment by a grand jury. The disturbances did not make it impossible to give them the constitutional course of trial. Thus no necessity justified the course pursued. No actual physical fact, in the widest view, prevented the operation of the direct shield of the Constitution, wherein it provides: "No citizen * * * shall be tried or punished by any military court for an offense that is cognizable by the civil courts of the State." The offenses charged against Nance and Mays were plainly cognizable by a civil court—capable of being presented and tried there. The only excuse for their not being tried there is that the governor ordered otherwise. Thus the governor alone made the necessity. Under the circumstances, in any considerate view, their trials and sentences were not by due process of law, and were grossly illegal and void.

There were no courts other than those of justices within the actual theater of the disturbances on Cabin Creek that could be rendered inoperative by the riotous condition there. The criminal court that pertained to that part and to the whole of the county was far from the seat of riot and wholly unaffected in its powers for regular and orderly presentment and trial. Even as to offenses cognizable only by justices, there was power and opportunity to bring offenders from that region to trial before justices in undisturbed districts of the county. But it does not even appear that the disturbances in the district rendered it impossible, by the aid of the militia there present, for the courts of justices of the peace there to mete out justice according to the civil law. The war must put the ordinary courts out of business, out of reach, before military courts can ever take their place. This, of course, may be different in foreign conquered territory where the courts of the conquered country are not in sympathy with the obligations of the conquering army to society. It can not be gainsaid that the ordinary courts for Cabin Creek district were at all times during the disturbances within reach and in operation. The militia could reach them with prisoners for trial much more easily than it could reach the penitentiary with prisoners for imprisonment. The State courts were more accessible than the State prison. This principle, that accessibility to the ordinary civil courts excludes resort to martial law, is established by the decision in the Milligan case in no uncertain language. We need no greater precedent.

Some of that which we have written in preceding paragraphs is based on the assumption of the tolerance of martial law simply, of course, for the purposes of argument. We reiterate that it can never be rightly tolerated in this State. Indeed, martial law to the extent of trial and sentence for civil offenses anywhere within our fair land deserves no support from any student of constitutional history. Garfield, by his great argument and review of history before the Supreme Court of the United States in the Milligan case, convinces any thoughtful reader in this behalf. No greater exposition of the subject, no severer condemnation of martial law as connected with constitutional government, was ever given to the world. It was given voluntarily, gratuitously, faithfully, solely in behalf of constitutional government. Yet it is but one among the many supporting the great weight of opinion on the subject. (Garfield's Works (Hinsdale), Vol. I, p. 143.)

The most recent review of the subject of martial law is that by Prof. Ballantine, of the University of Montana. It deals with all the adjudged cases and assures one of the soundness of its conclusions. Specific citation to it will hereinafter be made. It denies that martial law may be applied in State government. This writer says:

"It is believed that there is no warrant in the history of constitutional government for vesting in the governor as commander of the military forces of the State the absolute discretionary power of arrest, and, as a logical consequence, of life and death, so that his command or proclamation may take the place of a statute, and convert larceny into a capital offense, in going beyond legislative power, deprive citizens unreasonably and arbitrarily of life or liberty without review in the courts. (Johnson v. Jones (1867), 44 Ill., 142; Ela v. Smith (Mass. 1855), 5 Gray, 121.)

"The true view, undoubtedly, is that during a riot or other disturbance militiamen and their officers are authorized to act merely as a body of armed police with the ordinary powers of police officers. (Franks v. Smith (Ky. 1911), 134 S. W. 484.) This is as far as the actual decision goes in Luther v. Borden (1849), 7 How., 1. Their military character can not give them immunity for unreasonable excess of force. The governor of a State, as commander of the militia, is merely the chief conservator of the peace, and entirely destitute of power to proclaim martial law, punish criminals, or subject citizens to arbitrary military orders which he unreasonably believes to be demanded by public emergency.

"In a garrisoned city, held as an outpost of loyal territory, or in home districts threatened or recently evacuated by the enemy, military necessity for the public defense would certainly justify all temporary restrictions on the liberty of citizens essential to military operations, such as the extinguishment of lights, the requiring of military passes to enter or depart, and the quelling of public disorder. But the prosecution and punishment of persons suspected of conspiracy, sedition, or disloyal practices, and of treason itself, belongs to the tribunals of the law, and not to the sword and bayonet of the military. Where the army is not invading enemy territory of a recognized belligerent, but is in its own territory, the military authorities remain liable to be called to account either in habeas corpus or any other judicial proceeding for excess of authority toward citizens, no matter whether it occurred in propinquity to the field of actual hostilities or while the courts were closed, or after a proclamation of martial law."

The issue involved in these cases is a marked one. Shall a citizen be subjected to trial before a military commission regardless of constitutional guaranties at any time the governor may see fit, and that citizens have absolutely no redress from such procedure? In other words, may any citizen be absolutely within the power of the executive and the militia which has been placed in his hands? These questions are indeed more momentous than the people of this busy era may conceive. The affirmative answer to them annuls that true liberty which was bought by blood and sacrifice and which long has been jealously guarded and defended. It seems necessary that we should repeat what Mr. Justice Davis said in the Milligan case:

"It is claimed that martial law covers with its broad mantle the proceedings of this military commission. The proposition in this: That in a time of war the commander of an armed force (if in his opinion the exigencies of the country demand it, and of which he is to judge) has the power, within the lines of his military district, to suspend all civil rights and their remedies, and subject citizens as well as soldiers to the rule of his will; and in the exercise of his lawful authority can not be restrained except by his superior officer or the President of the United States.

"If this position is sound to the extent claimed, then when war exists, foreign or domestic, and the country is subdivided into military departments for mere convenience, the commander of one of them can, if he chooses, within the limits, on the plea of necessity, with the approval of the executive, substitute military force for and to the exclusion of the laws, and punish all persons, as he thinks right and proper, without fixed or certain rules.

"The statement of this proposition shows its importance; for, if true, Republican government is a failure and there is an end of liberty regulated by law. Martial law, established on such a basis, destroys every guaranty of the Constitution, and effectually renders the 'military independent of and superior to the civil power'—the attempt to do which by the King of Great Britain was deemed by our fathers such an offense that they assigned it to the world as one of the causes which impelled them to declare their independence. Civil liberty and this kind of martial law can not endure together; the antagonism is irreconcilable and, in the conflict, one or the other must perish.

"This Nation, as experience has proved, can not always remain at peace, and has no right to expect that it will always have wise and humane rulers, sincerely attached to the principles of the Constitution. Wicked men, ambitious of power, with hatred of liberty and contempt of law, may fill the place once occupied by Washington and Lincoln; and if this right is conceded, and the calamities of war again befall us, the dangers to human liberty are frightful to contemplate. If our fathers had failed to provide for just such a contingency, they would have been false to the trust reposed in them. They knew—the history of the world told them—the Nation they were founding, be its existence short or long, would be involved in war; how often or how long continued, human foresight could not tell; and that unlimited power, wherever lodged at such a time, was especially hazardous to freemen. For this and other equally weighty reasons they secured the inheritance they had fought to maintain by incorporating in a written Constitution the safeguards which time had proved were essential to its preservation. Not one of these safeguards can the President or Congress or the judiciary disturb, except the one concerning the writ of habeas corpus.

"It is essential to the safety of every government that in a great crisis like the one we have just passed through there should be a power somewhere of suspending the writ of habeas corpus. In every war there are men of previously good character wicked enough to counsel their fellow citizens to resist the measures deemed necessary by a good government to sustain its just authority and overthrow its enemies, and their influence may lead to dangerous combinations. In the emergency of the times an immediate public investigation according to law may not be possible, and yet the peril to the country may be too imminent to suffer such persons to go at large. Unquestionably, there is then an exigency which demands that the Government, if it should see fit in the exercise of a proper discretion to make arrests, should not be required to produce the person arrested in answer to a writ of habeas corpus. The Constitution goes no further. It does not say, after a writ of habeas corpus is denied a citizen, that he shall be tried otherwise than by the course of common law. If it had intended this result, it was easy by the use of direct words to have accomplished it. The illustrious men who framed that instrument were guarding the foundations of civil liberty against the abuses of unlimited power; they were full of wisdom, and the lessons of history informed them that a trial by an established court, assisted by an impartial jury, was the only sure way of protecting the citizens against oppression and wrong. Knowing this, they limited the suspension to one great right, and left the rest to remain forever inviolate. But it is insisted that the safety of the country in time of war demands that this broad claim for martial law shall be sustained. If this were true, it could be well said that a country, preserved at the sacrifice of all the cardinal principles of liberty, is not worth the cost of preservation."

A search of the books, extending over many days of labor in the investigation of this subject, discloses that no State in the Union has ever declared, by judicial decision or otherwise, principles to the extent of those announced by the majority opinion of this court. West Virginia, born of a love for and an adherence to constitutional government, seems now to have departed further therefrom. In Colorado and Idaho arrests and extended detention by the militia for the suppressing of riot and insurrection have been upheld as authorized by the exigencies existing and as necessary for the suppression of uprisings. But further than this no State has ever gone. The Supreme Court of the United States went no further in the Moyer case (212 U. S., 78). No court ever before upheld the action of a governor in ousting the courts of their jurisdiction as to civil offenses and in substituting himself therefor.

This State is a government of its own people. It should matter not that civil rights may at some time have been transgressed elsewhere. We should not permit them to be transgressed here. The insignia of the State bears our legend of freedom. It can not be kept unless we sacredly observe the Constitution, by which all, whether guilty or innocent, are bound alike. Freedom for a West Virginian means the giving to him what his State constitution and that of the Nation guarantee to him. Nor does it matter whether that West Virginian be rich or poor, idler or laborer, millionaire or mountaineer. The Constitution is no respecter of persons.

A sense of duty has impelled the writing of this opinion. If it may in the future only cause the doctrine promulgated by the majority to be questioned, the labor will not have been in vain.

Will the reader of this opinion reserve hasty judgment against conclusions which it announces until he has made studious examination of the citations herein and the three following expositions on the subject of martial law, together with the cases cited in them:

"Military commissions," Garfield's Works (Hinsdale), Volume I, page 143.

"What is the justification of martial law," Lieber, War Department Document No. 79; North American Review, November, 1896.

"Martial law," Ballantine, Columbia Law Review, June, 1912.

The decisions and treatises relied on herein make no distinction in the test for martial law, whether in pacific districts or in the theater of actual war. In the one place as well as in the other the test is the same—the want of operative civil courts. An examination of the subject will not sustain a contention that the courts and the writers referred to were dealing only with martial law outside the theater of actual war. They clearly show that martial law is as objectionable in the one place as in the other, unless it is justified by the absence of civil law.

Will the reader who refers to the decisions and treatises cited also note that there is a clear distinction between the power to use martial acts for the suppression of riot, insurrection, or rebellion, and the power to use martial law for the trial of civil offenses. Martial acts are one thing, martial law is another.

It may be said that the treatises referred to are not judicial in character. The same is true as to every textbook of the law.

And now how applicable are the words of David Dudley Field, that ardent advocate of constitutional government:

"I could not look into the pages of English law—I could not turn over the leaves of English literature—I could not listen to the orators and statesmen of England without remarking the uniform protest against martial usurpation and the assertion of the undoubted right of every man, high or low, to be judged according to the known and general law, by a jury of his peers, before the judge of the land. And when I turned to the history, legal, political, and literary, of my own country—my own undivided and forever indivisible country—I found the language of freedom intensified. Our fathers brought with them the liberties of Englishmen. Throughout the colonial history we find the colonists clinging with immovable tenacity to trial by jury, Magna Charta, the principle of representation, and the petition of right. They had won them in the fatherland in many a high debate and on many a bloody field, and they defended them here against the emissaries of the Crown of England and against the veteran troops of France. We, their children, thought we had superadded to the liberties of Englishmen the greater and better guarded liberties of Americans." (Brewer's Orations, vol. 6, p. 2154.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments on paragraph 572? If not, are there any amendments on paragraph 573?

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 118, by striking out paragraph 573, which reads as follows:

"573. Printing paper (other than paper commercially known as handmade or machine handmade paper, japan paper, and imitation japan paper by whatever name known), unsized, sized, or glued, suitable for the printing of books and newspapers, but not for covers or bindings, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not above 2½ cents per pound."

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, as I have already addressed the House at length on the paper schedule and the free listing of potatoes, which I shall favor the removal from the free list by amendment that I shall offer when the paragraph is reached, or, if offered by some other Member, shall support. This paragraph relating to paper ought not to be allowed to pass without some restriction, in view of the fact that the provincial governments of Canada are to-day placing restrictions on the manufactured products of their forests, so as to compel their manufacture within the Dominion of Canada, for the upbuilding of the Dominion of Canada. Under the provisions of this paragraph the raw products of great forests in our country will be turned over to the Dominion of Canada for manufacture. The forests of northern Maine are drained by the St. Johns River, which leads into the Province of New Brunswick. On that river great paper mills will be constructed. The products of the forests of the United States will be driven by the provisions of this paragraph into Canada for manufacture there. I am opposed to the provision as it stands. It should be changed to meet the Canadaian situation, as stated in my remarks of April 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments on paragraph 573? If not, are there any amendments on paragraph 574?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 118, line 23, strike out the line which reads as follows: "Parchment and vellum."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, there are many men ready to invest capital in the United States which would employ labor in the production of parchment and vellum and if this item is taken from the free list perhaps we could build up this industry, but as the committee seems to have its face set against any changes to the schedule I desire to return to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who spoke a little while ago about something reported in the Philadelphia North American. He finds through that paper, apparently, that some one family was in distress or that some one was living beyond his income. I do not want to cast up any reflections in these matters or to refer to other people who live beyond their incomes, and I do not want to puncture any State or community by pointing out some weak point that could easily be emphasized. By some strange circumstance it happens that I have before me an editorial from the Public Ledger, with which the North American disagrees, commenting upon the living conditions prevailing in Philadelphia, and referring to the fact that we have 380,000 people there who have more than $160,000,000 invested in the savings funds. That sounds as if we were able to care for an occasional case of real distress. In addition to what the Ledger says about the labor conditions in Philadelphia at the present time, when the Republican tariff law is operating, it may be asserted that we have 350,000 separate homes in which the people live happily and contented. I am going to put the Ledger editorial in the RECORD. Here it is:

WELL-PAID AND HAPPY LABOR.

"Labor in Philadelphia has many things to be thankful for. May Day brought no strife worth considering. It found no mills idle and no men who wish employment unable to find it.

"Philadelphia is a sane city. It gives its people the best houses for the smallest rents paid in considerable towns anywhere in this whole land. It commends itself to the laborer because here he may live on a better scale for less money than elsewhere, while the countless mills and factories supply him with steady work at good pay.

"Philadelphia is also a healthy city, and the vital statistics prove this. It is an intelligent city, the home not only of a great system of free education but the seat of higher knowledge and the continent's best medical and dental schools. At present it is a well-governed city.

"These things make Philadelphia a good place to live in, but a particularly good one for the men and women who must work. Capital is well employed at present, and on all sides there is progress. Industries thrive, and, while there is no mushroom growth, and, fortunately, no artificial boom, there is genuine prosperity.

"More than 380,000 people have money in the savings banks in this town, which is proof of their ability to live inside their income. The $166,000,000 of such savings is at once a sign of thrift as well as good sense.

"After all, in what better condition may a people be found than when they are healthy, intelligent, well governed, content, employed, and saving money? This condition applies to-day not to any small class in Philadelphia but to nearly all its upward of 2,000,000 inhabitants."

This, I think, is sufficient answer to the gentleman from Alabama.

And that brings me to what I desired to say a little while ago about the difference of opinion between the newspapers which the Democratic Party may or may not capture by this free-trade provision in the matter of print paper, wood pulp, and so forth. Resuming the editorial from the North American I read:

"We admit that newspapers, along with all consumers of trust-made products, have been robbed by excessive prices; but we do not concede to newspapers the right secretly to enter into an agreement with the administration for relief, even from extortion, and to make a part of that agreement the support of a policy which will not directly benefit any general consumer, but which will inflict direct hurt upon an honest interest representing more than 30,000,000 of our population."

And then it goes on to explain the arrangements made by Mr. John Norris, whom all know favorably in Washington, as follows:

"Nor can we truthfully say that we think the general criticism of the attitude of newspapers in this matter is unmerited. We have a high regard for the ability and integrity of Mr. John Norris, who represented the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in the secret negotiations with the administration before the text of the Canadian pact was made public. But when Mr. Norris, in furtherance of his understanding with President Taft, assumed the rôle of lobbyist at Washington for the newspaper interests, we are forced to concede that we failed to discern any difference in principle between his position and that of Lobbyist Hines, of the Lumber Trust, or any other lobbyist of any other interest which was to be favorably or adversely affected by the measure.

"We do not impute any wrong motive to Mr. Norris. He was working to relieve his clients of an unjust tax upon a necessity of newspaper life, which was in the control of a monopoly made possible by inequitable tariff schedules.

"Mr. Norris, of course, did not use the methods which Lobbyist Hines and his kind use. Mr. Norris did not have access to any 'slush fund' or powerful coercive agencies. His appeal was open and direct. The combined newspapers had a direct pecuniary interest in the agreement which Mr. Norris had effected with President Taft. Presumably their gratitude was implied and not promised."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say that parchment and vellum have been on the free list under the Wilson bill, the Dingley bill, the Payne bill, and they are on the free list in this bill. If the gentleman's motion should prevail, articles that have been on the free list always would be taxed at 25 per cent ad valorem.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments on paragraph 574? [After a pause.] If not, are there any amendments to 575? [After a pause.] If not, are there any amendments to 586?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 120, lines 10 and 11, strike out the paragraph which reads as follows:

586. Potatoes, and potatoes, dried, desiccated, or otherwise prepared, not specially provided for in this section.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I represent a district in which there are many and diversified business interests. We have nearly four hundred manufacturing plants; and we have a farming community of a population of between sixty and seventy-five thousand.

During the consideration of the pending bill I have offered amendments, entered protests in the interest of, and submitted letters and petitions from, the manufacturers and their employees—all to no avail.

However, I must register my emphatic protest against this free list in which has been placed almost everything raised on the farm, including that vegetable which is so generally used as an article of diet, the potato.

This is one of the important and dependable crops of my district and State, and one upon which our farmers have made some little money; to enable them to continue in a somewhat profitable business, I believe the present rate of 25 cents per bushel should be maintained, and I hope an amendment may come from the Committee on Ways and Means taking potatoes from the free list to give them necessary and proper protection.

While a rate of 15 cents per bushel might enable our farmers to exist, there could be no profit in competition with the imported potatoes, and I believe that 25 cents per bushel is necessary to give the American farmer a fair profit.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to read into the RECORD at this point a letter received from the South Jersey Farmers' Exchange, in which we are implored not to strike down the potato-farming industry of our country.

WOODSTOWN, N. J., April 16, 1913.

Hon. W. J. BROWNING, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are writing you on request of about 1,000 members of our exchange in protest against the bill that is before Congress to take the duty entirely off of potatoes. We think at least there ought not to be less than 15 cents per bushel duty paid on all foreign potatoes coming into this country. We think, as the bill was presented, the duty was altogether taken off, and we can hardly think that you and other Members representing the farmers' interests will allow this to go through in this shape—not only Republicans, but Democrats—and we would like you to use your best efforts to defeat this bill in the shape it is in and have it amended so that the duty will be at least 15 cents per bushel on potatoes.

Yours, truly,

SOUTH JERSEY FARMERS' EXCHANGE,
FRANK DAVIS, Manager.

Mr. Chairman, I am in receipt of another communication on this subject, this time from the general manager of the Monmouth County (N. J.) Farmers' Exchange, which I must call to your attention. It reads as follows:

Voicing the sentiment of the 1,250 members who constitute our organization, we desire to enter our emphatic protest against the new tariff bill in the item that places potatoes on the free list. The present duty of 25 cents per bushel should be continued, otherwise it means a loss of millions to the farmers of our country each year. The potato industry in our State is the one depended upon in many sections as the money crop. The duty of 25 cents a bushel is just the difference between profit and loss to our growers, and we hope you will stand by this large constituency of yours in maintaining the present tariff on potatoes.

Another item that seriously threatens the welfare of our potato growers is the increase of duty proposed on jute. Burlap bags, which are made from jute, are used very largely as a carrier for potatoes, which the farmer must furnish. Under the present rate of duty, the price of bags has increased about 40 per cent. With the added duty it will be nearly double. Instead of being increased, it should be decreased. There is no jute industry in this country that needs protection, but there are thousands of farmers whose burdens ought not to be added to, but rather lightened, and we trust we may depend upon you to use your best influence to have the duty on jute lowered at least to the amount that has been asked for. The present rate is five-eighths of a cent per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem. It has been asked that it be made in the new law one-sixteenth of a cent per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem. This small reduction would give us some relief, and we trust you will do your best to bring it about.

Mr. Chairman, I hope against hope that the farmers' plea will not fall upon deaf ears. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice that I would move to strike out this paragraph; but inasmuch as my friend from New Jersey has made that motion, I will simply add a few remarks in support of it.

When the agricultural schedule was up for consideration I moved to impose a duty of 25 cents a bushel upon potatoes, but that was voted down. Now, I hope this motion to strike potatoes from the free list will carry, with a view of having the duty fixed somewhere between 10 and 15 cents. You have a duty upon wheat and upon oats and barley. The duty upon wheat is 10 cents a bushel. There is no more merit in raising wheat than in raising potatoes. I can see no reason why you should not treat the potato farmer as you have treated the wheat farmer. It is not a wise policy to so legislate as to discourage the production of food in the country. While I recognize that your object is to reduce the cost of living, I want to remind you of the fact that most of the potatoes are bought through middlemen, who exact a profit, and that a duty of 10 per cent would not affect the retail price of potatoes, but it would protect the people against the exorbitant prices in the years of scarcity.

There is one provision in this bill in regard to manufactured articles which shows that you have a great regard for the manufacturing interests. I refer to the so-called dumping clause. That is to protect the American manufacturer against an oversupply from abroad that might be dumped upon the people here at extraordinarily low prices. Now, that would not apply to potatoes, but the reason for its application is still stronger in that instance than it is in the case of manufactured articles, for the reason that the yield of potatoes per acre varies largely in the different years, although we have, fortunately, in this country been able to supply nearly the whole demand for potatoes. We produced last year 376,000,000 bushels, but there have been droughts, as happened two or three years ago, when the supply was insufficient and the price of potatoes went high and justified the importation of several millions of bushels at 25 cents a bushel, which enlarged the revenues of the United States by several millions of dollars. It seems to me, however, that you should not allow an extreme yield of potatoes in foreign countries, which happens once in a while, to be dumped upon this country at such prices as to be ruinous to our own farmers.

That will certainly happen in some of the years if you allow potatoes to go on the free list. If you place on them a duty of 10 cents a bushel I think it will equalize those things, so that the farmer will not be compelled in those years to raise potatoes at a loss.

I can see no reason why you should not to that extent at least discriminate in favor of our people as against the foreigners who produce potatoes. The American farmer is the one who supports the Government. He contributes to our taxes. He is the one who has got to fight your battles for you, and not the Canadian farmer, not the Scotch farmer, or the German or the Irish farmer who produce the foreign potatoes. It is the American farmer who protects the flag in case of peril, and you ought at least to give him a little advantage and at the same time get revenue for the Government, particularly when you are sure that it would not materially or to any appreciable extent affect the cost of living.

I hope, therefore, that the proposition to strike this item from the free list will be carried, and that a duty will be imposed on potatoes equal to that which you have placed on wheat. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not imagine any Member of this House believes for a moment that placing potatoes on the free list will completely annihilate the potato-growing industry in the United States. Potatoes will continue to be raised in spite of this bill. But neither do I think anyone will contend that the placing of potatoes on the free list will not cause a material reduction in the price of potatoes received by the farmer who grows them. There can be no other reason for placing that commodity in this part of the bill excepting that the price to be received by the farmer shall be lowered.

I wonder if those who framed the bill have really given much consideration to that item, which is a great American industry? I was surprised the other night that my amendment fixing a duty on potato starch and sago starch did not meet with a more cordial appreciation at the hands of the majority of the committee. We hear a great deal in these tariff discussions about by-products—by-products in the iron and steel industry, by-products in various kinds of manufacturing enterprises. But starch, gentlemen, is a by-product of potatoes and thus a by-product of the potato-growing industry. A reasonable protection on starch would give to the farmer a market for his potatoes, even if the price be greatly lowered by this bill.

I have been wondering a little bit to-day, Mr. Chairman, what any constituents of mine in the eighth district of Minnesota will have in mind if they read this bill from first to last, and what prayer may, perhaps, come on their lips when they meet in family union about the altar. That district is some 250 miles from north to south. Beginning far in the northland, where the lakes, abound, I find that lumber, which is a great industry there, is placed on the free list.

Journeying a little farther south, where the hills are rugged and where the pines still point to the blue, they dig iron ore, and I find that is placed on the free list. Coming down to the great city of Duluth—and ever since a distinguished gentleman from Kentucky by the name of Proctor Knott made a speech on Duluth that city has been great [laughter]—we find that one of its leading industries is the production of flour, and flour is placed on the free list, although the flour manufacturers must pay a duty of 10 per cent on their wheat.

Then, journeying still farther south, where the land lies open to the rays of the beautiful sun and where many counties spread their broad acres, we find that a great industry is the growing of potatoes, and now potatoes are placed on the free list.

I say, Mr. Chairman, the people of that section of the country, having every product which they raise placed on the free list, may have to look to other parts of the bill for relief. They come to the income-tax provision, and for once they smile benignly, for, God knows, they have no terrors to fear from that provision in the income tax that exempts incomes of $4,000 a year. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

But read a little further, and think of the great misery that must come to them in contemplation of the provisions of this bill—affecting, as it does, all of the things which go to produce the happiness of life or to drag it down to the depths of despair—when they find a new provision which taxes their life insurance, and there, Mr. Chairman, is added a new terror to death. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 586? If not, the next paragraph is 595.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 595: After the word "sago" strike out the words "crude and sago flour," and insert the words "in pearl or like form."

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, when Schedule G was under consideration, I requested information from the gentlemen of the committee, who were in charge of this bill, as to whether starch preparations, other than potato, were included within that paragraph and had a rate of half a cent a pound. I was informed that that condition was true and that competitors of potato starch had a tariff of half a cent a pound. I rather doubted it, because some of the constituents I used to have—I have none now who are interested in this subject—had always been greatly interested in the competition between sago flour, tapioca flour, and potato starch, and it is an important industry in the potato-raising districts all over the country.

In examining more closely the report of the committee and the hearings before the committee I found these facts:

First, that there is used in this country in the mechanical arts about 150,000,000 pounds of starch annually as sizing and in the manufacture of print cloths and of articles of that sort. Of this 150,000,000 pounds of starches so used about 50,000,000 pounds are of sago and tapioca flour, and so compete extensively with the potato starch. Turning to the report of the committee, paragraph 239, I find that there were imported last year 14,000,000 pounds of potato starch and 700,000 pounds of all other kinds of starch used as competitive with it in the mechanical arts; yet 50,000,000 pounds of these other kinds of starch were actually used for these purposes. I noticed from the report that it is estimated that next year there will be imported about 1,000,000 pounds of starch other than potato starch, to be used in the arts, and 20,000,000 pounds of potato starch. Yet the hearings of the committee clearly show that more than 50,000,000 pounds of these tropical starch flours will be imported free of duty for these same purposes, as a fraud upon our people and the revenues of the Treasury. In investigating further I find there are about 72,000,000 pounds of starch imported in the form of sago and tapioca flour.

Now, the hearings show that there is no such thing imported as crude sago as described in your bill, so that the importations are almost solely of sago and tapioca flour, and of sago and tapioca pearl and flake used for foods.

Sago and tapioca pearl and flake, the materials used as food products, should be on the free list, as they have been and as everyone wants them to be, and the amendment which I submit places sago flakes and sago pearl on the free list.

But sago flour, which is used in the arts to the extent of 50,000,000 or more pounds a year, replacing potato starch and other starches made by our own people, is on the free list by the real provisions and effect of this bill. Yet it ostensibly pays a duty, which duty is never received by the Treasury, but is defrauded from the Treasury by shrewd, unscrupulous, and cunning importers.

The effect of my amendment is to preserve to the free list all of the sago and tapioca preparations which are used as foods and to place upon the dutiable list, as it evidently was intended they should be placed, sago and tapioca preparations used in the arts, which compete with potato starch made in our rural districts.

You have placed a tariff of 1 cent a pound on potato starch, reducing that rate about one-third per cent from its present rate. You have ostensibly placed a tariff of half a cent a pound on sago and tapioca flour, which competes with it.

As a matter of fact there is but very little tariff at all paid on these tropical starches in the way they are imported. They are practically admitted free. The Supreme Court of the United States, construing the law as it stands, in an opinion on that subject, held substantially that if the words "sago flour" were stricken out from the free-list provisions that sago used in the mechanical arts as it actually comes in then would pay a tariff under the provisions of the agricultural schedule. That is what is intended and should properly be done, except that in addition, as I pointed out in the discussion on the agricultural schedule, in all fairness competing tropical starches should pay the same duty as our domestic potato and corn starches.

Following that decision of the Supreme Court, I have offered an amendment and asked you to adopt it, preserving the forms and substances which are used as food; and adopting the decision of the Supreme Court I urge you to put a tariff on those tropical starches which are used in the arts, and which are intended to be used in the arts, competing with our domestic products and compelling them to bear their share of the burdens of our Government.

Remember, as my colleague, Mr. MILLER, just stated, that sago starch is the strong competitor of potato starch; that this potato starch is made in 75 or 100 small starch factories scattered throughout the country. Most of them are cooperative, owned by the farmers and business men in their localities. In every place in the North where potatoes are raised to any great extent they can not be raised profitably and successfully without a cooperative starch factory. It is in this way that the small potatoes at all times and in all crop years can be used, and in crop years when prices are low the farmers can recoup in part and use a large proportion of their great crop to good advantage and profit. Many of the starch factories do not run every year and are kept for emergencies of larger crops and low prices. They encourage the farmers in that way to take the chances of raising large crops of potatoes, which certainly cheapen our cost of living. You admit foreign starches free, discourage the making of domestic potato starches, discourage this industry in the farming districts, and you discourage the farmers from raising large crops of potatoes. This will affect the price to the consumers everywhere. It will tend to gradually increase the supply and price of potatoes and keep them on a higher scale. This would be an injury to consumers and producers alike, and should not be allowed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the gentleman—because he is always well informed—will recollect the fact that this provision that he speaks of striking out is in the present law, and that sago and sago flour have always been on the free list.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. I thank the gentleman for that, and I will state to him that that is one of the reasons why some of us objected to the Payne bill, because, with due deference to the other side of the Capitol, they did not treat this subject with frankness. The gentlemen in charge of the bill at the other end of the Capitol—and the debate there is placed in your hearings—informed the body at the other end of the Capitol that this very product—sago flour—would be subject to a tariff, and would be subjected to competitive conditions with potato starch.

And yet the language was so placed in the existing law that under the decision of the Supreme Court the tropical starches imported for the arts are not subject to a tariff but continued on the free list, as you are proposing to do. You are offered here the language that those in charge of the bill in the Senate stated would be placed in the law, but they did not keep faith with the Senate and place it in the law. Now, we ask you to correct the mistake which they then made, inadvertently or otherwise. You have full notice now, in view of the situation of the production and its effects, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, in view of the hearings before your committee, that sago and tapioca flours should receive a tariff in some way, or else you will do as was done in the last bill—promise in terms the potato raisers to give their competitive tropical starches a tariff, some sort of a tax at half a cent or so a pound, but as a matter of fact, allow it to be placed on the free list. This is manifestly unfair and unjust that more than 50,000,000 pounds a year of importations made by the serf labor, the slave labor in Java and East India Islands, controlled entirely by foreign capital, will enter into free competition with the white labor of the Northern States in cooperating factories owned by the farmers in our smaller communities. That is not a competitive situation from any standpoint we point out to you. Now, you can easily and properly save a quarter of a million dollars revenue annually and in addition treat with fairness and justice the great agricultural interests of our country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee only long enough to call attention to the fact that the importations in 1912 amounted to 8,842,000 pounds of sago, valued at $169,000. There is not a great deal of competition in this line of product, and the gentleman from Minnesota agrees with me that it has always been on the free list. We are certainly, by leaving it there, not destroying any industry, and it is not capable of furnishing much revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to recur to paragraph 592, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was not in the Chamber at the time that paragraph was called.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to paragraph 592 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes; is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman why T-rails were taken from the protective list and put on the free list? In the first place, let me say that I believe the object gentlemen on that side of the House have in lowering the duty, as has frequently been stated by them, is to lower the cost of living. I would like to know whether you are lowering the cost of living here to favor the rich or the poor? You have been talking much about the poor man. I do not know of a poor man who purchases railroad iron. Steel T-rails are used by railroad companies. No poor man purchases steel rails.

The United States Steel Co., which manufactures 44 per cent of all the steel products of this country, have 225,000 men employed in their institutions. There are over 500,000 men employed in the steel mills in the United States. They are the only poor men to be affected by this change, if any are affected. I find nowhere in the handbook an account of the importations of steel rails, and it may be said that there are none. But I know that there are importations of steel rails. I know that foreign-made steel rails are sold on the Pacific coast right now for less money than American-made steel rails. One dollar per ton is the difference in price between foreign and American made steel rails of 56, 60, and 66 pounds. Foreign steel rails are sold in every principal market on the Pacific coast—Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, San Francisco—at a less price than American steel rails are sold. The freight from Pennsylvania and Illinois to the Pacific coast on steel rails to Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, and San Francisco is about $14 per ton. Certainly steel rails are a revenue producer when they are imported, and there are importations now of T rails, although none are reported in the handbook that I can find. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama, or any gentleman on that side, what poor men are you going to aid by putting steel rails on the free list. The only part, I wish to restate, that a poor man takes in the consumption or production of steel rails is the labor that is employed in the steel mills. Placing steel rails on the free list will in no way change the rate of fare from 3 to 2 cents or any other amount per mile that is paid when one rides on the railroad.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Do not the poor buy the things that are shipped over the railroads?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is true; but when you find that freight was carried in this country last year per mile for 7.41 mills per ton per mile, how are you going to figure out any lower rate of freight by putting on the free list steel rails that pay $3.94 per gross ton?

Mr. CULLOP. If you can build railroads and keep them in repair, they can transport the freight more cheaply.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, but you are going to legislate directly for the poor man, are you not? You are going to lower the cost of living. You are focusing your range at a very long distance when you figure the poor man is going to get back something out of the freight.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman's question was what poor man would be benefited, and the gentleman also made the assertion that it was the rich who paid the 3 cents a mile.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is the rich who buy the steel rails stated. They are the ones that you are legislating for.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but if they get the steel rails and build the railroad more cheaply, the rates of freight will be cheaper.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; if the rich can buy the steel rails produced by the poor man for less money, you are going to lower the cost of living and help the poor man. I am unable to figure out your calculations and your real interest in the poor man by putting steel rails on the free list. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that ought to be on the free list by reason of a combination of manufacturers that have fixed the price from 1898, I believe it is, then this is one of those items. I made a statement upon the floor of this House on the 14th day of February, in which I called attention to the testimony given by Judge Gary, at one time the president of the Steel Corporation, and at the time the testimony was given to which I referred, the chairman of the finance committee of the Steel Corporation, in which I said that he and Mr. Farrell, now the president of that corporation, denied before the Stanley investigating committee that there was such a combination. I called attention to the fact that in the suit now pending in the court of New Jersey to dissolve the Steel Corporation as a trust, Mr. Corey, once the president of this corporation, had sworn that there was a combination, world wide in its extent, that fixed the price of steel rails, not only in this country, but elsewhere.

From the testimony given before the investigation by the Stanley committee it appeared that there was a combination in this country that kept the price of steel rails up to $28 a ton, and it also appeared from the testimony, and was admitted, that steel rails when offered to be purchased for the purpose of being shipped abroad were sold from $3 to $4 a ton less than to the home consumer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, they say that only the rich buy these articles. The country where I live and the country out farther west need railroad development and need the steel rails to further improve the country and to enable us to get from the thralldom under which we have served for 30 years on account of the freight rates imposed by the old railroad companies. It is for the development of our country and for the other sections that need development that we ought to be able to buy cheaper rails, and we can not do that unless this combination is in some way broken, unless we can have cheaper rails.

I shall put in the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, a letter addressed to me by Henry E. Colton, the special assistant to the Attorney General in the prosecution of this suit of the Government against the United States Steel Corporation. When I made a statement on the floor of the House on the 14th of February, in which I called attention to the testimony of Judge Gary and Mr. Farrell and Mr. Corey, I received a letter from Mr. Bolling, the attorney of the Steel Corporation, in which he challenged the correctness of my statement.

Not wishing to do any injustice to anybody, but seeking to find out whether I was right or not, I addressed a communication to this assistant attorney of the United States engaged in the prosecution of this case, and his letter in reply gives in detail the evidence of Judge Gary, the evidence of Mr. Farrell, the evidence of Mr. Corey, by which evidence the statement I made was borne out fully. Now, let us see what——

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly, if I have the time——

Mr. FORDNEY. If there is a combination——

Mr. BARTLETT. I have the proof of it in my hand.

Mr. FORDNEY. If there is a combination between steel-rail manufacturers in this country and in foreign countries, why do you take the duty off; who are you going to benefit?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because whenever they sell to the foreigner they sell their rails cheaper than they do to the home consumer. I have an instance of it in my own State, given by as reputable a gentleman as ever lived. He was at the same time president of a railroad in Georgia and was building a railroad in Mexico. He applied to the Steel Corporation or the seller of steel rails, specifying the number of tons of steel rails to be used in Georgia and also to be used in Mexico—the evidence has been put in this record several times—and he was offered and paid $4 a ton less for those shipped to Mexico than those used in Georgia.

Now, as a proof of that contention, Mr. Corey, in his testimony—and the pages are here cited—stated "There was an understanding with foreign manufacturers that in neutral markets of the world certain tonnages would be distributed among the producing countries."

This minute (meaning the first minute quoted above) says that after a full discussion the question was referred to Mr. Gary and Corey with power. "State whether or not you and Mr. Gary took up that matter, the question of rails to be sold in neutral markets."

"The WITNESS. I suppose that we did.

"Q. With whom?—A. With other manufacturers.

"Q. In this country or abroad?—A. Both.

"Q. Both in this country and abroad?—A. Yes.

"Q. With what manufacturers in this country did you take it up?—A. Manufacturers on the seaboard, like the Lackawanna and Pennsylvania.

* * * * * * *

"England, France, Germany, and possibly Belgium. I have forgotten."

Now, this testimony will show—I have been careful enough to give the pages, both in the testimony before the Stanley committee and the testimony before the court—and indisputably proves that the statement I made is true, that there was a combination, world-wide in its scope, that fixed the price of steel rails and has since 1898, and it is time for us to take the tariff duty off and give to the people free steel rails.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ROOM F, FIFTEENTH FLOOR, ST. PAUL BUILDING,
New York City, March 25, 1913.

Hon. C. L. BARTLETT,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of March 21, 1913, inclosing a copy of Raynal C. Bolling's letter in criticism of certain remarks made by you concerning the conflict in testimony between Judge Gary and Mr. Farrell, on the one hand, and Mr. William E. Corey, on the other, in respect to foreign and domestic agreements, in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, to which the United States Steel Corporation or its subsidiaries were parties.

On February 14, 1913, Sixty-second Congress, third session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3211), you state, in substance, that Judge Gary and Mr. Farrell testified in answer to questions put by members of the House committee that there was at no time an agreement, international in its scope, that in any way affected the prices fixed or the territory in which both foreign corporations and the Steel Corporation were to sell their products. Judge Gary gave testimony to that general effect on pages 94–95, volume 2, of the Stanley hearings. (See also pp. 226–227, Stanley hearings, to the same general effect.) Mr. Farrell gave testimony to that general effect on pages 2758–2759, etc., Stanley hearings, volume 37. There is no doubt from reading the testimony in question that Judge Gary and Mr. Farrell intended to give the congressional committee the impression that, so far as they knew, while there were agreements among foreign makers affecting prices and markets, the Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries were not a party to any such agreements and understandings.

I inclose herewith a memorandum of Mr. Corey's testimony concerning the existence of an agreement or understanding between the United States Steel Corporation and other manufacturers in the United States on the one hand and foreign manufacturers on the other hand, to the general effect that rails should not be sold in certain producing countries by the parties to said understanding or agreement other than those producing rails in said countries respectively, to wit, under the understanding the English, the German, the French, etc., were not to sell rails in the United States, since it was a rail-manufacturing country, and the rail manufacturers of the United States were not to sell in England, etc., since it was a rail-producing country, etc.; and also to the general effect "that in the neutral markets of the world certain tonnages should be distributed among the producing countries," and that in reaching said understanding Mr. Farrell met the foreign manufacturers and reported back to the United States Steel Corporation as to what was done.

I think that an examination of the inclosed memorandum concerning Mr. Corey's testimony will convince you that your remarks concerning the conflict in testimony between Judge Gary, Mr. Farrell, and Mr. Corey are in substance correct.

I do not know what techinal construction Mr. Farrell and Judge Gary may have put upon the questions addressed to them by the congressional committee, but if the testimony of Mr. Corey is true, and of its truth I have no doubt, they find themselves in the awkward situation of having, intentionally or unintentionally, deceived the committee and the public.

The World's statement of Mr. Corey's testimony to the effect that Judge Gary knew of these pools all the time, because he (Judge Gary) attended the meetings, is in substance correct. It refers to the domestic pools, to wit, the rail, structural, and plate pools. (See Government record in Steel case, Vol. VIII, pp. 3000, 3074, 3075.) The World's statement that on the preceding day Mr. Corey said "an understanding existed between the United States Steel Corporation and manufacturers abroad not to attempt to sell in each other's territory." is also substantially correct. (See inclosed memorandum of excerpts from Mr. Corey's testimony, and Government record in the Steel case, pp. 2944 and 2945.)

Mr. Bolling quotes Mr. Corey as stating, on page 3116 of the Government record in the Steel case, that he had never admitted that there was an international pool in rails. He neglected to quote Mr. Corey as also stating—on the same page—that he had never denied the existence of such an international rail pool. Of course, this testimony of Mr. Corey is wholly immaterial, inasmuch as he had already described the international agreement or understanding and its workings, and whether it constituted a pool or whether it was an agreement in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act is, of course, a matter for the court and not for the witness to determine. Besides the agreement which he described is clearly a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act under the decisions. While Mr Corey does not expressly state that Judge Gary had knowledge of the foreign rail agreements, the clear inference to be drawn from his testimony is that Judge Gary, as well as Mr. Farrell and other of the principal officers of the Steel Corporation, were fully aware of the international agreement, the records of the company showing that Judge Gary and Mr. Corey were appointed on the original committee to take up the question of making some arrangement with the foreign manufacturers with respect to the selling of rails in neutral markets.

I do not think the testimony given by Mr. Corey on cross-examination modifies the testimony, which I inclose as having been given on direct examination. I will not undertake to go over the matter in detail unless you think it is worth while. I presume your only desire is to be certain that you have not done Judge Gary and Mr. Farrell an injustice. Looking at the substance, rather than mere details, I think you can rest assured that you have not.

I am sending you under separate cover a copy of Volume VIII of the record which contains Mr. Corey's testimony.

I note that Mr. Bolling says he will prove in regard to the domestic pools, to wit, structural, rail, and plate, that Mr. Corey was mistaken in regard to the statement that Judge Gary knew of the plate and structural pools.

Concerning Judge Gary's knowledge of the plate pool there would seem to be no doubt, inasmuch as at least three witnesses have testified that he was present at meetings of the plate pool long before its so-called dissolution. (See Government Record in Steel Case, Vol. VIII, p. 1337; Vol. IV, p. 1414.)

If you desire any further information in regard to this matter, I shall be glad to furnish it to you.

Respectfully,

HENRY E. COLTON,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

Inclosures: Memorandum of Mr. Corey's testimony.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM E. COREY RELATING TO THE INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT OR UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION OR ITS SUBSIDIARIES AND OTHER FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC MANUFACTURERS OF RAILS.

At page 2943 of Volume VIII of the Government's record in the Steel case Mr. Corey's attention is called to a minute of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation of November 1, 1904, where it is recorded:

"The president brought up the question of making some arrangement with foreign producers in regard to price of rails to be sold in neutral markets.

"After a full discussion the question was referred to Messrs. Gary and Corey, with power."

At page 2944, Volume VIII, Government's record, Mr. Corey was asked the following question:

"Q. Was there any agreement between the United States Steel Corporation and foreign makers that there were certain markets other than those that you have described where steel was manufactured that would be recognized as markets that the United States Steel Corporation might sell in without competition or certain markets that Germany might sell in without competition or that Great Britain might sell in without competition to those who were operating, if they were operating, under any understanding? (P. 2945.)

"The WITNESS. My recollection is that there was no understanding or agreement at that period.

"Q. Was there at any period?—A. At various times; yes."

* * * * * * *

"The WITNESS. Yes. At various times there were understandings with——

"Q. * * * I asked whether you had personal knowledge of it or whether it was something that came to you from some one else.

"The WITNESS. I had personal knowledge of it. (P. 2946.) * * * There was an understanding with foreign manufacturers that in neutral markets of the world certain tonnages should be distributed among the producing countries."

[The witness had previously defined a neutral market as one in which rails were not manufactured.]

(Page 948, Vol. VIII.)

"Q. This minute [meaning the first minute quoted above] says that after a full discussion the question was referred to Messrs. Gary and Corey, with power. State whether or not you and Mr. Gary took up that matter—the question of rails to be sold in neutral markets?

"The WITNESS. I presume that we did.

"Q. With whom?—A. With other manufacturers.

"Q. In this country or abroad?—A. Both.

"Q. Both in this country and abroad?—A. Yes.

"Q. With what manufacturers in this country did you take it up?—A. Manufacturers on the seaboard, like the Lackawanna and Pennsylvania.

"Q. Generally, without giving the names, the manufacturers of what other countries? I mean without giving the names of the manufacturers.—A. I understand perfectly.

"Q. I do not want to burden you with the details any more than is necessary.—A. England, France, Germany, and possibly Belgium. I have forgotten." (P. 2949.)

On page 2949, Volume VIII, Government record, in answer to the question "Who?" meaning who met the foreign manufacturers, Mr. Corey answers: "Mr. Farrell."

"Q. Where did he meet them?—A. He met them abroad.

"Q. When?—A. At various times when the question was being discussed.

"Q. Were reports of that made back to the United States Steel Corporation as to what was done? I do not mean in writing, but in any way.—A. Verbal reports; yes." (P. 2949, Vol. VIII.)

On page 2950, Volume VIII, Government record, the witness testified in general concerning the time of the international agreement or understanding that it was subsequent to November 1, 1904, and that as a result of the agreement the United States Steel Corporation did not sell rails in producing countries, and that the understanding with foreign manufacturers was in existence as late as the end of the year 1910.

On page 2951, Volume VIII, the following appears:

"Q. You have stated, Mr. Corey, that under this the United States Steel Corporation was not to sell and did not sell in countries abroad where steel rails were being manufactured. State whether or not, under this arrangement, the manufacturers of these other countries refrained from selling in the United States.—A. That was my understanding. (See pp. 3036, 3122, 3124.)

"Q. As a matter of fact, was that carried out, so far as you know?—A. Generally, I believe."

In the course of Mr. Corey's examination, he stated that he was not familiar with the details of the agreement or understanding, but as to its general character he testified as above stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is exhausted. Is there any other amendment to this paragraph?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that amendments to these paragraphs we have reserved must all be offered before other amendments to the paragraphs of the bill can be offered.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph preceding this—591.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to recur to paragraph 591 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he will not couple with that a request that debate be limited to five minutes upon this amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have been listening very attentively to these paragraphs and I have not heard 359 called.

Mr. MANN. They have all been read. Does the gentleman desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. I gave notice I would offer a new paragraph to 359 and I have been waiting to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Minnesota that an order was entered into in the Committee of the Whole by which the entire free list was read and the paragraphs specifically mentioned were excepted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 3321, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN OF NEW JERSEY.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound regret that I announce to the House the death of my distinguished colleague, the Hon. LEWIS J. MARTIN, late a Representative of the sixth district of New Jersey, who died suddenly this afternoon in the Union Station, while returning to the Capitol to attend his duties here. At a time later I will ask the House to set apart a day for memorial services on the life, character, and public services of our deceased friend. I now ask for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 92.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. LEWIS J. MARTIN, a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 Members of the House (with such Members of the Senate as may be joined) be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

In pursuance of the resolution, the Speaker announced the following committee: Messrs. HAMILL, KINKEAD of New Jersey, SCULLY, MCCOY, TOWNSEND, TUTTLE, BAKER, EAGAN, BREMNER, WALSH, BROWNING, REILLY of Connecticut, SAMUEL W. SMITH, SLOAN, DAVIS of Minnesota, KELLEY of Michigan, GOOD, LANGLEY, LAFFERTY, and SELLS.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the further resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, May 6, 1913, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of New York Harbor, N. Y., with a view to securing a suitable depth of channel to the navy yard (H. Doc. SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 6, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the continuance of the present Federal policy in regard to the preservation of the national forests. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Conservation of National Resources.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Conservation of National Resources and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1913.

Resolutions relative to the national forests.

Whereas it is for the interest of the whole people that Federal control of the national forests should be continued; and

Whereas the protection, administration, and development of the national forests involve a financial burden beyond the ability of any State to assume: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts urges that the policy established by the Government of the United States in regard to the Federal conservation and development of the national forests should be maintained, and that the control of the national forests should not be turned over to any State or to any individual or corporation.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

In house of representatives, adopted April 10, 1913.
In senate, adopted in concurrence April 15, 1913.
A true copy.
Attest:

FRANK J. DONAHUE,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Milford, Hinsdale, Stratham, and Center Sandwich, in the State of New Hampshire, policyholders in the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York; of Amos S. Rundlett, of Portsmouth, N. H.; Krikor Haehannasian, of Nashua, N. H.; D. P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Co.; John Bancroft, of Wilmington, Del.; W. T. Galliher, president of the American National Bank, of Washington, D. C.; of the Chamber of Commerce of Rochester, N. Y.; and of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the exemption of mutual life insurance companies from the operation of the proposed income-tax clause in the pending tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Rev. Robert C. Falconer, of Hanover, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation providing compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries sustained or occupational diseases contracted in the course of their employment, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented memorials of A. F. McKissick, president and treasurer of the Grendel Mills, of Greenwood; of James D. Hammett, president and treasurer of the Orr Cotton Mills, of Anderson; of Robert Chapman, president and treasurer of the Marlboro Cotton Mills, of McColl; and of John A. Law, president and treasurer of the Saxon Mills, of Spartanburg, all in the State of South Carolina, remonstrating against any reduction in the duty on cotton, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAPP. I present a memorial from citizens of the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the income-tax section of the pending tariff bill relating to the taxation of life insurance companies operating exclusively on the mutual plan, and I ask its reference to the Committee on Finance.

I wish to call attention to the fact that somebody is misleading the men who signed this memorial. It is a prepared form and recites that the proposed tax to be imposed upon insurance companies by the pending tariff bill is in addition to and duplication of the tax now provided by the Payne-Aldrich law as a corporation tax. Whoever prepared it certainly either did not read the pending bill or is himself guilty of a willful intention to mislead.

I wish to make this statement in connection with the memorial so that the memorialists, if they read it in the RECORD, will see that they have been misled in this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of Local Union No. 107, Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Crowell, Nebr., praying for a reduction in the duty on sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WORKS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kaweah, Three Rivers, Exeter, Hayward, Oilfields, Visalia, and Farmersville, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the transfer of the control of the national forests to the several States, which was referred to the Committee on the Conservation of National Resources.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Martinez and Oakland, in the State of California, praying that currants be placed on the free list, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Ventura Chamber of Commerce, of San Buenaventura, Cal., remonstrating against a reduction in the duty on citrus fruits, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF DUTY ON CITRUS FRUITS.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here a letter from Charles C. Chapman, of Fullerton, Cal., giving some facts that I think are interesting and instructive on the subject of the growing of citrus fruits in California and bearing on the question of the tariff. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FULLERTON, CAL., April 24, 1913.

Hon. JOHN D. WORKS, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have had the privilege of reading a copy of your letter to the Citrus Protective League, bearing date of April 11. First let me say I appreciate both your position and the spirit of the letter. Your well-known disposition to treat with fairness every question I assure you I also appreciate, and all we need to ask for in behalf of the citrus industry is fair and reasonable treatment.

I know Mr. Powell is quite capable of furnishing you any data which you may desire in order to present this question to the Senate; but I want to take the liberty of emphasizing, perhaps, a few points which occur to me as important. I speak more particularly in behalf of the orange growers, not having been in recent years a lemon grower. I have, however, been induced to put out a large lemon orchard, and naturally feel deeply interested in the outcome of legislation on the lemons. I can say, however, that some years ago I had about 35 acres of lemons, and for seven or eight years I did not make one dollar off the entire acreage. The trees bore heavily; but I could not, however, seem to realize anything from them. I therefore rebudded them to oranges. A little later protection was given the industry, and those who had lemon orchards have, I understand, done very well; but this came only after a long, discouraging struggle.

The President, in his message to Congress on the tariff, said something about the chief need of the American producers, in order to compete with the world, was that they should sharpen their wits, or words to that effect. If he was to step into one of our modern packing houses, I am sure he would find a splendid display of the best inventive genius and application of mechanical forces to be found in the world. In my own packing house, used solely for packing my own fruit, I have equipment which cost between $7,000 and $8,000, and it requires more than an ordinary grade of intelligence to manipulate the various pieces of machinery. All of this equipment is that we might handle the fruit with greater care and put up a uniform package, both as regards quality and size and make it, as well, attractive to the trade.

I mention this, for many do not realize how much handling of the orange, and lemon as well, is necessary before it reaches the consumer. This is all done by well-paid labor. I should very much regret to be forced to reduce the wage of any of this help, but if we are forced to retrench by reason of having any of the markets taken from us among the first places we should go would be to the help, because this is the largest item which enters into the handling of the fruit.

The impression prevails that the citrus industry has been immensely profitable and that the growers have been making big money. That is not true. Many have done well, but no better than the farmers in many sections of the country have done. It requires active, enterprising, and intelligent direction of the business to produce even a reasonable income. Practically all of our growers have come here from the East, and the charms this country has for them has induced many to talk much, and, indeed, often "blow" about results. Everyone, as you know, catches the spirit and talks big of California, and this has given a wrong impression as to the real results of the efforts of a series of years. I am often pointed to as one of the most successful growers, but I could have made more money in other enterprises, either here or in the East, from whence I came, had I put into them as much of my life as I have into the citrus industry.

To my mind the great loss from a reduction of the tariff on oranges would be the loss, or largely so, of the New York market. This is the best orange market in the world. It sets the price for the entire country, and if the tariff was reduced so that oranges could be brought in freely that market would be continually demoralized. It would be unsettled, and therefore unprofitable, to the New York trade, and therefore to the California growers and shippers. It is really only a few of the New York dealers who want a reduction, and these, I am told, are mostly foreigners.

We are giving the consumers good fruit, well and honestly put up, and at very reasonable prices, and it is widely distributed throughout the Nation, so that every small village has fresh fruit continually; and I presume, if let alone, the increase of production, the lower transportation charges, and even still better facilities for handling the fruit will enable us to give it to the consumers at still lower prices; but if all this is disrupted the industry could not possibly go on in its splendid development as it has in the past 10 years.

Most of our growers—in fact, practically all of them—have come here from different sections of the East. Many came when well past middle life and invested their savings in the citrus business, expecting to pass the remainder of their life here in comparative comfort. It will be hard, exceedingly so, for these people to see the business in which they have invested their all demoralized. Many of these, for there are thousands of them, would not be able to survive the financial loss that this would incur.

It is difficult for us to say just how much reduction of the tariff may be made and our industry still survive, or even continue without serious demoralization and loss. None of us know just how much encouragement the importers would get from even a slight reduction. They have been making a great fight for reduction, with the evident intention of using our markets to the fullest extent if permitted. If they are encouraged to do this, in the very nature of the case it will greatly injure us. Both the home producer and the importer can not use the same markets with profit. One must be the loser and eventually driven out, and he would be the one who had put the most money in producing, handling, and transporting the fruit. Here we would be at a disadvantage, for in all three items we put in far in excess of double the amount of money that the foreigner does.

It does seem hard after so many of us have been putting in our best efforts for years, and all the money we could raise, in building up an industry which in itself has been highly beneficial to the whole country to have it ruined or greatly crippled by legislation made solely, it would seem, in the interest of the foreign producer.

The eastern manufacturers will feel the demoralization of the citrus industry, for our money has been spent freely in buying all sorts of implements and articles made there.

Pardon this long communication, but I know in what I am saying I voice the sentiment of a great many growers.

Thanking you for what you have done for us, and trusting that you will fight hard to preserve as nearly as possible the present rate on oranges, I am,

Sincerely, yours, CHARLES C. CHAPMAN.

DORA D. WALKER.

Mr. TILLMAN. On the 12th ultimo I introduced a bill (S. 750) for the relief of Dora D. Walker, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted an amendment proposing to repeal the clause in section 28 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing that no person now in the employment of the Supervising Architect's Office shall be eligible to such employment, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

LAWS OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 20).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying volume, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 31 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Legislative Assembly of Porto Rico during the session beginning January 13 and ending March 13, 1913.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 6, 1913.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, PORT OF PHILADELPHIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 76, submitted yesterday by Mr. OLIVER, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate all papers and other information in his possession or in the possession of the Treasury Department relating to the demand of the Secretary of the Treasury for the resignation of Chester W. Hill, collector of customs of the port of Philadelphia.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I suggest the interpolation of the word "documentary," so as to read "documentary information."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia offer that as an amendment?

Mr. BACON. I am suggesting it to the author of the resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I do not appreciate the importance of the suggestion. I think the Senate is entitled to all the information, whether documentary or otherwise. It is presumed, of course, that all the information will be documentary, but if the Secretary of the Treasury is in the possession of any other information, I think it is his duty to transmit it under the resolution.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the resolution, it is directed to the President of the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. It requests the President to transmit the information in his possession or in that of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BACON. I understand; but it is addressed to the President, not to the Secretary of the Treasury, and necessarily the President, in getting from the Secretary of the Treasury that which the resolution calls for, would be limited to documentary evidence. You could not expect that the President of the United States would call the Secretary of the Treasury before him and put him under cross-examination to know everything he had heard. Yet that would be the result of such phraseology, or at least that would be implied, I should think. The Senator himself says it will be documentary. Why not make it specific to that effect?

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator said it is presumed that it will be documentary, but it is barely possible that the Secretary of the Treasury may have in his possession information other than documentary evidence. If there is anything within his knowledge or within the suspicion of the Secretary of the Treasury detrimental to this officer, we want to have it transmitted to us. It seems to me that the insertion of the word "documentary" would be a limitation upon the information that we ask for. I do not want to insert anything in the resolution that will limit the information which may come to us.

Mr. BACON. I again suggest to the Senator that the resolution is not addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, but to the President. If the President should undertake to comply with the request of the Senate, what would be his mode of procedure? Would he call the Secretary of the Treasury before him and make him unbosom himself as to everything he had heard in regard to this official, or would he say to him, "Send me any papers which you have?" While the President would naturally limit himself to sending for papers, it seems to me that in addressing to the President of the United States a request for information which he is to secure from some one else, it ought to be of a nature which will be definite and precise, and not put upon the President of the United States the duty of having a court of inquiry, or rather an inquiry, whether a court or not, as to all that might rest within the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury, everything he may have heard, representations which may have been made to him, some of them possibly without any foundation. Nevertheless, it would be information.

I do not think there is any precedent for anything of this kind. In the first place, I do not recall a resolution which has ever been addressed to the President of the United States requesting him to send information which is in the possession of some one else. Therefore if we are going beyond the usual limitation it seems to me we ought to make it as definite and concise as possible. It is with that view I took the liberty of suggesting to the Senator that it would be more satisfactory to limit it.

Of course if the President of the United States sees proper to communicate anything else he can do so. I do not know whether any Senator would object to the resolution. It rests altogether within the discretion of the President, and I myself am not disposed to object. When a request is simply made for information it seems to me that the information is presumed to be of a documentary character. No information is supposed to be in the possession of a department for official action except that which is in document shape, if I understand the matter correctly.

In view of the fact that the Senator says he does not anticipate that there will be any information except that which is found in a documentary shape I trust he will consent to make that change.

Mr. OLIVER. Well, Mr. President, this resolution is addressed to the President of the United States. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to leave it to the judgment of the eminent American who now occupies that position as to the extent or kind of information which he will transmit.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. OLIVER. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to inquire if he is willing to state—and I suppose he is—for what purpose he desires this information? I myself am unable to see how it concerns the Senate to get this information. The President is certainly not answerable for exercising the functions of his office. He had a right to remove the incumbent in the position referred to without cause if he saw fit to remove him, and I do not understand the object to be attained by getting this information when it comes, whether it be documentary or otherwise. What use is to be made of it? Cui bono? I do not understand why the information should be asked.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia wishes, I am very ready to state my purpose in asking for this information. When the present administration took office, about two months ago, it was definitely announced that the policy of the administration would be the policy which has prevailed for a generation past when one President succeeded another, to allow the incumbents of offices which had a definite term of service fixed by law to occupy those offices until the expiration of their terms, in the absence of some certain and specific reason to the contrary. Notwithstanding that declaration and the innumerable precedents for such action, the Secretary of the Treasury about a month ago demanded the resignation of Mr. Hill and a number of other officials occupying positions in the customhouse at Philadelphia, whose terms of service were fixed by law at four years and whose terms had not then and have not yet expired. Mr. Hill, to whom this resolution refers, replied to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking if there were any charges against the administration of his office and stating that, if so, he would decline to resign under such charges. The Secretary of the Treasury replied in effect that there were no charges pending against him, but that it was the desire of the present administration to have men in office who were in sympathy with the purposes and the policies of the administration; in other words, I presume, in short, to replace those officers who are not Democrats by those who are Democrats.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. OLIVER. I decline to yield just now, Mr. President. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia later.

Mr. President, I offered a resolution in executive session to the same purport as this, but directed to the Secretary of the Treasury. It was objected at that time that the resolution should be addressed to the President, and the action on the resolution was delayed by what certain Senators on the other side termed "a filibuster." I said then, and I say now, that my purpose in offering the resolution in open session is to bring before the public the facts relating to this enforced resignation of an able, a capable, and an efficient public official.

If there is anything in the administration of Mr. Hill in the performance of the duties of his office that is open to criticism, I think we ought to know it. Notwithstanding the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that no charges were pending against him, and that the only reason for demanding his resignation was that a man in sympathy with the purposes of the administration be put there, it has been charged on the floor of the House of Representatives by one of the Representatives from my State that this resignation was asked for, or that the officer was substantially removed because of frauds or undervaluations in the conduct of his office. If that is so, it should be investigated, and the information leading to the removal should be sent to the Senate so that the responsibility for the conduct of that office should be properly lodged and so that we should be advised whether or not there had been any misconduct, or whether the reason given was a mere pretext for substituting one kind of a man for another in a public office. That is the reason why I have offered this resolution. We want to know—and I think we ought to know—whether the present administration are going to respect the principle of maintaining efficient and honest public officers in their positions until the expiration of their terms, or whether they are going to indulge in sweeping removals without cause.

I yield to the Senator from Virginia, if he wishes me to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In the first place, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Has this resolution been introduced this morning for the first time?

Mr. OLIVER. It was introduced on yesterday.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Has unanimous consent been asked or given for its present consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. The resolution comes over under the rule, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that it was offered this morning for the first time.

Mr. OLIVER. The resolution was offered on yesterday, and it comes over under the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Was it taken up yesterday? Is it not a different resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. I offered the resolution yesterday, and then asked for its present consideration. Objection was made; it went over under the rule; and it is now properly before the Senate for action.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that there was a large sum of money paid into the Treasury recently because of violations of the customs laws at Philadelphia?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, that is just exactly what we want to find out. If there was any wrongful settlement made, and if this collector had anything to do with it, then I will join with the Senators on the other side not only in confirming the nomination of his successor, but in visiting upon him any punishment that ought to be visited upon him for such action. It is just such a thing as that that we want to ascertain, and this resolution calls for information relating to that and to any other wrongful thing that it is alleged he has done in the conduct of his office.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not mean, Mr. President, to intimate that there was any wrongdoing on the part of the collector of customs at Philadelphia. It seems that no charges have been made against that collector of customs, but simply reasoning about the matter and having no information regarding it, I have concluded that if, in the execution of the duties of that office, one importer had so far violated the law that a compromise had to be made with him, and he had paid into the Treasury about $100,000 because the customs had not been properly collected when the goods were received, it was an indication of inefficiency, on account of which the President might with great propriety have removed the collector of customs.

I simply refer to this because I do not believe, and I hardly think there is a Senator on the floor who believes, that the President removed the collector of customs at Philadelphia in order to put a Democrat in his place. While I do not know what induced him to make the removal, I have no idea he was influenced by a consideration of that sort. It would be inconsistent with everything he has done or said, and so I am driven to the conclusion that he made the removal because he thought the service was not efficient, although no charges had been preferred; but that seems to me to be entirely immaterial. Whether he acted on that motive or on some other motive, he acted within the limits of his proper constitutional authority, and he had a right to make the removal without any cause whatever or to make the removal for cause which was satisfactory to him, and yet which he did not desire to allege. Every employer knows that there are occasions when removals are made, and yet the employer is unwilling to allege the cause which induced him to act. The idea I desired to express was simply that the information when obtained would be useless. The President has the constitutional power to make the removal without any cause whatever, and I do not, therefore, see what good will be accomplished or of what value the information will be to the Senate when it is furnished, if, indeed, it be furnished at all. I can not see the connection between the removal and the new appointment. The office is now vacant.

Mr. OLIVER. The office is not vacant, Mr. President. Mr. Hill is still the incumbent.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understood the Senator to say that Mr. Hill had resigned.

Mr. OLIVER. Resigned, to take effect upon the appointment and qualification of his successor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is substantially a vacancy.

Mr. OLIVER. No; I beg pardon, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Whether or not the office is vacant, it is within the jurisdiction and constitutional authority of the President to send another name to the Senate whenever he pleases to do so, and it has no connection with the resignation or the removal of the present incumbent.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the name of Mr. Hill's successor has already been sent in; and, while I admit that the President has the right to remove any official at any time, I do say that information regarding the manner of removal or the manner of creating the vacancy is of great importance to the Senate in considering the question of confirming his successor; and it is for the purpose of having this information considered in connection with the nomination of that successor, who has already been named, and whose nomination is now pending, that I ask for this information.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this matter longer. If Senators on the other side want to take the responsibility of suppressing this thing, they can do so. I leave it to the judgment of the Senate whether or not they will ask for this information. I say it is pertinent to the case; it ought to be asked for, and it ought to be furnished; but if the Senate refuses to ask for it, or if the President refuses to furnish it, the responsibility is with the other side of the Chamber and not with this side.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to the resolution by striking out the words "and other information." It seems to me that the Senator from Pennsylvania should be willing to consent to this amendment. In view of the fact that we are admittedly establishing a precedent, we ought not to enter into a practice which is likely to lead us into embarrassment and into an impropriety of action. In calling upon the President, even by way of a request subject to the exigencies of the public interest, it seems to me improper to go further than to ask for the papers in the case.

I sympathize with the Senator's position, that the Senate, which confirmed the present incumbent, can very properly call upon the President to send to the Senate the papers in the case relating to his removal; but it seems to me that it is going too far to call for other information which might involve a communication from the President stating his reasons, or the reasons of the Secretary of the Treasury, not based upon written documents.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think that it is thoroughly safeguarded by inserting the provision calling only for such information as the President may wish to send not incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution is not so worded.

Mr. OLIVER. The President is the judge of what information he will furnish. I am perfectly willing to trust the President to give all the information in the case, and I am satisfied that he will give all the information in the case if this request is transmitted to him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not phrase his resolution so as to request the President to send only such information as he may desire to send. He asks him to send all the information.

Mr. OLIVER. The resolution reads, "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but then it may be quite possible that that would lead to a communication from the President, if he desired to be entirely frank with the Senate, which would go outside of the papers in the case. It seems to me that it is improper for the Senate to enter into such a possible controversy with the President in this case or in any other. The Senate ought to be permitted to request the transmission of the papers in the case; and if they do not justify the President in his action, it is a matter for the Senate to judge; but certainly, in establishing a precedent, we should not use indefinite language of this kind. We should call specifically for the facts in the case upon which the department acted.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand that the Senator offered the suggestion as an amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer it as an amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Pennsylvania takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. He spoke about Members on this side of the Chamber taking the responsibility of "suppressing this thing." To what thing does the Senator refer in connection with any suppression?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. KERN. I said that the Senator a while ago spoke about the responsibility the Members on this side would have to assume in "suppressing this thing," as he expressed it. Now, I am asking as to what thing he refers that was about to be suppressed?

Mr. OLIVER. I will leave it to the Senator to draw his own conclusion from what I said.

Mr. KERN. I speak only for myself when I say that I hope this resolution will be defeated. Neither do I desire to influence any Member on this side of the Chamber by anything I shall say. It is conceded here that the President in the removal of this official has proceeded entirely within his constitutional right. It is now proposed to inquire into—to probe—the mental processes of the President of the United States through which he reached the conclusion that this man ought to be removed. I think we are going entirely outside of our duties when we enter that field. I think the precedent to be set is a bad one. I remember that when Mr. Cleveland went out of office in 1897 and Mr. McKinley came in Democratic officeholders all over this country went down as ripened grain before the sickle. I remember that such were the wholesale removals that if the Senate had undertaken to inquire of Mr. McKinley in each instance as to his motive in the removal of Democratic officers the Senate would have had little time for anything else during the first month of his administration.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KERN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that when Mr. McKinley assumed the Presidency in 1897 Mr. John R. Reed, a very eminent Democrat of the city of Philadelphia, was the incumbent of this very office, collector of the port of Philadelphia, with two years yet to serve; and he served his term out before a Republican was appointed to the place.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator if Mr. Reed did not support Mr. McKinley for the Presidency?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think he did, but I do not know anything about that. If you are going to draw the line there, however, you will have to go high up among Democratic officials to-day. I will say that to the Senator. There are a great many men high in Democratic favor to-day who did the same thing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Still, Mr. President, that was a good reason why President McKinley should not have removed him. If he supported President McKinley for President, the mere fact that he had been appointed by President Cleveland was no reason why President McKinley should not have shown the appreciation of his support which he properly should have felt.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator if he knows whether or not Mr. Reed supported Mr. McKinley?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. If I had, I should not have asked the Senator from Pennsylvania the question. I asked him because I did not know.

Mr. OLIVER. I do know, Mr. President, that there was strong influence brought to bear upon President McKinley to make an immediate change there, and he refused to do it, and he continued Mr. Reed in office. I do not know whether or not Mr. Reed supported Mr. Bryan, but I do know that he continued as a Democrat, and he never surrendered his Democracy. Quite a number of men did, and came back.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. KERN. I have not yielded the floor yet, Mr. President. I was not referring to any individual instances. I had in mind officeholders in my own State who were turned out by wholesale, even though in many instances they were under the civil service. Some 20 or 25 at one time went out; and a man who was afterwards President of the United States, then a member of the Civil Service Commission, came to Indiana and refused those men a hearing, and confirmed the action of the political end of the administration in turning them out without any hearing. The Democrats "took their medicine," to use a somewhat vulgar expression, in those days. We saw there was little use in making protests, and so we yielded; and I believe, as a rule, President McKinley's appointments were confirmed without objection in this body.

If you establish this precedent now, and the minority on the other side of this Chamber undertakes to inquire into the motives of the President for the removal of Republican officeholders, there may be time for the transaction of some other business; but while I have no authority to speak for the administration, speaking for myself, if I had my way there would be so many removals in accordance with the will of the people, as registered in November last, that it would take all of the time of the Members on the other side to make inquiry as to the motives of the President in making the removals.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Indiana has spoken, because if this resolution is voted down it will simply be a declaration to the country that no attention is to be paid to the records of men in office, but that there are to be wholesale removals simply for the purpose of substituting a man of one party for a man of another. It is all right for the Democratic Party to take that position, but we want them to appear before the country as taking that precise position, and flying in the face of a public opinion which is to the effect that faithful officers should be retained in position at least until the expiration of their terms.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I have understood it to be conceded on that side that the President was proceeding within his constitutional rights; that he was exercising a power or right which the Constitution of the country devolved upon him. I think there is no reason for complaint. Besides, I believe it is generally conceded throughout the country by fair-minded Republicans that as a result of the last election the President who received such an overwhelming plurality should have men about him, conducting the administrative affairs of the Government, who are in full sympathy with him and his administration.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am not prepared to commit myself to the proposition that any action that the President takes in connection with the removal and appointment of public officials is beyond inquiry by the Senate; but I see no reason for the passage of this particular resolution, unless it is intended to question the veracity of the Secretary of the Treasury when he wrote to this gentleman who was removed that he removed him for political reasons.

I think that gentleman is in possession of a communication, or can readily obtain a copy of a communication, written by the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says there were no charges pending against the collector which went to his integrity, but that he was removed for the sole reason that it was the desire that that great branch of the public service should be in the hands of those who were in sympathy with the administration.

That communication has been read publicly, and it is known to exist; so what broader statement of the fact do you want or could you obtain, no matter how full your information might be? If that presents any issue upon which you desire to be heard, you have an authentic statement of it now from the only source that can give it. Therefore this resolution is all a work of supererogation. It accomplishes nothing.

I presume the Secretary of the Treasury would reply in response to the resolution, if communicated to him by the President, just as he replied when inquiry was made of him by the collector or his friends; so I do not see why the resolution should be passed. If you desire to ventilate that action with a view of acquainting the American people with the fact that it has been taken, you have the most authentic evidence of it now, and you have the amplest opportunity to make such comments upon it as seem to you to be proper. You do not need information from authentic sources to confirm a rumor. The Secretary of the Treasury has made that announcement over his own signature when a specific inquiry covering the point was submitted to him.

Therefore it seems to me that the resolution is utterly useless and simply encumbers the RECORD. For that reason I think it ought not to be adopted, and it ought not to be referred to a committee, but it ought to be disposed of here—not because anybody fears the result of the inquiry, but because the utmost extent to which it can go is now closed and no new information can come from prosecuting an inquiry under it.

Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury spoke by authority when he made that answer in reply to the inquiry submitted to him as to the cause of the removal of Mr. Hill. That is all you could learn as the result of the passage of this resolution. If you desire to discuss it from that standpoint, you can find the opportunity in some of the proceedings that take place here.

I should not be swift to vote against the resolution if the matter were in doubt and you wanted to bring it out in authentic form so as to make a definite issue upon it. As it is already before the Senate, however, I do not see the use of passing the resolution at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I assume that if it were simply a question as to whether or not the present incumbent of this office had been wronged there might be some doubt as to whether we ought to ask for this information. But enough has been said on the floor of the Senate to-day and the last time this matter was up to indicate that there are certain things chargeable to this office—at least, that impression has been given currency throughout the country, and especially here in Congress—that should put the Members of the Senate on guard.

I submit, Mr. President, that Senators who are called upon to confirm a nomination—to say nothing about retaining a man in office, but simply about putting a man into office—have a right to the fullest information; and it seems to me the Senate can do no less than to pass a resolution requesting the President to submit to us for our consideration the facts in this case. I think it is but fair to the incumbent and I think it is absolutely just to us that we have this information.

There are Senators here who argue that we have no right to ask for this information. I know the senior Senator from Arkansas does not agree with that proposition. We have a right to ask for anything that we need in the discharge of any duty that comes before us. It will shortly be our duty here to confirm a man appointed in place of the collector at Philadelphia. I want to know, as one, whether or not the charges intimated by the senior Senator from Virginia a moment ago and by other Senators are correct—that, notwithstanding the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, there are matters connected with that office which we ought to know. That will have something to do with my vote in confirming the man whose name the President has presented here.

I conceive that no harm can be done, no bad precedent can be established, by asking and receiving information which we actually need. If, as the Senator from Nebraska states, there are some things in the resolution which perhaps ought not to be there, I have no objection to its being amended. But to deny us the right to receive information which it is necessary for us to have in performing a public duty seems to me to be entirely wrong. Therefore I think this resolution ought to pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would not the proper way and the easy way to get that information be for the committee to which this nomination is referred to ask for the papers? Is not that the usual way with reference to nominations? Is not that constantly done—to obtain all papers in the possession of the President or the head of the department with reference to the person to be appointed and the person removed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. If this issue had not arisen, and if it had come up in the committee of itself, I presume that would have been the proper way to proceed. But the matter has been given publicity here, and Senators are contending that we have not the right to ask for this information. I do not think the Senate can afford to let the matter rest there. It seems to me we ought to proceed now with the resolution to get the information that we have asked for.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Michigan is mistaken in his statement that any Senator here disputes the right of the Senate to ask for these papers or any other papers which may be in the possession of the departments. There is a difference, however, between the existence of the right and the exercise of the right. The existence of the right is somthing which I will go as far as the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator in defending and maintaining. I have had something to say about that in the Senate on more occasions than one. I believe the right exists in the Senate to call for any paper in the departments, and not only to call for it but to command it. But that is a very different thing, Mr. President, from the question whether it is always expedient to call for it. The right may exist, but it may be inexpedient to exercise the right.

Mr. President, this matter does not relate to the question of confirmation. If it did, it could not be discussed in open Senate here without the consent of the Senate or the order of the Senate. If, as is conceded by all, I understand—it has been decided by the Supreme Court—the President has the arbitrary right of removal, for a reason, good or bad, or for no reason, then the question as to whether he has properly exercised that right in no way relates to the question as to whether or not the person appointed to fill the office should be confirmed. The question to be decided when an officer is to be confirmed is whether or not he is worthy and well qualified for the office; whether he is a proper man for it; whether he is one to be approved by the Senate. The question as to how the office became vacant has no relation to the question as to whether or not he is a fit and proper man for that office.

When the Senator from Pennsylvania introduced his resolution, there was nothing said about the purpose——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator from Georgia if it is not true that last winter for nearly three months the Senators on that side of the Chamber held up the confirmation of nearly all of the appointees, because, as was alleged by them, of the manner of creating the vacancies, and the fact that in certain cases, as they alleged, vacancies were created for a political purpose, and on that account the appointees should not be confirmed?

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is approximately correct in his statement; not exactly so, but sufficiently so for the purposes of his argument. The Senators on the other side are at perfect liberty to vote against the confirmation of anyone if in their judgment a vacancy has been improperly created. But the Senator can not mean to imply that this side of the Chamber, when it took that position, called upon the President of the United States for his reasons why such and such a thing happened; but that is practically what the Senator is proposing to do here.

If the Senator has information which satisfies him that he ought to vote against the confirmation of an officer, he is perfectly free, in the exercise of his constitutional rights, to vote that way, just as Senators on this side of the Chamber in the last session were free to exercise their right to oppose confirmations. But I repeat that the question of confirmation is not a question that can be decided by this inquiry, because it is an inquiry into something which does not have any limitations as to the right of the President.

If the law were that the President should not remove a man except for just cause, then it would be another question; but that is not the law. The law, as declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, is that the President can remove arbitrarily and without cause in the exercise of his will. If he does so in an improper manner, there is a certain method pointed out by the law by which he can be called into question for it; but there is no other method by which it can be done.

As I was about to say when the Senator interrupted me, when the Senator from Pennsylvania offered this resolution, while some of us possibly had the purpose of it in mind, it was not disclosed by him. Therefore in the exercise of a right which I think is equally unlimited—to call for papers—I was not disposed to be critical about it, and, it being left in the discretion of the President, if nothing had been said it would not have amounted to a precedent, and I was willing to let it go. But when the Senator avows in his place that the resolution has for its purpose an inquiry with regard to the creation of a vacancy to fill which an officer has been nominated for confirmation, then for us to pass this resolution is to set a precedent, and one which will return to plague us so long as the present majority shall constitute the majority, and hereafter, when in the fortunes of political warfare those who are now the minority may become the majority.

In the thousands and tens of thousands of nominations which are sent to the Senate, if this is to be established as a precedent, if this is to be recognized as a right, if this is to be recognized as an expedient thing to be done, I will not say simply as a right, it is one which can be exercised in every nomination which may hereafter be sent to the Senate.

I repeat, Mr. President, for that reason I quite agree with Senators who have gone further than I went when I first addressed the Senate upon this subject. I quite agree with them that with the purpose disclosed it is not a proper thing, it is not an expedient thing to do, while I do not dispute the fact that we have a right to do it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if it is proper in legislative session to make the inquiry, I should like to inquire whether the appointment involved in this case has been reported by the committee to which it was referred?

Mr. OLIVER. It has not, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. Then it rather strikes me for one that the committee could get these papers in the first instance, or, failing to do so, that the Senate could do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is not, Mr. President, I think, a bit of trouble about the Senator having done what he wants done, or rather what he announces he wants done, by getting this information from the committee. That is a simple process that is always taken; and if we deviate from it now, on every occasion when there is a nomination and any information is wanted from a department we will be told that a resolution should be passed calling on the President to furnish it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a good deal of difficulty. I offered the resolution in executive session for obtaining this information and failed to obtain action. I stated then that I would offer it in open session, which I have now done. I am going to fail to obtain action on this resolution. I am not at all confident that if the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Commerce, notwithstanding the fact that I am a member of the committee, the information would be obtainable through the medium of that committee.

Before I sit down, Mr. President, I should like to have read and inserted as a part of my remarks the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in response to Mr. Hill, stating his reason for calling for his resignation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That may be done. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1913.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 7th instant, there are no pending charges against you. Your resignation has been requested because, in the judgment of the department, it is essential that the officers of the port shall consist of persons who are in sympathy with the purposes and policies of the administration.

Respectfully,

(Signed) W. G. McADOO, Secretary.

Hon. C. W. HILL,
Collector of Customs, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what is the purpose of this resolution? It seems to me to be a curious performance, any Senator holding in his hand the written and avowed reason, which he denounces by innuendo at least as wicked, possessing this evidence——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not the first time the Senator from Missouri has placed words in my mouth that never issued from it. I want him to be careful about the language he attributes to me.

Mr. REED. Ah, Mr. President, the Senator, occupying a delicate position, is in a very sensitive mood. I have put no words in the Senator's mouth. I have said that at least by innuendo he has charged there is an improper motive. I reiterate it. He has in the last few moments argued that removal for political reasons is such an act as demands and challenges the attention of the country. He has called on the Senate to pass this resolution in order that that evidence of iniquity, for that must have been his meaning, or disregard of his public duty, for that must have been his meaning, should be laid bare and naked before the country, in order that the people might gaze upon it, appalled and horrified.

Now, it transpires that the evidence of that very reason which the Senator states he wants to have exposed was in his hands. Therefore he has now all he could possibly obtain if he had all the papers in the possession of the President, unless it be the fact that there was some cause other than the political cause, which has been referred to here, for the removal of this man. If there be such a cause, if there has been dereliction in duty, if there has been failure to properly conserve the interests of the country by the officer in charge of this position, then that fact would throw no light whatever upon the confirmation of the successor to this office. It would not affect the moral character of the man who has been appointed. It would not affect the question of his capacity. It would not affect the right of the President to appoint him or of the Senate to confirm him.

Therefore there could be no reason for calling for that information, and if it did come it would only come to offer a stronger reason than the one that has already been given in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. Manifestly, therefore, this resolution has for its object only the purpose of exposing to the country the awful crime of having removed a Republican from office just on the eve of the fact that the people of the country did their best to remove the entire party from office.

Mr. President, some comment has been made here in regard to the right of the President to remove. We are not even confronted with that question. The President has not removed this officer. He removed himself by resignation. It matters not that that resignation was requested. If he thought he was entitled to his office, if he considered that the office belonged to him as of right, he ought to have retained it and to have submitted himself to an actual removal. On the contrary, this gentleman saw fit to voluntarily resign his office, for it was voluntary when it was not compelled.

In the next place, Mr. President, I want to offer this observation: Some Senators upon the other side, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] in particular, said that if there had been anything wrong with the conduct of the office at Philadelphia that fact ought to be known to the Senate. I grant that. But is this the way to secure that information? Is this a proposition to investigate that office? Is this a resolution calling for the facts in regard to either malfeasance or misfeasance in that office or negligence in that office? It is nothing of that kind. If the Senator from Michigan desires to have light upon that, if the Senate desires light upon that, then the proper method to pursue is to offer a resolution to investigate that office. But I do not hear the Senators upon the other side asking for that sort of an investigation. The whole kernel and meat of this matter is found in the attitude of the Senator from Pennsylvania. He brought this question before the executive session, where it properly belongs, and, having failed there to carry his point, he took a change of venue to the open session, in order that there might be public discussion; and having now been gratified, I trust the resolution will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the word "papers," strike out the words "and other information," so as to read: "to transmit to the Senate all papers in his possession," and so forth.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. OLIVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. OLIVER. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is necessarily absent from the Senate on important public business. He is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who seems not to have voted. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. I understand that I am recorded as having voted in the affirmative, and if it be so recorded I do not particularly appreciate the company in which my vote appears to place me.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if it is on account of the company or if he has changed his mind.

Mr. ASHURST. I should be recorded in the negative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona is recorded in the negative.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to inquire if the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. JACKSON. I have a general pair with that Senator, and, as he is not present, I will not vote. I would vote "yea" if the Senator from West Virginia were present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], and that the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. The pair of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has been announced. The Senator from New Mexico is absent on important public business.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Brandegee	Gallinger	Norris	Stephenson
Bristow	Gronna	Oliver	Sterling
Burton	Jones	Page	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Perkins	Townsend

So the resolution was rejected.

ARMOR PLATE FOR VESSELS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask to have read and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 78), as follows:

Whereas bids were opened by the Secretary of the Navy in February, 1913, for furnishing armor plate for the dreadnought Pennsylvania; and

Whereas the representatives of three firms manufacturing armor plate in the State of Pennsylvania, while pretending to bid as competitors, after a conference submitted bids which did not vary more than $1 per ton: and

Whereas the then Secretary of the Navy, notwithstanding an intimation made on the floor of the Senate of the United States that it was alleged there existed collusion among different manufacturers to advance the price of armor plate and divide the profits of the contract, awarded the contract on March 3, 1913, by dividing, for all practical purposes, the award of 8,000 tons of armor plate among the three companies; and

Whereas it is alleged that this action of the said firms reveals that they comprise an armor-plate trust, and that the price named in the contract awarded by the Secretary of the Navy is in the neighborhood of about $25 per ton higher than the previous awards by the Department of the Navy for armor plate: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to forward to the Senate, at as early a date as practicable, a report on the amount of armor plate ordered by the Department of the Navy during the past 25 years, the prices paid in each award, and the names of the firms or corporations to whom the contracts were awarded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over, Mr. President. I object.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that this is identical with the resolution introduced by me on the 17th of March last, which was referred to one of the committees of the Senate, but which has not yet been reported because of the great amount of work pressing upon various members of the committee. It does seem to me that this matter ought to be given attention. I hope the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the resolution. I am advised that the Secretary of the Navy is willing, as it is his duty, to send this information at the earliest possible date. Indeed, it is my understanding that the Secretary is now compiling the data demanded by this resolution. I wish the objection would be withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not feel like withdrawing my objection. There is a pretty serious allegation contained in the resolution against the retiring Secretary of the Navy which ought to be inquired into a little before we pass the resolution, and I now give notice that when the resolution properly comes before the Senate I shall move to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the objection the resolution goes over.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution I offered, the objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that motion has to go over under the rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it must go over. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] asks that, in pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, the Senate now resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. GALLINGER on page 129, line 13, to strike out all after the numerals "$300,000" down to and including the word "products," in line 24, as follows:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senate to consider at this time the resolution reported with amendments by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, authorizing the Committee on Banking and Currency to have hearings, if it be agreeable to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to having the sundry civil appropriation bill temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the resolution, if it leads to no debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement, and, under the rule, that can not be done. So I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. OWEN. I make no further request.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, line 13, in lieu of the amendment proposed by Mr. GALLINGER, it is proposed to strike out all after the numerals "$300,000," and to insert:

Section 1 of the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies," is hereby amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations between laborers made with the view of lessening the number of hours of labor or of increasing their wages; nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture made with a view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withhold his point of order, as I wish to make some observations on the proposed amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act which I have offered is identical with the one which, as was stated on the floor of the Senate yesterday, was offered by Senator Sherman when the bill which bears his name was under consideration, and which was accepted by the Senate.

I might say that the purpose of this amendment is the same as of the proviso for which it is offered as a substitute. I believe that it is preferable to action of the committee, however, for several reasons. If a law in its operation proves more far-reaching than it is believed it should be, the proper way, it appears to me, is to change the law, and not to refuse to enforce it. If the Sherman Antitrust Act has been construed so as to apply to labor unions and farmers' associations and it is believed that such organizations should be exempted from its operation, it appears to me that the proper thing to do is to amend the law so as to exempt such organizations from its operation, and not in effect to encourage violation of the law by specifically providing that funds appropriated for the enforcement of the law shall not be used in case certain classes violate the law. Any Congress has the power to repeal or amend laws enacted by former Congresses, and if Congress believes that such laws should be repealed or amended it is its duty to take such action; but if Congress does not see fit to use its power to repeal or amend such laws, I do not believe that it is justified in encouraging the violation of such laws. It may be argued that it was not the intention at the time the law was enacted to include labor unions and farmers' organizations within its scope, and that in providing that this appropriation shall not be used to prosecute such organizations we are merely insisting on the original intent of the act. It seems to be well settled, however, that the law has been construed by the courts as applying to such organizations, and if the purpose is to exempt them, the logical and proper way appears to me to be to write the exemption into the law. Let us make the law read the way we think it ought to read, prohibit the acts which we think it ought to prohibit, and then let us enforce it without fear or favor, impartially and efficiently. I believe the Sherman Antitrust Act has been one of the best laws ever placed on the statute books, and I also believe it would have proved of far greater benefit than it has if it had been rigorously enforced from the outset. I believe that many of the problems which are confronting us to-day arise from the fact that many trusts and combinations the creation of which this law was designed to prevent were left almost unmolested for a decade after the law had been enacted, with no systematic and efficient attempt to enforce its provisions.

But, returning to the proviso in this bill, I must say that I am not clear as to what effect it will have if retained in the bill. Even without this provision, there is nothing in this bill making it necessary for the Department of Justice to use money appropriated in this paragraph to prosecute the organizations which the proviso, at least apparently, aims to exempt; and, on the other hand, if the department or the President decides that certain organizations of this kind violate the law and should be prosecuted, I believe there are funds available with which such a prosecution could be carried on, even if none of the money appropriated in this paragraph can be used for such a purpose. If the Department of Justice decides that such combinations are not in violation of law, this provision is unnecessary; if, on the other hand, the Department of Justice decides that such combinations are in violation of the law and ought to be prosecuted for its violation, this provision will not save them from such prosecution. It is to be further noted that this apparent exemption from prosecution would extend only until June 30, 1914, the end of next fiscal year. Is there any reason, if these organizations ought to be exempt from prosecution under the Sherman Act, why such exemption should end with the next fiscal year? These organizations either are or are not operating in violation of the Sherman Act, and the provisions of the act either ought to apply to them or ought not to apply to them. If they are not violating the act in its present form, the provision in this bill is unnecessary; if these organizations are in violation of the act, this provision will not exempt them from prosecution. If the Sherman Act prohibits such organizations and we are satisfied that they should be exempted from its operation, the reasonable and effective way to do it is to amend the act and not to pass this bill, containing a pretended exemption, which, at most, can last only one year.

I do not favor the practice of placing general legislation in appropriation bills, as it often results in the enactment of hasty legislation; but, as Senators know, it is often done, and in this particular instance I believe the amendment which I propose is so simple that no long consideration is necessary in order to understand its effect.

This amendment will definitely exempt these organizations from the operation of the law. The provision contained in the bill, while it apparently exempts them for one year, in reality gives no such exemption.

Mr. President, I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his point of order and let us have a vote upon the amendment I have proposed to the amendment submitted by him.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I inquire if the amendment has been read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. GRONNA. It has been read; but I will ask that it be again read.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that it be again read. It escaped my attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. GRONNA to the amendment of Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from New Hampshire raises a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire does make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California rise to the point of order?

Mr. WORKS. I do not wish to address myself to the point of order, if the Chair desires to rule upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to rule upon the point of order, if the Senator from California will suspend for a moment. By the third clause of Rule XVI it is provided that—

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate to be decided without debate.

As this is not a question of the relevancy of the amendment to the subject matter of the bill, but as it raises the question as to whether or not it is general legislation, it is the duty of the Chair to rule without submitting the question to the Senate, and the Chair accordingly rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. WORKS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will suspend for a moment, if there is a desire to appeal from that ruling, the Chair will be glad to have it settled. The Chair tried to construe the rule correctly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am sure no one desires to appeal. It has been ruled that way universally, certainly for the last 20 years.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, just one word. As the one who presented the amendment certainly I do not wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I know the decision is correct according to our rules, but I had hoped that the amendment would be accepted. We have heard much and there was much said on the floor of the Senate yesterday in favor of labor organizations and farmers' organizations, and I know that the particular amendment which I have offered would give permanent relief. On the other hand, the provision contained in the bill is only a makeshift.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the discussion of this measure has, to my mind, gone far beyond the limits which the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire legitimately fixes. The clause to which it is addressed offers no warrant whatever for the suggestion of connivance with crime on the part of the Congress of the United States; neither does it properly open up for inquiry at all the question of the wisdom of Congress in making the Sherman Act so comprehensive in its scope as to include labor organizations and farmers' associations. I think, Mr. President, he must go far afield indeed who finds in it any room for discussion of the views of Mr. Haywood or Mr. Ettor in relation to any of the controversies between labor and capital.

The provision of the bill that is so obnoxious to some of the distinguished Senators who have been heard in reference to it has been denounced as class legislation. Why, Mr. President, that particular part of the measure to which is attached this proviso which the amendment seeks to excise is class legislation. It singles out a particular class of crimes against the National Government and makes a special appropriation for the prosecution of them—$300,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. It contemplates as well other appropriate proceedings for the suppression of the evils against which those laws were aimed, but the enforcement of the criminal laws against trusts comes within the purpose of the appropriation, if it is not its main object.

From out the long category of crimes against the United States these particular crimes are made the subject of a special provision. The violation of one particular statute is singled out and a liberal provision is made by this act for its enforcement. Are we to infer, accordingly, that the people of the United States are unconcerned about other crimes, or that they are willing to connive at their perpetration—murder, arson, and piracy? Why, no. In addition to the general provisions of the act for the pay of judges, attorneys, marshals, and other court officers, found under the head of "Judicial," page 132, et seq., a specific appropriation is made at page 128, lines 1 to 15, inclusive, of $475,000 for the detection and punishment of crime—of crime generally; of all crime. Then follows the appropriation in question of $300,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws.

The act makes no specific provision for prosecutions for violation of the postal laws or the pure-food law or any other criminal statutes, except perhaps those relating to the customs and the public lands. The act contemplates that the Department of Justice shall not invade the general appropriation, but that it shall have a specific and ample fund for the enforcement of this particular act. This is class legislation beyond controversy, but it is not open to criticism for that reason, and it commands universal support. Everyone approves it. And why? Because it is generally recognized—

First. That crimes and offenses against these laws have not been prosecuted in the past with the vigor that their gravity requires.

Second. That the perpetrators of them often, perhaps usually, are men of vast wealth, against whom the Government would contend but feebly if its officers were obliged to rely solely on the provision made for the enforcement of the criminal statutes generally.

Third. Because of the unusual expense that ordinarily attends prosecutions of this character.

Fourth. And more than all else, because the public suffers immediately and grievously by the acts condemned by these laws that have been habitually and boldly violated.

For these reasons, and perhaps others, this particular class of crimes is made the subject of this legislation. But within that class there is a class to which these reasons do not apply, or they apply so feebly as not to call for any special provision—namely, organizations of farmers and laborers not engaged in the doing of any act in itself unlawful but yet within the inhibition of the Sherman law as it has been construed by the courts. There is in this act no condonation of any such crime, if there be such a crime. In the Debs case the circuit court of appeals said:

> In this instance it is perhaps apparent that the original measure, as proposed in the Senate, "was directed wholly against trusts, and not at organizations of labor in any form." But it also appears that before the bill left the Senate its title had been changed and material additions made to the text; and it is worthy of note that a proviso to the effect that the act should not be construed to apply "to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations made between laborers with a view of lessening hours of labor or of increasing their wages, nor to any arrangements, agreements, or combinations among persons engaged in horticulture or agriculture made with the view of enhancing the price of agricultural or horticultural products," was not adopted. Such an amendment, doubtless, was not necessary in order to exclude agreements and arrangements of the kind mentioned.

But if by entering into an agreement or combination having in view the increasing of wages, the shortening of hours, or the bettering of conditions, and in furthering such agreement or combination, but doing no act unlawful in itself, laborers offend against the Sherman Act, or if farmers do so through their ordinary associations, this proviso expresses the idea that there is no occasion for any special appropriation to punish such infractions of the law. They, it is believed, may be safely dealt with by it in its ordinary course. And why should they not be? Why should there be a special appropriation for the prosecution of such offenses? Are they so numerous as to require some unusual and extraordinary measure for their suppression by the action of the Government? Are the offenders so formidable as to require the employment of expensive counsel outside the regular aids to the Attorney General? Is there any great crying public demand for relief from the evils flowing from such combinations and associations? No one will assert that there is or that there is any occasion for such. It is to arm the officers of the Government in their titanic struggle with the gigantic industrial and financial monopolies of our time that this great sum of money is appropriated. The offenders of the other class may well be left to be dealt with in the ordinary way and out of the general appropriation. That is what this act means, and all it means.

In the opinion in which it was first held that the Sherman Act extended to combinations of laborers seeking to improve their condition Judge Phillips said:

> I think the congressional debates show that the statute had its origin in the evils of massed capital.

That was the original cause giving rise to the law.

Judge Morrow, in United States v. Cassidy (67 Fed., 698–705), said:

> The primary object of the statute was undoubtedly to prevent the destruction of legitimate and healthy competition in interstate commerce by individuals, corporations, and trusts grasping, engrossing, and monopolizing markets for commodities.

He, too, held, however, that it was eventually framed so as to embrace combinations of laborers.

But why may we not properly make special provision to attain the primary object of the law, to arrest the grasping, engrossing, and monopolizing of markets, leaving the evil, if evil it be, not specially aimed at to be corrected in the ordinary way in which the ordinary evils that afflict society are restrained and corrected by the courts?

While the act brought into being by a wise and far-seeing statesmanship was being notoriously violated by the organization of the great trusts that have braved the Nation, it was turned from its original purpose to become an instrument in the hands of the very combinations against whose existence it was leveled. Now that a better public spirit prevails, a determination to enforce the law against rich and poor alike, they would like to see the fund provided to destroy them diverted and exhausted in prosecutions directed at another class of offenders easily dealt with by the ordinary provisions of the law.

If there were no evil to correct but that flowing from associations of laborers and farmers, we all know there would be no specific provision in this bill directed at it. It would not stand out as invested with sufficient importance to justify such. On the other hand, the appropriation would be amply warranted if the act did not reach to such organizations.

The public is demanding the swift and relentless enforcement of the law against monopolizing trusts and combinations. It does not want any portion of the great fund provided for that purpose to be diverted for the purpose of prosecuting labor unions and like organizations for pretended offenses against the Sherman law.

It is asked, "What, then, are you giving these people?" meaning organized labor. We are giving them nothing. We are not professing to give them anything, and certainly not a dispensation to violate the antitrust act or any other act. We are simply declaring what is the common conviction of our people, that the exigencies of the times do not require that we make a special appropriation to prosecute them.

This measure ought to command the support of everyone professing a friendly interest in organized labor. If he harbors the belief that the act was never intended to remedy the evils arising from such, he ought to give it his very cheerful acquiescence. If he thinks the Congress deliberately framed the language of the act so as to reach the associations referred to in the provisos attacked by the amendment, he will still find it difficult to imagine why he should vote for a special appropriation to prosecute offenders falling within those classes.

The sole question presented by the amendment is as to whether the opportunity to use this special appropriation against organizations of laborers or farmers should be accorded to the Attorney General, or whether prosecutions against them, should any seem necessary, should be conducted by the aid of the general appropriation. The specific fund is meager enough, and it should be guarded against depletion or diversion to aid in prosecutions that require no special care, and in respect to which no considerable public feeling is aroused.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, this amendment is offered by my distinguished colleague from New Hampshire. I shall vote against it; and, at the suggestion of one of the older Senators on this side, I shall give my reasons, in order that it may not be understood that New Hampshire and New England are altogether deaf to the interests of the wage earner.

The proposition involves three issues:

First. Is this class legislation?

Second. Does it make any difference in the world whether it is class legislation or not?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the junior Senator from New Hampshire yield to the senior Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HOLLIS. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust when my charming colleague reads his remarks in the RECORD to-morrow morning he will regret that he has put me in the attitude of being one New England man who is deaf to the interests of the laboring people.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very sure my distinguished colleague will be able to take care of himself without any regrets on my part, and without any modification of what I have already said. I was elected to come to the Senate, as I believe, because I entertained the particular views that I am about to express. If they do not agree with the views of my colleague I am sorry for him; but I appreciate his perfect right to entertain his own views, and, if I misrepresent him, to set me right.

As I was about to say, the third issue involved here is one of expediency. Is it expedient to favor associations of farmers and wage earners by the passage of this bill as it stands?

I think some attention should be paid to this matter of class legislation, because I suspect there are some Members on this side of the Chamber who may lean rather against the passage of the bill as it stands, for fear that they may be legislating for a class. I have received many telegrams from manufacturers during the past week asking me to vote against this exemption, on the ground that the exemption is class legislation; and they seem to assume that if it is class legislation it ought not to pass.

I have no hesitation in meeting this issue squarely, and in stating without equivocation that this is class legislation; and I propose to show, if I can, that that is no objection whatever.

There is no provision against class legislation in the Constitution. There is no general provision of law against it. There is no general public policy which it will violate. We are constantly discriminating against certain classes and in favor of others. Our laws are full of them. For example, the tariff bill which will presently come before us is a bill which gives favors to certain classes to the detriment of the rest of the people. The income-tax provision in that bill distinguishes in favor of that class which has an income not over $4,000 and against the class which is fortunate enough to have an income of more than $4,000.

The ordinary labor laws do not apply in many cases to farmers and to household servants. The laws which limit the hours of labor apply frequently to women and children only, and to mills and factories only. The man who is fortunate enough to ride in an automobile has to observe certain rules and regulations which do not apply to men who travel in horse-drawn vehicles. Vendors of milk, vendors of spirituous liquors, vendors of gunpowder frequently have to comply with regulations that do not apply to other vendors. So we might go all down the line and find that there is class legislation in abundance, and its constitutionality is never questioned. The very statute of 1908, the Federal employers' liability law, applies only——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New Hampshire suspend for a moment? The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business 10, Senate resolution 37, authorizing the appointment of a committee to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district, West Virginia.

Mr. KERN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. HOLLIS. As I was about to say, Mr. President, the Federal employers' liability law of 1908 applies only to that class of citizens who are engaged in interstate commerce by railroad. The only constitutional provision applicable to this case is the one that all members of a class shall be treated alike. We find, then, that this is class legislation, and that the mere fact that it is class legislation is no argument against it. But I hope if Members on this side have any doubts about that they will satisfy them before they fail to vote for the passage of this law, as it is proposed, on that account.

Now, then, we come to the question, Is this an expedient law to pass? I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Iowa

[Mr. CUMMINS] for his very handsome admission yesterday, that it was not intended to have the Sherman antitrust law apply to associations of farmers and laborers, and for his assurance that the labor men were properly justified in understanding that it did not so apply. I was not of voting age when this matter was discussed originally, but I do remember that it came with a great shock to the country when the courts decided that the Sherman antitrust law should be applied to labor unions. None but those ingenious and able trust lawyers, who had been able to save their clients from the bona fide purpose of this act, would have been able to conceive and push forward to fruition any such idea. The action of the courts in that regard falls within that class of court-made amendments that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] denounced so brilliantly a few days since.

My only care is to get at it as quickly as we possibly can under the rules of the Senate. The thing that I am most careful about is promptness. If I am going somewhere in an automobile and the machine will not start I will not wait a long while, but I will get out and walk; and if I get started and the machine will not work I am willing to take a horse and be towed to my destination instead of waiting all day for an expert to come and repair the machine.

I should much prefer that this wrong should be righted by direct amendment. I think that would be better; but I am going to take relief just as soon as the opportunity arises by passing the law as it stands. I say we should give to the law department our policy in this regard. They will understand our purpose to repeal this court-made amendment as soon as we can properly do so under the rules. We shall notify the law department that we are not in favor of enforcing the antitrust law even if it may technically be applied to associations of farmers and laborers. We shall let them know that they are to point their activities at the real objects which were intended when the law was passed.

It seems to me that the point raised by Senators yesterday was more acute than important. It is just that sort of conservatism that is found commonly among lawyers that has brought so many of them into disrepute with the majority of the voters of this country. It was just the opposite quality in the leader of the third party in the last campaign—his desire to go forward to his object—that commended him to so many voters who otherwise would not have supported him.

Now we come to the point that has been criticized, which is embraced in the phrase "not in itself unlawful." Every lawyer in the Senate knows and well knows that certain acts which are not unlawful in themselves become unlawful when committed in combination with others, and that the Sherman antitrust law is directed against combinations and conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce.

A man may get the better of his competitors in a great many lawful ways by restraining the trade if he can, so long as he acts alone, but under the Sherman antitrust law these lawful acts when exercised in combination with others become unlawful, not immoral, not unlawful according to the common law, but unlawful under the terms of the antitrust act.

Take the Lawrence cases, which were referred to yesterday. Mr. Ettor and Mr. Giovannitti were indicted for bringing about the death of a woman. I believe the fatal shot was fired by some one at a striker, and an innocent bystander was killed. Mr. Ettor and Mr. Giovannitti were indicted for inciting to murder on the theory that they had advised and urged acts of violence, and that they were therefore liable for the consequences that might properly flow from those acts.

But take the case of Mr. William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Co., one of the chief beneficiaries under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Mr. Wood was indicted by a Massachusetts jury for conspiring with Mr. Atteaux and Mr. Collins in taking dynamite to Lawrence in order to plant it in the residences of the strikers, so that it might be found there and they might be brought into disrepute or perhaps be punished for having it on their premises.

The prosecution, which will begin May 19, I believe, in Massachusetts against Mr. Wood is under the Massachusetts statute, and, as I understand it, if Mr. Wood had transported the dynamite to Lawrence himself instead of having somebody else to do it, then it would not have been a crime. So, under the Sherman Act it is not a crime to do many things by one's self, but when done in combination those things become unlawful.

Now, under this act the law department is left perfectly free to punish all crimes when they are crimes in and of themselves. Crimes like assault, crimes like manslaughter, if committed where they will give the Federal Government jurisdiction, will be prosecuted, and this money may be spent under the terms of this act for that purpose. But it is fair to say that very few common-law crimes do come under the jurisdiction of the Federal authorities.

One reason why I favor this law is brought out by the cases of Ettor and Giovannitti. They were arrested and imprisoned without bail until they were acquitted by a jury of their peers. The evidence was published in the newspapers. We all read it. It was flimsy in the extreme. I have no hesitation in charging that their arrest and imprisonment was brought about by the mill owners, not with any expectation of securing a conviction, but in the hope that their arrest would cow the other strikers and that their absence would break the backbone of the strike.

It is because capital has succeeded in using the police, the militia, legal process, and the courts for their own benefit that I believe the Congress should even matters so far as possible by legislation like this. It is because beneficiaries of the tariff law like Mr. Wood have undertaken to circumvent their employees by tricks and by unjust imprisonment and prosecution; it is because capital has such immense resources and such a tremendous pull or influence over public authorities that I favor laws for them which shall not apply to farmers and wage earners. They have set themselves apart as a class of gilt-edged beneficiaries, and I believe it is just to have class legislation against them as much as to have class legislation for their benefit.

I believe, as I said at the outset, that I was sent to the United States Senate by the State of New Hampshire because I hold these views on this subject, and I should fail in my duty if I did not state what I believe to be the true attitude of New Hampshire on this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to do more than say a word at this time. The vigorous defense of my colleague of certain labor leaders attracted my attention. The suggestion that my colleague made, inadvertently I hope, that he wanted to go on record as one Senator from New England who had sympathy with the labor class does not apply to me. I came up through the ranks of laboring men as to some extent did my colleague, and all through my life I have had the profoundest sympathy for the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. For many years I belonged to an organization of laboring men, and if I am not mistaken I am still in good standing with that organization. So it is not quite fair for any Senator expressing his own views, however radical or extreme they may be, to call in question the integrity of his associates. While I have never advertised myself as a special advocate of labor organizations and labor unions, I should be doing myself an injustice if I consented to permit any Senator to put me in the attitude of being hostile to their interests.

On yesterday I alluded to Mr. Haywood and Mr. Ettor. I had forgotten the distinguished Italian who cooperated with them, and whose name my colleague has mentioned, Mr. Giovannitti. We know what they did. We know what utterances fell from their lips on Boston Common and elsewhere. We know that they went into Lawrence for the purpose of creating strife and discord and agitation, and they accomplished it, all in the name of labor, and we know what the result has been.

Now, Mr. President, two days ago this same man Haywood, in the city of Boston, which has been called sometimes the Cradle of Liberty, exercising the privilege that he claims belongs to him to say anything that he chooses to say on public questions, uttered these words:

> It is against my ethics to enter into an agreement with the capitalist class at any time. Our motto should be to exterminate that class and "emancipate" ourselves. Our organization stands for that, and has in view a new society when all industries will be operated by the working classes and for their benefit.

Mr. President, we are a patient people. If we were not a patient people a man who uttered a statement in public that he was in favor of exterminating the capitalist classes of this country would be taken care of by the legal forces of the United States.

So I say, Mr. President, I am not opposed to the laboring men or to the cause of laboring men, but I am opposed to men like that. I hope the time will come when the Senate of the United States in its wisdom will be willing to help to enact laws that will take care of that class of men and that will prevent them from inciting the poor people whom they are haranguing from day to day to acts of violence and murder.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say now. I may have something further to say before the debate closes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was greatly surprised and not a little concerned to hear a Member of this body declare that he is in favor of class legislation, but my mind was somewhat relieved when I heard the Senator express his peculiar views as to what constitutes class legislation. I am strongly in sympathy with labor organizations established and used for the purpose of maintaining reasonable wages and hours of labor and for the general uplift of laboring men. But I have no sympathy with the use of that or any other organization for the commission of violence to attain their ends.

We have hundreds of these organizations in this country. I do not believe they are within the terms of the Sherman antitrust law, but those same organizations may combine and confederate together just the same as any other organization for the unlawful purpose of restraining trade. If they do, then they bring themselves within the terms of the antitrust law and should be subject to its prohibitions and its penalties.

But we are told that this proviso declares that the money shall not be expended for unlawful acts. It is not necessary that that provision should be contained in the law itself to protect against acts that are not unlawful, and certainly the Senate of the United States ought not to put itself in the position of forbidding the judicial officers of this country from prosecuting any man who commits an unlawful act in violation of the statutes of the country.

Who is to determine whether the particular act charged in a given case is unlawful or not? How is it to be determined? Necessarily, the only proper way is, if the prosecuting officer believes it to be an unlawful act, to prosecute the offender. But we say to him in advance, if this is not an unlawful act and you should prosecute it as such and the Government be defeated, then you have in violation of this statute misappropriated the funds of the Government. I say that is a cowardly thing for Congress to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did I understand the Senator from California to say that, in his opinion, the legal department was in such a position that it would be unable with its ordinary machinery to prosecute a man who had violated, or an association which had violated, the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all. I have not said anything of that kind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from California will realize that for many years after the Sherman antitrust law and other laws like it were placed upon the statute books, there was no special fund of this sort to make prosecutions of a criminal nature, and some civil cases were carried on by the department without using this fund at all. Some of the greatest cases from a historical standpoint were prosecuted with the ordinary machinery of the legal department; and at the present time the legal department is under no necessity to resort to this particular fund, but has abundant means of prosecuting ordinary cases that may come to its attention.

Mr. WORKS. But, Mr. President, I assume that if Congress is appropriating $300,000 for the specific purpose of prosecuting violations of this particular act, it would be upon the theory that the funds now provided for that purpose are insufficient, or else it is not necessary to make any such appropriation at all. Besides that, undoubtedly the Attorney General, with this prohibitive provision contained in the act, would take it as a direction to him not to prosecute any labor organization or farmers' organization under this particular law. Are we going to put ourselves in that position—to tie the hands of an officer whose duty it is to prosecute any offender of any statute of the United States by withholding from him the necessary funds that should be provided for that purpose? That is precisely what we are proposing to do.

The distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has declared his disagreement with my views as to the efficiency of the Sherman antitrust law. If the Senator had done me the courtesy and the honor to listen to my views on that subject as I expressed them in this Chamber yesterday, he might feel differently about it. I have never claimed that the antitrust law was not a just and righteous piece of legislation. As a declaration of right principles in the conduct of business affairs, it is a most excellent provision; as it relates to the mere question of dissolving combinations and organizations formed for the purpose of restraining trade, it is an effective remedy; but the position I took, Mr. President, was that the act did not go far enough; that it did not apply to specific acts intended to restrain trade, no matter to what extent they might go.

The Senator from Iowa gives emphasis to my objection to the statute in that respect by saying that it is quite doubtful in his mind whether physical violence used in restraint of trade would be within the statute. I am ready to go just as far as my friend from Iowa will go to make the antitrust law just as effective to prevent this kind of combination and also specific acts that are intended to interfere with trade and commerce. As I understand, the Senator from Iowa is making a study of this very question for the purpose of ascertaining what amendments to the statute may be made in order to render it more effective, and I sympathize entirely with that effort.

Mr. President, if Congress believes that the present antitrust law includes labor and farm organizations, and at the same time believes that it ought not to do so, then the proper and the just thing for us to do is to go back to that original statute and so amend it as to take them out of its provisions. No one would be more ready to do that than I if it is confined to labor organizations in the proper and legitimate sense of that term; but whenever labor organizations confederate together or conspire to do an unlawful thing in violation of this statute they ought to be prosecuted and held responsible just the same as any other organization.

So, Mr. President, I am not myself willing, however much I may sympathize with the object and purpose of labor organizations, to put myself in the attitude of inserting a provision in this appropriation bill that should, if it is a proper provision at all, be made an amendment to the original statute.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a very few moments. I merely desire to put into the RECORD my own reasons for voting in favor of the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Those reasons are confined strictly to the character of the two provisos. Those provisos are attached to a special appropriation, which is added to the regular appropriation for the purpose of enforcing a particular law.

I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in his view that that is not a wise practice; that the general appropriation should be made sufficient to enable the Department of Justice to enforce the laws, and that it is not well to single out one for peculiar care. But this is only a repetition of what has before occurred. We have made these appropriations, special appropriations, for the enforcement of the so-called Sherman Act, and it was done by Congress with the very natural desire to show the zeal which they felt against trusts.

I once heard Mr. Speaker Reed say in the House of Representatives that the House was not what he should call a "courage center"; but when it comes to dealing with trusts, there is no doubt about the courage of Congress; they are entirely fearless; and the appropriation of this extra fund for the enforcement of the law was introduced to show, I think, not only their zeal, but the soundness of their opinions. So it is not worth while arguing for or against the merit of these extra appropriation funds to enforce particular statutes. They are there.

The objection to the provisos, to my mind, Mr. President, is not that they are class legislation in the sense in which that term has been used in this debate. The Senator from Iowa pointed out yesterday that a great deal of legislation passed by Congress was in its nature and effect class legislation, and that same proposition has been renewed to-day by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and fortified by him with a wealth of original illustration. I therefore think it is not necessary for me to point out that much of our legislation necessarily, like the pure food and drug act, in its operation falls on a particular class of the community.

The objection to these provisos, to my mind, is not that they embody a law which in its operation reaches a particular class; it is that they are intended to exempt certain persons and certain classes from the operation of a universal law as it stands on the statute book—a law that is by its wording intended to apply to everybody. The classes which are thus exempted, Mr. President, are very large, very important, very numerous. If they were not numerous, I fancy they would not be exempted. But they are given in this way a privilege which is a wholly different thing from what is ordinarily called "class legislation." This provision creates not a class, but a privileged class. It gives a certain privilege to important bodies of our fellow citizens, a privilege which the great majority of the American people do not enjoy.

Mr. President, I suppose that it is very old-fashioned in me, but I have been brought up on the idea that one of the foundation stones of the American Republic was the equality of all citizens of the Republic, of all freemen, before the law; that whatever else the Republic of the United States has done or failed to do, it has maintained that principle in intention at least. This seems to me a departure from that great principle. It is no answer to say that under this clause as it is drawn, with the phrase "provided the act is not unlawful," it would not, therefore, be efficient. Mr. President, that sort of legislation is the worst that can be put on the statute book—legislation which "keeps the word of promise to our ear and breaks it to our hope"; legislation which pretends, in answer to the demand of a great class, by shrewdly chosen words, to grant the demand, while in reality it does not.

Nor does it make any difference, Mr. President, so far as the principle involved is concerned, that this applies only to the extent of a special appropriation which perishes at the end of the fiscal year. The principle remains; and that is, that here deliberately we place upon the statute book a provision that certain citizens of the United States—among the best that we have, men who make the backbone of the country, no doubt—that those men, if they belong to certain associations with certain objects, if they are engaged in the promotion of certain excellent purposes and causes, shall be exempt from the operation of a law to which all other American citizens are subject. The large majority of men who work with their hands, for example, are not embodied in labor unions, and to them the provisos give no privilege.

Mr. President, if the Sherman Act by a literal interpretation has been made to work hardship against classes of our community or against individuals whom it was never intended to include in its penalties, then the thing to do, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said yesterday, is to amend the act and make it what it ought to be; but while the act stands upon the statute book universal in its language, applying, as we all have supposed, to all men alike who should violate its provisions, I say, it is a dangerous thing for us to give a privilege to any man by which he can violate a universal law with an impunity guaranteed to him by law, which his fellow citizens do not possess.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not think there is any doubt that, viewing it from an abstract standpoint, there is room for argument on both sides of this question, but there is not a Senator on the floor of the Senate who is not perfectly cognizant of the fact that the Sherman antitrust law was never conceived of as a restriction against labor or against the agricultural interests. The whole agitation, as is set forth in the debates on antitrust legislation during the passage of the legislation, indicates this fact—and around that one fact circle all the arguments in favor of an antitrust law—that it was aimed at the unrestricted and unrestrained power that accompanied great aggregations of actual wealth. It was directed against a system under which a few individuals having in their possession great financial resources, holding in their hands, as it were, the very lifeblood of commerce, could at their sweet will cut the wages of those who converted the raw material into the finished product on the one side, and dictate the price to those who produced the raw material on the other side. There is not a farmer in the Senate—and I suppose there are a few here—who has labored with his own hands, who has toiled to produce that which would minister to the needs and the comforts of the people of this country of ours, who has been engaged in producing our staple products, but has felt the power of aggregate capital overriding and subverting the law of supply and demand, and reducing it not to the law of supply and demand, but to the law of money supply and "the man." There is not a man who does not understand that this legislation was aimed at these aggregations of capital which, under the peculiar genius of our Government, were left, until the antitrust law was passed, practically unrestricted.

There is a strange absurdity just here. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], who has just taken his seat, deplored, as other Senators have done, the fact that this is class legislation. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We are busy from the beginning of one session to the other in appropriating millions of dollars for the purpose of sending out farm demonstrators, and teaching the farmer, at the expense of the National Government, how to produce more. The cost of living has gone high because men have been induced to leave the farm and flock to the centers where these great aggregations of capital promise a man greater return for the work of his brain than on the farm. If this labor is not organized, it is left at the mercy of the man who has the organization and the capital.

I say we are spending millions of dollars to teach the farmer how to grow more, separating him as a distinct class from all other classes, and sending out these special agents for the benefit of the country. Then in the next breath we say to him: "We propose to teach you how to grow more; we propose to relieve the condition that confronts us; but, on the other hand, if you attempt to take charge of your own business, and in a legitimate way combine to get out of it that which you think your own toil is worth, you become subject to the same law that is to be applied to the man who never toiled, who does not work, but who, by inheritance or other means, has come into the possession of vast wealth which represents the accumulated toil of thousands." When the farmer asks that he may have a few more comforts by virtue of the sale of that which he has toiled to produce, we are putting him under the same law as the man who, by the unholy use of his capital, despoils the producer on the one hand and the laborer on the other.

Mr. President, I notice that Chief Justice Fuller, in giving his decision of the famous hatters' case, made use of the expression, quoting from another decision, that this law originated in an attempt on the part of Congress to regulate aggregations of capital, but that on account of their failing to incorporate in the law the very amendment which Mr. Sherman himself introduced, providing that labor and agricultural organizations should be exempt from the operations of the law, it became applicable to all organizations.

I desire to call attention now to a famous case that occurred in 1889, I believe. The farmers and the laborers of this country were the chief agitators against the oppressions of these combinations of capital. They were the ones petitioning Congress for relief. Certain individuals about this time had gotten possession of the bagging factories of this country, and in a short time after they obtained possession of them they served notice on the entire cotton-producing section of the country that they proposed to advance the price of that upon which 9,000,000 people were dependent for covering for their cotton. A few men, combining their capital, were going to extract from those who were preparing for market a great commodity, a commodity upon which the comfort and convenience of millions depended, not a reasonable profit but an unholy profit, simply because they had the wealth and power to do it. The farmers met together and combined and said they would agree not to use this bagging. They had an iron-bound oath not to use it; and the result was that they were liberated from this oppression and ruined the aggregation that had proposed to fleece them.

Take the equity that is involved in that case. A few men were combining not for the purpose of getting necessities, not for the purpose of attempting to better their conditions, that they might educate their children and make their homes a little more comfortable, but in order that they might add to their already unnecessary capital at the expense of those that were producing the wealth of the world. According to the contention of those on this floor, the application of the antitrust law should have stopped these men in their effort to resist the combination of capital that was seeking to fleece the millions engaged in the production of this great necessity. The application of that law would have resulted in each one of these farmers being liable to fine and imprisonment, while under the peculiar form in which the bagging combination was made the persons making it could have gone scot free, for the contracts were made within the State. The price which those that bought the product were forced to pay was paid in the State. It did not become an interstate transaction, because all the contracts were made and filled within the State. So that the combination which was robbing the people, which was laying this burden upon them, would have gone free, while those who were purchasing the product and shipping it to the various States under this unholy price would have been subject to prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law.

There is one other fundamental difference as I see it, and that is this: Wealth in the form of capital is actual. Wealth in the form of muscle and effort, wealth in the form of field, forest, and factory is potential. The object of our Government, as I understand it, is to encourage a diffusion of wealth that will make every man a patriotic citizen, realizing that under the law, no matter what subterfuge may be resorted to, it will be possible for him to get a just return for the labor expended. There is not a man on this floor who will dare stand up and declare that he believes the farmers of this country and the laborers of this country under the actual, practical operation of our law have gotten their just return for the vast wealth produced in this country.

Speaking about class legislation, a majority of the people in this country are engaged in doing the labor in both field and factory. It has been said here this afternoon that we are catering to those engaged in labor and in agricultural pursuits on account of their numbers rather than on account of the equity involved.

The whole thing resolves itself back into this: We as legislators should see to it that labor, the actual force that converts capital into that which we need, shall not be oppressed by capital in its aggregate form; that the farmers of this country have a right to combine for the purpose of diffusing wealth and not for the purpose of concentrating it.

It is absurd and idle to stand on this floor and argue that if the hundreds and thousands of laborers employed in a steel factory were to strike and secure a raise in their wages the result of that would be as disastrous to the people at large as for the capitalists engaged in this industry to combine and put an unholy price upon that which labor has produced and concentrate that wealth in the pockets of a few and menace this very Government, as was done in 1907.

When wages are raised it results in a diffusion of capital and an impetus to trade. It creates with the wage earners the very means of increasing their purchases; and everyone knows that their desires are far from being fulfilled. The same is true of farm products. No man would stand and argue that actual capital, with its powerful potentiality in the hands of a few, should be treated under the same law and in the same way as the desire of those who labor and cause to be produced that which was not produced before. No man will contend that the millions of farmers and laborers in this country should be treated under the special law in reference to combinations, when the purpose of one class of men is to get the necessities of life, while the purpose of the other is to increase their millions out of the necessities of life. They lie in different fields; they are entitled to different legislation.

If we Senators, selected out of all of the millions of people in this country, are so obtuse that we can not stand in this body and draw a distinction between those who have and have more than they are entitled to and those who have not or have less than they are entitled to we are not worthy of seats in this august body. I, for one, shall vote to retain in this bill this provision just as it is, for the reason that I believe the author of it meant to say, even if it is a little awkwardly expressed, that the farmers and laborers of this country shall not, in the process of organization, be considered subject to the operation of the antitrust law, but shall be subject to the operation of other laws that pertain to violence and bloodshed and whatever else may be incident to their actions but for which nothing can be visited upon the organization.

If a lot of farmers were to organize for the purpose of raising the price of a commodity, and some one among the organization were to commit murder, the purpose for which they organized was not for murder, and the individual who committed the murder would be subject to the law that controls murder. The same is true of all other organizations. But the specious argument that because there has been violence therefore they ought to be restrained from any effort to relieve themselves from an unhappy condition is an absurdity that none of us should allow to have even serious consideration.

I, for one, heartily agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] when he says, "If I am riding in an automobile and it does not show evidence of getting there I shall walk." The provision serves notice on the courts that we do mean to eliminate agricultural and labor organizations from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, and therefore I am going to vote for it until such time as I shall have the privilege of voting for an amendment to the original law.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, it seems to be fairly clear now what the supporters of the language which the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] desires to strike from the bill hope to accomplish.

I doubt very much if the laboring people of the United States, or many of the Senators, are aware of the position now occupied by the laboring people of the United States. There should be no question in the mind of any man as to the right of the working people throughout this country, prior to the passage of the Sherman antitrust law, to form themselves into organizations or combinations. Since the repeal of the statute by which the justices of the peace in England fixed the workingman's wages and made it a misdemeanor for a man to accept more wages than the justices fixed, it has never been suggested in any Anglo-Saxon community that working people had not the right to form themselves into combinations or organizations for the purpose of making collective bargains with reference to the rate at which they would sell their labor or the conditions under which they would work.

At the time of the passage of the Sherman antitrust law, as was clearly shown by the debates in this body, there was a great hue and cry throughout this country against certain great aggregations of capital. The Standard Oil Co. was specifically referred to in the debates in this body, and several Senators asked the author of the Sherman antitrust law the direct question of whether or not this legislation could, by any sort of forced construction, be held to apply to combinations of workingmen. The proposition was hardly treated seriously in this body, and when the Senator from Mississippi, Senator George, in order to make assurance doubly sure, offered an amendment substantially the same as the language carried by the proviso in this bill, there was not a single vote cast against it in this body.

The working people of the Nation having been reassured by the debates, and reassured by the statement of the author of the bill and by the action of its friends upon the floor, there was no comment even when that language was finally dropped at the time the bill was recommitted to the committee, stripped of that and many other amendments, some of which the author of the bill complained were plainly intended to kill his legislation.

There was no criticism of the legislation, largely because of the statements made by the author and the supporters of the bill that it was far from the mind of any Senator to attempt to prevent the laboring people of America from exercising the rights that the laboring people of every civilized country in the world were then exercising. They had that right, then, prior to the passage of this law; but, Senators, I say to you that they have not that right now. If there is one thing that stands out clearly in the decisions handed down construing the Sherman antitrust law, it is that a combination of men engaged in producing a commodity which is to become the subject of interstate commerce is in violation of that law.

I say to you that any railroad strike that may be called for any purpose is a plain violation of that law, and the men participating in it may be civilly and criminally prosecuted under its provisions. They may be prevented from formulating and presenting their demands even as an organization, without a strike or a threat to strike. Under the provisions of the law and the decisions of the courts as they stand to-day every railroad employees' organization in this land is an organization and a combination in restraint of trade.

It was never intended to give the language of the law that construction; and it was not until that construction was given to it that any attempt was made to limit and correct what nearly every man thinks is a wrong interpretation of the law. In another body, in the year 1910, this language, by way of limitation on an appropriation bill, was offered and adopted. In 1910 three times, as I recollect, this provision was submitted to this body and was here rejected. Finally, in conference, it went out. But then, as now, many gentlemen who held that they could not vote for the provision also held that it was unnecessary, and to-day the gentlemen who seek to strike the language from the bill which will prevent the Attorney General from using this particular fund to prosecute the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, the firemen, or the engineers for being in a combination the object of which is to restrain trade by means of strikes say that this legislation should not be enacted, that we should not seek to bring about this change of legislation by indirect methods. Yet, when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] offered an amendment which would change the substantive law, on its face an amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act, a point of order was interposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

If the Senate desires to pass upon this change of the law, it has it in its power to do so now. But this is the treatment that laboring people have received at the hands of their alleged friends in many legislative bodies throughout the country. The point of order can be withdrawn if the Senator from New Hampshire desires to withdraw it, and if his colleagues do not interpose it again, here and now the Senate of the United States can say whether or not it desires to deal with organizations such as the Standard Oil Co. was, and other great aggregations of capital are, in the same terms and in the same manner as it deals with organizations of labor.

Senators say it is class legislation. When you give a class in this country a special interest you are bound in some way to compensate the class against which that privilege operates. You gentlemen for years have pursued a fiscal policy which enables a manufacturer in this country to sell his goods in a protected market, and your fiscal policy also permits him to buy his labor in a free-trade market, so that the laboring people of this country are ground between the upper and the nether stone.

The countries of the world are searched and scoured for men whose conditions of life, whose training, and, perhaps, lack of educational advantages make them satisfied with less than that which the American laborer demands. Hordes are brought to this country and can be seen any morning in any industrial town knocking at the factory door for an opportunity to take bread out of the mouths of American laboring people for whom you claim to be legislating. This Chamber in a week or two will be resounding with the groans and sobs of gentlemen on the other side of the aisle denouncing legislation because in taking away the privilege of some swollen tariff beneficiary you pretend to think that the American laborer is going to be injured.

When you compelled the American laboring man to sell his product in a free-trade market and to buy that which he used in a protected market, you did it on the theory that the protected manufacturer would hand down a part of his gains; that he was simply the trustee to hand down what he received to the workingmen whom he employed.

But you never asked him to give a bond and you never asked him to carry out the trust. It became necessary for the American laboring men to form themselves into unions, combinations, or organizations in order that the laborer might present his side of the case in company with his fellows, in order that when he spoke for one he might speak for the thousands who gave him strength as they stood behind him. Yet by indirection and by an interpretation of the statute by the courts their rights and privileges are swept away like a cobweb before a blast of wind, and when we attempt in the only way we can to restore him to his former condition, gentlemen who have been voting for class legislation all their lives become horrified at the thought. It is true that it is class legislation in my judgment. It is also true, however, in my judgment, that one piece of class legislation begets another, and the class legislation that begets this is the tariff law that you passed enabling men to get more for their products than they were worth on the plea that they would hand a part of it down. It has not been handed down. So the combinations and organizations of labor are in existence, and they had their right to be in existence. That was never disputed until the passage of the Sherman antitrust law and certain court decisions under that act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has made and has repeated the point that the manufacturers refuse to hand down any part of their profits. I presume the Senator is familiar with the report of the Royal British Commission, made, I think, a year ago, in which they said, from a very exhaustive examination both in Europe and in this country, the laboring men of this country are receiving twice as much in wages as they are in Great Britain. Does not the Senator think, after all, that some part of the profits have been handed down to the laboring men in the United States?

Mr. HUGHES. I am not familiar with the figures that the Senator quotes, but in view of the privileges that the Senator's party has extended to certain favored people in this country and the control that they have given them over the prices of commodities and the necessaries of life, I should think it would be more like even-handed justice if they received four times what is received in European countries rather than two times what is received abroad. The fact remains that it will not be handed down, and it never can be handed down so long as the American workingman sells his commodity on a free basis and so long as he must buy in a protected market. The slightest thought or investigation will convince the Senator of that.

However, I desire to make my position clear with reference to this amendment. The situation I am placed in is this: I have an opportunity now to help this body to say that it is not now and never was intended to class organizations of labor with the organizations of capital at which the antitrust legislation was directed. I want to help this body to say, if I can, that when a judicial interpretation of the statute bears against the people who are the real bone and sinew of this Nation, so far as legislation can do it I am going to help to remedy that wrong.

In England some years ago when by a similar judgment of a court interpreting the common law or a statute it was held that organizations of labor going upon a strike entered into a conspiracy, that the man or men against whom they struck had been damaged, and that this organization of labor was responsible in damages, and when they were mulcted in a great sum of money, the British House of Parliament promptly met the emergency. They did not fear and they do not fear class legislation. They promptly met the emergency with a bill that exempted organized labor from such legislation, and set aside the interpretation placed upon the legislation by the court.

I ask you, Senators, if the English Government is to be any more fair, decent, and liberal in its treatment of English workingmen than the Congress of the United is to be in its treatment of American workingmen? I would be glad to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, to which the Senator from New Hampshire interposed a point of order, if I could, and I point out to him the way in which he can give the Senate of the United States an opportunity to pass upon that question directly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HUGHES. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply availed myself of a rule—plain and unmistakable—of the Senate; and I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I had notice served on me from both sides of the Chamber that if I withdrew the point of order it would be renewed.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is only responsible for his own action. I put it to him now to see if any other Senator will renew the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite take the responsibility. I do not shrink from it. I have no disposition to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator desires to take the responsibility, there is no need to attempt to shift it to any other Senator on either side of the Chamber. It is well known, Mr. President, that a single Senator can interpose a point of order against the amendment as offered. They also know that that is the reason why the proviso appears in the shape that it does appear. As it stands now it is a limitation upon a fund, and under the rules of the Senate that is the furthest limit to which this body can go over the interposition of a point of order.

Now, I want to read for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a statement which was made during the debates upon the Sherman antitrust law. I want to show him that the supporters of this amendment, the advocates of this language as it appears in the bill, are not all radical, are not necessarily extreme in their views. If the Senate will bear with me, I will quote from the debates in the Senate under the date of March 27, 1890:

> When you are speaking of providing to regulate the transactions of men who are making corners in wheat, or in iron, or in woolen or in cotton goods, speculating in them or lawfully dealing in them without speculation, you are aiming at a mere commercial transaction, the beginning and the end of which is the making of money for the parties, and nothing else. That is the only relation that transaction has to the State. It is the creation or diffusion or change of ownership of the wealth of the community. But when a laborer is trying to raise his wages or is endeavoring to shorten the hours of his labor, he is dealing with something that touches closely, more closely than anything else, the Government and the character of the State itself.
> The maintenance of a certain standard of profit in dealing in large transactions in wheat, or cotton, or wool, is a question whether a particular merchant, or a particular class of merchants, shall make money or not, or shall deal lawfully or not, shall affect the State injuriously or not; but the question whether the standard of the laborer's wages shall be maintained or advanced, or whether the leisure for instruction, for improvement, shall be shortened or lengthened, is a question which touches the very existence and character of government of the State itself. The laborer who is engaged lawfully and usefully and accomplishing his purpose in whole or in part in endeavoring to raise the standard of wages is engaged in an occupation the success of which makes republican government itself possible and without which the Republic can not in substance, however it may nominally do in form, continue to exist.
> I hold, therefore, that as legislators we may constitutionally, properly, and wisely allow laborers to make associations, combinations, contracts, agreements for the sake of maintaining and advancing their wages, in regard to which, as a rule, their contracts are to be made with large corporations who are themselves but an association or combination or aggregation of capital on the other side. When we are permitting and even encouraging that we are permitting and encouraging what is not only lawful, wise, and profitable, but absolutely essential to the existence of the Commonwealth itself.

I am quoting from the speech of Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, made in support of or at least in connection with the amendment offered by Senator George, of Mississippi, to take from without the provision of the Sherman antitrust law organizations of labor.

I have no desire to detain the Senate further. I will close by saying that I trust the time is not far distant when an opportunity will be given to the Senate to pass upon this question, not as a few lines appearing in the middle of an appropriation bill but as a substantive proposition, not limiting or tying the hands of the Attorney General in certain directions but as saying to the Nation, and to the courts particularly, that it never was intended and is not now intended to prevent organizations of laboring men from combining to do the thing that they are permitted to do in the language of the proviso.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator before he takes his seat permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There seems to be some difference of viewpoint among those who favor this proviso as to how far they go, and knowing that the Senator from New Jersey has given a great deal of attention to this matter and matters of this kind I should like to have his opinion.

It has been suggested in the discussion that the law would remain the same, and the general appropriation for the Department of Justice would be available for the purpose of prosecuting labor organizations and farmers' organizations that were guilty of the offense this particular appropriation is prevented from being used in the prosecution of. If I understand correctly, that is the viewpoint.

Now, if that is correct, what have we here except this, that it will still be the duty of the Attorney General and the Department of Justice to prosecute labor organizations which violate the antitrust law in this particular respect; it will still be the duty of the Department of Justice, under the Attorney General, to prosecute farmers who violate the antitrust law in this particular respect; and the only modification will be that the expenses will be paid out of a general appropriation instead a part of this appropriation of $300,000 being used for that purpose. Therefore these provisos are narrowed down in effect to the simple question whether or not a part of the specific appropriation of $300,000 may or may not be used in prosecuting them as well as industrial organizations or railroad organizations or any other organizations that violate the antitrust law.

It seems to me that if that viewpoint is correct we are spending a great deal of time discussing a wider view of the case, that falls here in a very narrow compass, indeed, and will only relate to the disposition of $300,000 during one fiscal year. Does the Senator from New Jersey agree to that view?

Mr. HUGHES. I do agree with some of the suggestions made by the Senator, but, owing to the distance between us, I can not say that I followed him altogether.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I tried to make myself clear.

Mr. HUGHES. I think perhaps if I state my position the Senator will be satisfied.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the Senator understand my statement?

Mr. HUGHES. Not altogether; but I think the Senator will be satisfied if I state my position.

I do not attach much importance to this sum of money which is appropriated. I think it has outlived its usefulness. I always thought that it was intended originally as a sort of accelerator for the production of campaign contributions, but in these days of publicity of such gifts it has rather outlived its usefulness. I have never feared, and I do not fear now, that the present administration will use any of this particular fund, or any other fund, for the prosecution of organizations of labor. I am simply desirous of having the Senate retain this language in the bill, because to strike it out would be to say that the Senate of the United States was against differentiating between organizations of labor and organizations of capital.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think now I understand the Senator.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to deal in a straightforward, frank, and effective fashion with a question of this kind. I admit that there is an environment, there is a human equation in the labor organizations and in the struggle of its members for existence, that give it a strength of appeal that we do not find in the struggles and in the strife between great corporate industrial bodies such as we usually have in contemplation in connection with antitrust laws. I believe that there is much that deserves very careful consideration in a proposal to amend permanently and in an effective way the antitrust act as suggested in the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]; but should we play with a serious question like that by admitting here that this little item of $300,000 in an appropriation bill for one fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, is to be used simply for the purpose of making a sort of general declaration in regard to which we may claim this or we may claim that? I can not believe that that is the way to deal with so important a question as this; and on that ground, and that ground only, I shall not vote in favor of the retention of these provisos in this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily, and that its consideration be resumed immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business on to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 11, Senate resolution 19.

Mr. STONE. What is it?

Mr. SMOOT. A resolution that all Senators having less than three employees as chairman of committees, or otherwise, be allowed an additional employee, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not hear the Senator, Mr. President. What was the proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. I moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 11, being Senate resolution No. 19.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Is that the resolution that was reported the other day from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. It was reported from the committee on April 28, 1913.

Mr. STONE. How was it reported? What is the status of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Adversely.

Mr. SMOOT. It was reported adversely by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on April 28, 1913.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the hour is quite advanced, we are tired with the work of the day, and there will be some discussion of that matter. I know, of course, there can not be discussion on a motion to proceed to its consideration——

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But there will be discussion of the resolution on its merits. So I——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no inclination whatever of crowding the resolution to-night. Would the Senator object to a unanimous-consent agreement that we take it up immediately after the disposal of the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think it is a matter that ought to be disposed of at this time by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 7, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 6, 1913.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God our heavenly Father, with hearts bowed in sorrow, because death, always mysterious and unbidden, has visited this congressional body and taken from its midst a Member who was peculiarly fitted by natural gifts, education, and experience to serve his people and his country. But Thou art God; Thou knowest the beginning and the end; Thou hast ordered all things, and Thou doest all things well. Comfort us, his people, the stricken wife and children, by the eternal faith revealed to the world in the life, death, and resurrection of the Christ who thus brought to light life and immortality in Thee.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, abide with me!

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3321—the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening there was pending a request from the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to recur to paragraph 591 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that my understanding was that it was not in order to offer an amendment on reaching a paragraph until the paragraph reserved had been disposed of, but in making inquiries later I was told that the amendment should have been offered at the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the understanding was that when we passed these paragraphs they were all to be noted as we went along, and then we would not go back. But I am not going to be captious about the matter. If the gentleman desires to offer a real amendment I shall not object. I do not want to go back for the purpose of debate, the gentleman understands, but if the gentleman has a real desire to amend I shall not object.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a very desirable amendment, and I hope the gentleman will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 13, page 121, add: "Provided, That no rags shall be imported into the United States except such as have been treated and sterilized in such manner as to remove as far as possible the danger of the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases through such importations, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make proper rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all pending amendments thereto be limited to eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all pending amendments thereto be limited to eight minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have offered no amendment to the rates in this bill, realizing the futility of any effort to change the rates of the bill by any amendments offered on this side. I have contented myself with voting on amendments offered on this side and in calling attention from time to time to the inconsistencies and errors in the bill.

But I now offer this amendment as an administrative provision, and I offer it hopeful that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], realizing the very great danger to the lives and health of our people that lies in the importation of promiscuous rags from all regions of the earth, will agree to this provision that rags, before being imported, must be cleaned and sterilized, for the purpose of preventing the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases.

We have a provision in this bill which prohibits the introduction of hides of cattle until the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that their introduction will not bring in cattle diseases. How much more important it is to protect the health of our people, the lives of our citizens.

The present law places a duty of 10 cents a pound on rags. It is almost prohibitive. If any rags at all are now imported, they are the high-grade, clean rags, and therefore they do not present the menace to life and health that the introduction of all kinds of rags from all parts of the earth does. I hope the committee will see its way clear to accept the amendment.

During the consideration of this bill, as the Democratic car of Juggernaut has steam-rollered over the industries of my State and of the Nation generally, I may have been somewhat oversevere, possibly, in some of my criticisms. It is possible I may have said that there is not a logical provision in the bill. If I have made that statement, I desire to apologize and to point to this provision as one shining exception to the general rule of inconsistency, for I am sure that all will agree with me that a provision for free rags in a Democratic tariff bill is the very acme and pinnacle of all logic. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Free rags—rags from the harems of Turkey; rags from the slums of London; rags from the purlieus of Naples and Rome; rags from the fever, cholera, and bubonic plague infested hospitals and camps of the Balkan Peninsula; rags from everywhere; rags, the sign manual and emblem, the inevitable accompaniment, of all Democratic tariff legislation. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Now, there is more logic in this——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret I have not time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. There is more logic in this than you gentlemen on the Democratic side realize. You have claimed that in this bill you are putting necessities on the free list. Aye; necessities! Can the imagination of man conjure up anything so much of a necessity under Democratic tariff legislation as rags? [Laughter.] There may be gentlemen on this side unkind enough to say that the Lord knows there will be rags enough under our flag when this bill passes without importing them free from abroad, and I agree with them. But the gentlemen on the other side have no doubt concluded that it is proper and logical that as we transfer industries and opportunities for labor from ours to foreign shores we should allow the rags that are discarded by those whom we thus furnish labor abroad to come here to clothe unemployed and impoverished people at home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But rags will not only be a necessity, if we are to judge by past experience. Under Democratic tariff legislation they will be all the fashion and quite the fad among many classes of our people, a necessity so universal as to be almost a luxury. In view of these facts and my desire to be entirely fair in this debate I am constrained to say that, overlooking for the moment your measureless errors, your boundless blunders, your innumerable and incomprehensible inconsistencies, one must acknowledge the marvelous sagacity and consistency you have displayed from your viewpoint in your invitation to free entry of all the unwashed rags of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The band will now play a little ragtime. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if there has been an indictment of the Republican Party in the last 20 years that has been more effective than any other indictment that has been brought it is that indictment against the Payne law that the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and some of his colleagues on that side of the House have brought against their own legislation within the last week whilst this bill has been pending on the floor. Of course, if it was not for the fact that conditions deny all the arguments that the gentleman from Wyoming has made, his speech would put the Republican Party in a very unenviable light before the country, because the gentleman can not contend that taxed rags bear less microbes or less disease than free rags. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There can be no distinction in the rag, whether it is taxed or untaxed.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no harm if the microbe remains on the other side.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the reason they admitted them free.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Seriously, I understand that in the importation of these rags they are largely cleaned before they come here; but if they come here otherwise than clean rags they are immediately put through a process that eliminates all dirt, all disease, and all microbes before they come in contact with anyone they might possibly hurt. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 64.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to this paragraph? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 607? Are there any amendments to paragraph 608?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to paragraph 608.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 122, line 21, after the word "sheep," insert "marmot, wolf, raccoon, red fox, kit fox, pony, house cat, wild cat, opossum, muskrat, Japanese mink, Chinese weazel, kangaroo, hair seal, wool seal, wombat, wellaby, squirrel, black bear, brown bear, badger, civet cat, beaver, kolinski, mink, fitch, nutria, skunk, wolverine, otter, cross fox."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I should like about three minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask unanimous consent that it close in 10 minutes. I will reserve 2 minutes and give the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be yielded to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], and 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the furs included in this amendment are the same that I sought to include in the amendment I offered last Saturday evening. They are not the most costly varieties, but such as are used by the common people.

In the debate upon that proposition the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] was kind enough to say that my argument in behalf of the people of the Northern States who have to use furs and for whom fur clothes are a necessity had moved him almost to tears. I can only hope that that generous emotion of the heart will continue so that eventually he will be converted from the fallacy upon which he started the consideration of this bill, that fur clothing was a luxury and should be taxed under Democratic principles. There are some things in his argument that deserve attention, not for the logic, but for the curious nature of the propositions advanced. The gentleman says he visited Minnesota in the summer time and he found it as hot or hotter than it was in Florida. Of course that is no proof that it is not cold in winter.

He further states that he employed a cab driver, and the cab driver took him around the city of St. Paul, pointed out the palaces upon the hills in that magnificent city, and told him that the palaces were built and occupied by men who had made their fortunes in the fur business.

Now, I never knew before—and I have listened to all the debates on both sides about the tariff commission—I never knew before the reason why the Democrats, including the gentleman from New York, opposed a tariff commission. But now I see the reason. It is so much cheaper and easier to get their information from the cab drivers of the country, and, of course, it must be very reliable. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. No, Mr. Chairman; I decline to yield. Now, taxing raw furs must add to the cost of the fur clothing of the common people, including the farmers, lumbermen, mail carriers, and street car drivers. The gentleman's own logic must lead him to believe that it will increase the price of this necessity, or else he has departed from his own logic. Certainly he can not contend consistently that a tax on the importation of material for clothing will impoverish the rich nabob who deals in furs.

The way to reach him would be to increase the income tax, because he passes the tariff tax on to the consumer. If taking the duty off from clothing reduces the price of clothing to the poor man, for whom the gentleman professes he has such a tender feeling, of course, putting it on fur clothing, which my people wear, must increase the price of that necessity of life. But he has made an insinuation that the gentleman from Minnesota is unwittingly arguing in favor of the rich corporations in Canada, the Hudson Bay Co. and the Canadian Pacific Railway. He then turns around and accuses his own party of subserviency to foreign influence. He makes the astounding assertion that he now fears that the Canadian Pacific Railway is so powerful in this country as to compel this Government to repeal the provision for free tolls for coastwise ships in the Panama Canal. Just think of it! A Democratic President, a Democratic House, a Democratic Senate, and this rich Canadian corporation is powerful enough to compel them to repeal the law they have recently enacted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. STEENERSON. He further states that he is opposed to the importation of all costly furs and that he wants the Married Men's Protective Association to organize a movement to prohibit all importation of such furs. That remedy is futile, because the rich women who wear those furs, that he sees on the streets of New York, go abroad every summer, and they will buy their expensive furs over there, array themselves most gorgeously, and come back; so that remedy is useless. Then, again, the women might in retaliation organize a married women's protective association, and they might curtail the expenditures of their husbands, and so there would be domestic discord and disaster throughout the country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there are two different and very important phases of this subject of fur importations and manufacture. One of them has been discussed by my colleague, Mr. STEENERSON—that of your tariff provision making an increased price for the people who have to use the common furs as necessities of daily use in our section of the country. That was fully discussed by my colleague and myself the other evening, and I do not need to further urge that you should not increase the hardship of our common people on the cost of their daily clothing unless absolutely necessary. That you do not claim is the case.

There is another phase which has not been discussed, and I will very briefly discuss that, so you will realize the injury and injustice you are doing by the duties on raw furs in the bill to a very important national industry, employing many thousands of our citizens at good wages and under good living conditions—that is, the great injury the imposition of duties on raw furs will be to the international fur trade. The fur trade for ages has been and must necessarily be international.

Very few nations—only Russia to a small extent and one or two others—put a tariff on raw furs; they are produced everywhere in the world and bought everywhere and used in all northern climates. Some people prefer some kinds made in their own peculiar way and others prefer their own way. The result has always been that furs have always been dealt with as articles of international commerce and bought and sold as they could be to the best advantage. Your tariff on raw furs changes all that and prevents our merchants and makers freely buying abroad, using as best they can and then selling the remainder to the best advantage in some other international market. Such a change will most likely result in costing our people more, but providing them with poorer quality of garments. The Hudson Bay Co. would like nothing better than to have us put a tariff on raw furs coming into the country, because it would prevent our fur dealers from competing with them in Canada for the raw furs produced there. For instance, the fur dealers of St. Paul and New York go to the Canadian producing point in the northwestern territories in the open market and bid for the raw furs against the Hudson Bay Co. If we have a tariff here, our price can not be as high as that of the Hudson Bay Co. because we must pay a duty on them coming here and then after using what we can must sell the remainder in the open international market again in competition with that company. This must be at a loss. The result is that this fur business would be taken from the northern cities, where it has flourished for generations, and gradually transferred to the eastern Canadian market or the London market, where there is a free interchange without these burdensome taxes. This very tax may be the additional burden sufficient to destroy the industry and yield no beneficial results.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Are the furs named in this amendment all on the free list?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. All raw furs are on the free list now. The amendment I have offered, which ought to be acceptable if it is deemed absolutely necessary to have any tariff on raw furs, places all the furs used as luxuries on a dutiable list, and all others which are bought by people of moderate means on the free list. But the breaking up of this international business, which is on the same standing the world over, will prevent the United States doing its share of that business, because when we import furs for consumption, making them into garments, part of them can be used and part of them can not be used to advantage, and if the part not used always represents a large loss and can not again enter the international market with even competition with other fur markets, it must drive our people out of that business and confine them to the small local trade. This will inevitably result in costing our people far more for their garments, and such garments must necessarily be of poorer quality, because skins must be hereafter used up, whether quite suitable or not, which now can be resold elsewhere to advantage. I will append to my remarks a telegram from the fur dealers of St. Paul and Minneapolis on this subject and a statement as to the probable effect of this bill by one of the best-informed men in the country.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS, Washington, D. C.:

We have sent the following telegram to Chairman UNDERWOOD and request your influence to prevent this injustice to us:

We, the undersigned fur merchants and manufacturers of St. Paul and Minneapolis, desire to protest against the proposed duty on raw furs. None of the great commercial nations impose a duty on raw furs, and there never has been a duty on this article into the United States. We have built up a large international business on the basis of free exchange of raw furs with other countries. This has existed for generations, and a duty on this legitimate article of commerce, which is imposed by none of the other countries, will prove a serious handicap to American merchants engaged in this trade. Our fur houses make large collections of raw furs in Canada and other countries, bringing them into this country and selling and exchanging them freely in the international markets. If the proposed duty becomes a law, a large portion of this business would cease. We would invite retaliation by other countries against furs collected in this country and our international business would be seriously curtailed, even if it were not destroyed. The apparent purpose of the revision of the tariff is to free American commerce and to make goods in common cheaper to our people. We protest on placing a serious handicap on our business that is contrary to the whole spirit of the proposed law. A duty levied on the theory that furs as a whole are articles of luxury would be a serious injustice to most of the fur manufacturers and dealers in this country. The largest portion of the fur skins imported into and manufactured in this market are made into articles of necessity and not of luxury. We desire to enter an emphatic protest against this duty, and respectfully request that raw furs be allowed to enter the United States as heretofore, free of duty.

NEW YORK, April 19, 1913.

Hon. F. C. STEVENS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the courteous interview had with you this week, and pursuant to your request, I herewith respectfully submit in writing the reasons why the placing of any duty on importations of raw furs would be unfair to the United States fur merchant and ultimately to the country at large.

Before going into the details you may not take it amiss or consider it immodest if for the purpose of lending credence to my statements I should say that my firm has enjoyed an honorable existence here and abroad for nearly 60 years.

The writer has been in the fur business for over 30 years.

Further reference can readily be obtained from any reputable fur house or bank in New York or St. Paul, Minn.

In making any statements or quoting figures to you I shall lean to conservatism to the best of my knowledge.

Aside from the United States Customs Statistics, all other figures are based on estimates, as there are no other statistics obtainable in the fur line.

First. Since the establishment of this Government raw fur skins have always been free.

Second. As far as I know, raw fur skins are free in all foreign countries, for instance, Canada, England, Germany, France, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, etc., Russia alone having a very small specific duty by weight.

Third. United States fur merchants have built up a very considerable international—exclusive of United States product—business of importing and of exporting raw furs with practically every fur-bearing country.

Fourth. The placing of any duty, no matter how small, will, in my judgment, absolutely and completely destroy this international and very formidable part of the fur trade.

Fifth. Canadian fur manufacturers purchase approximately 50 per cent of their entire supply through United States merchants. Much of this supply comes from the various European countries, while a considerable portion is Canadian-grown furs passing through the hands of the United States merchants.

Sixth. This Canadian trade or the other foreign business could not possibly be handled in bond for the following reasons:

A. Raw furs must be constantly looked after and kept clean to prevent damage by worms, etc.

B. While the above-stated reason is obviously sufficient in itself, a further valid reason is that by nature fur skins are not all of the same size, quality, or color, and therefore can not be traded in solely on description or samples nor by measurements or weights like staple goods.

C. Different countries, also different manufacturers, require different grades of skins, by which is meant dark, medium, or pale color; large, medium, or small in size; best, medium, or inferior quality. There are rich and poor countries buying according to their respective wants. There are high-class manufacturing furriers. There are manufacturers of medium or cheap furs. There are practically none using all classes. That is why the fur merchants are the distributors.

Seventh. Outside of the Hudson Bay Fur Co., the United States merchants are the largest buyers of Canadian raw furs in Canada. A duty, no matter how small, would wipe out this trade without in the least increasing the market values of the United States collection of raw furs. The reason for this is that the United States collection is many times larger than the United States consumption, hence our surplus raw fur skins would be same as heretofore.

Eighth. A duty on foreign raw furs would place the United States fur merchant in a class by himself as competitor against the balance of the world. For instance, the United States merchants importing raw fur skins from China, Japan, Australia, or any European country would not be handicapped by the amount of assessed duty in competing for foreign trade with those who own the same goods free of any duty, always keeping in mind that these raw skins can not be dealt with in bond, for the reason stated in paragraph 6.

Ninth. As stated in paragraph 5, the Canadian manufacturers are also large customers of the United States merchants for furs grown in the United States as well. Most likely the Canadian Government would retaliate with a similar duty on United States raw furs, causing a still further contraction of trade with the United States without loss to themselves, as they could supply their wants from abroad, to our detriment.

Tenth. Under the most favorable circumstances the estimated amount of revenue from raw furs, which the Ways and Means Committee put at $1,400,000, will, I believe, fall decidedly below one-half of this amount, to the detriment and destruction of the international feature of the trade which has taken the United States merchants generations to establish, for the following reasons:

A. Loss of foreign raw furs sold to Canada	$2,000,000
B. Loss of Canadian raw furs resold to Canada	1,000,000
C. Loss of other foreign trade in foreign raw furs with other countries, including export of foreign goods to country of origin	1,500,000
D. Estimated shrinkage of importations of raw skins for United States consumption on account of duty	1,500,000
Total loss	6,000,000
All importations, including hatters' furs, are, I believe, according to your statistics	14,400,000
Less hatters' furs (hares and rabbits)	2,500,000
	11,900,000
Less total shrinkage of raw fur importations	6,000,000
Will leave net importations	5,900,000

I believe my estimates are quite conservative and that with a further allowance for the return from abroad of raw furs of United States production free, will reduce the net balance very materially. The loss of added wealth to the Nation's resources by virtue of curtailed trade should several times over offset the probable revenue to be derived. In addition, the probable estimate of increased revenue from this raw-fur tax would also be very much reduced by the cost of the collection of such duty, as many very competent expert examiners or appraisers would have to be employed at all the various ports of entry along the Canadian border.

Eleventh. In compliance with your request for a list of high-priced furs, or so-called fur luxuries, I beg to mention the following:

Russian sables range in values as to quality, size, and color, $15 to $600; marten (Canadian), $5 to $40; marten (Baum), $3 to $10; marten (Stone), $3 to $8; ermine, $1 to $3; moles, 10 cents to 20 cents; lynx, $2 to $25; black foxes, $50 to $1,000; silver fox (same species as black foxes), $25 to $750; sea otter, $75 to $1,000; fisher, $5 to $60; fur seal, $15 to $50; blue fox, $10 to $75; white fox, $3 to $18; cross fox, $5 to $50; chinchilla (real), $10 to $25; chinchilla (bastard), $3 to $15; bear (Polar), $10 to $125; bear (grizzly), $5 to $50.

On account of the frequent and sometimes enormous fluctuation in values caused by supply and demand it is almost impossible for any one man to keep fully posted on all market changes and therefore easily opens the door to fraudulent declarations.

Placing my further services at your command, believe me,

Very respectfully, yours,

E. S. ULLMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the viking from Minnesota, is in error in supposing there is any economy in making investigations such as I made in St. Paul, as compared to the Tariff Board investigation. He never rode around in a St. Paul cab, if he thinks that is a method of economy. [Laughter.] My friend would lead us to believe that all the garments that are worn by the people of his State are made of fur, and he is solicitous because we have proposed a tax of 10 per cent on some of these luxurious furs that come from foreign countries; but the gentleman himself has voted against the Democratic propositions to lower the duties upon woolen cloths, upon woolen underclothes, upon woolen stockings, upon woolen mufflers, upon woolen clothes, every one of which articles is as essential to people living in a cold climate such as he describes his own as are these furs. The real thing that worries him is that he is afraid that some of the rich ladies of his city or of mine will go abroad and come back with garments made of chinchilla, or silver fox, Russian sable, or sea otter, and have to pay a 10 per cent ad valorem tax upon them instead of bringing them in under the free list, as they do under the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 61, noes 80.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. STEENERSON and Mr. HARRISON of New York were named to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 608? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 609? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 622? If not, are there any amendments to paragraph 628?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 628.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the call of paragraph 622 was not heard by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who desires to offer an amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will withhold his amendment for a moment. Without objection, we will return to paragraph 622.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

622. Swine.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not in the hope that it will pass——

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman want it passed?

Mr. FESS. Yes; but I offer the amendment rather in the hope that I may have an opportunity to call attention to two features. First, to the major portion of the free list, which is placed upon the farmer rather than upon anyone else; and second, to what I regard an apparent inconsistency in the free list. In the first place, there is 34 per cent of our population engaged in agriculture. Of the 26 new paragraphs added to the free list, 20 of them are applied to the farmer. In other words, 80 per cent of this additional free list is put upon the farmer, who represents 34 per cent of our population; and when we ask why this is done the answer comes that we are legislating for the sake of the consumer and not for the sake of the producer; that we are intending to make the cost of living less, and not in the interest of the man who produces the thing upon which we live. I regard this unfair to this great element of our population. I wonder why the farmer should be thus treated. I recognize that the answer will be that he will not be harmed. I do not understand, if you are going to make the price of living less, how you can avoid reducing the price of the thing that the farmer sells.

And if you reduce the price of the product of the farm, then how is it possible that you do not affect the farmer? How does it come that it is in his interest? You go to the farmer and you say to him, "We are not going to reduce the price of the goods you sell; our legislation is in your favor." You go to the consumer and say, "We are going to reduce the price of the things you buy." To the consumer you are reducing the price; to the farmer you are keeping the price up or increasing it. Why, that sounds like a country candidate, who said:

I ain't no statesman who can talk purtection ar free trade;
My han's too stiff to hol' a pen, that's made to hol' a spade;
Them 10-foot eddicated words my tongue can't wallop roun';
But I'll make the things you sell go up an' things you buy come down.

I can't talk on the currency, nor on the revenue,
An' on the laws an' statoots I'm as ignorant as you;
An' I jest simply promise you, sure's I am Silas Brown,
I'll make the things you sell go up an' the things you buy come down.

The fairground echoed wide with cheers and loud huzzas thereat,
For who can ask a better scheme of statesmanship than that?
An' next week at the polls he beat his rival high and dry,
But things we sell continue low and things we buy are high.

As I said, 34 per cent of our people live on the farm, the producers of the country. Of the items in this free list 80 per cent are the products of the farm, including bran, broom corn, buckwheat, buckwheat flour, corn, cornmeal, flax straw, lard, leather, lumber, meats, milk and cream, oatmeal, rolled oats, potatoes, rye, rye flour, wool, and sugar in time.

This is the scheme for reducing the cost of living. You boast not only out on the hustings but here on this floor, that you are going to give to the people free bread, free meat, free lumber, free flour, free potatoes, free sugar, free wool.

When you are reminded that the farmer is the barometer of prosperity, you say we are not going to injure the farmer. If the farmer is prosperous, the country is prosperous. If he is distressed, the country is likewise distressed. What the farmer most needs after he has raised his crop is a place to sell it. This must not be in Europe but at home. The man who works at wages or on salaries in lines other than the farm, the 66 per cent of our population, constitute his market. Build up this market, and you will assist the farmer. Strike at either and you injure both.

The inconsistency of this bill is shown in an examination of this free list. The purpose of this special session, as stated by those responsible for it, is to promote foreign importations and foreign commerce. Corn is put on the free list because of the near $1,000,000,000 worth we produce. We consume all but $25,000,000 worth; that goes abroad. We import $118,000 worth of corn. Corn is made duty free because of the small amount of imports and large amount of exports. Wool goes on the free list for a different purpose. We produced $89,000,000 worth and import forty-eight million. Here the article is made duty free because of the great amount of imports and the small amount of exports. In the case of swine, we produce annually $615,000,000 worth and import only $1,744 worth. Hogs must therefore go upon the free list because of the small amount of imports.

In the case of flour we produce $551,000,000 worth and import $47,600,000 worth. Here flour must go on the free list because of the large amount of imports.

In the case of potatoes we produce $207,000,000 worth and import $1,294. Potatoes must go on the free list because we import such a negligible quantity.

In the case of lard we produce $144,000,000 worth and import $50,000,000. Here lard must go on the free list because we import so much, at least 33⅓ per cent of our consumption.

In the case of meats we produce almost $1,000,000,000 worth and import only $720,000. So meats must go on the free list because of the small amount of imports; but in the case of sugar, an article of which we could produce all we need within a short time, but of which we import at present a greater amount than we produce—sugar must go on the free list because of the large imports.

So we see how this bill is written. Sugar goes on the free list because we export so little and import so much. So it is in the case of wool. Corn must go on the free list because we export so much and import so little. So it is in the case of meats, lard, shoes, flour, and so forth. A glance at these figures taken from the handbook prepared by the Democratic committee will show the consistency of tariff making.

Article.	Production.	Imports.	Exports.
Buckwheat	$12,188,000	$6,000	$103,000

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments on paragraph 622? If not, on the next one—628?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 628, after the word "tapioca," strike out the words "tapioca flour" and insert "in pearl or flake form."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, last evening my colleague, Mr. STEVENS, offered a like amendment in connection with the paragraph upon sago. I thought he made out a perfect case for his amendment, and I believe the House thought so, but it was lightly waived aside by the gentleman from Alabama with this statement:

That the importations in 1912 amounted to 8,842,000 pounds of sago, valued at $169,000. There is not a great deal of competition in this line of product, and the gentleman from Minnesota agrees with me that it has always been on the free list. We are certainly, by leaving it there, not destroying any industry, and it is not capable of furnishing much revenue.

Mr. Chairman, that statement can not be made with reference to tapioca. The importations of that product of 1912 amounted to more than 52,000,000 pounds, and, in connection with the importation of sago, to more than 72,000,000, as the hearings show.

The products of the cassava plant are of two distinct kinds. One is a food product—tapioca, pearl or flake—which is the ordinary tapioca used in making puddings. The other is tapioca flour or starch, and it is used largely in filling and sizing cotton cloth, just as potato starch is used. The importations of tapioca flour in 1911 amounted to something over half of the total importations of tapioca, or about 26,000,000 pounds. My amendment would make this flour or starch dutiable at the same rate as potato starch, with which it comes in competition, at 1 cent a pound, leaving the tapioca flake and pearl, which is the food product, on the free list. It would bring the Government $260,000 of revenue without increasing the price of any product to the consumer.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] evidently did not know why tapioca flour was placed on the free list. I do not know, and I do not think that anyone knows. But I suspect that the reason was that the committee now and the Senate in 1909 both labored under the misapprehension that tapioca flour was a food product. It is, in fact, a starch used in filling and sizing cotton cloth, just as potato starch is used. The process by which this starch is made is exactly the same as the process by which potato starch is made. The starch is washed out of the macerated raw product by means of water filtration. The cellulose is sieved out and the starch is dried and pulverized. It now becomes the ordinary starch of commerce. The tapioca flour starch which is exported from foreign countries is made by coolie labor from the root of the cassava plant and comes into competition with potato starch, which is made in Minnesota, Michigan, and some 30 other States. In fact, 131 factories, most of them cooperative, produce 196,000,000 pounds of this starch every year.

The Supreme Court of the United States in a well-considered case has decided that tapioca flour is a starch and is not a food product, and it seems to me that the Ways and Means Committee ought to accept the amendment which I have offered. It will not interfere in any way with the free admission of tapioca that is used as a food product, and it will put the starch of tapioca and the starch of potato, which are used for exactly the same purpose, on the same footing in the law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, no infant industry can be destroyed by this provision in the free-list bill, because it has been on the free list all the time. The proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] makes is admittedly to protect another product by putting a competitive product on the free list, and is simply an effort to interject into this bill a protective proposition on a product that has always been on the free list.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to be offered to paragraph 638? [After a pause.] If not, the next paragraph is 647. Is there any amendment to be offered to that?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

647. Wheat flour and semolina: Provided, That wheat flour shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem when imported directly or indirectly from a country, dependency, or other subdivision of government which imposes a duty on wheat flour imported from the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, while we are waiting, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama a question as to paragraph 645. I would like to know whether the $100, as a limit of value of personal effects, is as it is in the existing law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amount of the exemption is the same. The language of the law has been liberalized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 127, line 20, after the word "which," insert the word "now."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in six minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to be heard on the paragraph.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I would like three minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 20 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and five minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to 20 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 5 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] four minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to page 350 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the purpose of reviewing some statistics printed thereon.

The paragraph under consideration contains a unique disposition of flour. In paragraph 198 of this bill wheat is on the dutiable list, and flour, by the operation of this paragraph, is on the free list.

It is quite evident that the authors of this bill intended to put wheat and flour on the free list, but why did they not do so in a direct manner?

Of what advantage will it be to the farmer to put a duty of 10 cents per bushel on wheat when you admit flour free? But the authors of this bill, by means of the countervailing clause, attempt to make it appear that there is to be a duty on flour when imported from Canada. It is self-evident that Canada will, at the first opportunity, take steps to remove herself from the operation of the countervailing clause.

It can not be said that we have no cause to fear competition from Canada merely because the amount of wheat raised there at the present time is comparatively small and the capacity of her flour mills is limited. Canada is only in her infancy as a wheat and flour producing country. We, on our part, are a Nation well advanced. Our fertile fields have been pretty well put under cultivation. But the great Canadian Northwest, stretching westward from the Great Lakes to the Rocky Mountains, a distance of 1,000 miles from east to west and extending from 600 to 800 miles north and south, is nothing more or less than a vast wheat field, and it has only been scratched here and there.

There are to-day only a million people in that territory. They are producing about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat annually, and they do not need more than 45,000,000 bushels to supply the whole Canadian market. The balance is available for export, either in the shape of flour or wheat. The present capacity of the Canadian mills is 111,000 barrels per day, and they are adding to this capacity.

Can you close your eyes to the fact that Canada is a dangerous competitor? The effect of this paragraph, unless it is amended as suggested, will be to give away a market of 95,000,000 people in exchange for a market of 8,000,000.

When you are admitting flour free, can you truthfully say to the farmers of this country, "Gentlemen, we have placed a duty of 10 cents a bushel on your wheat"? Will not the farmer readily see that the moment you admit a barrel of flour free into this country you are displacing from 4½ to 5 bushels of American wheat?

Thus you compel the farmer to sell his wheat to the American miller for the same price that the Canadian sells his wheat to the Canadian miller, or take his choice between relying upon the export market or discontinuing growing wheat.

If the Democratic Members desire to place the American farmers and millers on a competitive basis with the Canadian farmers and millers, they should adopt this amendment, which will give some force and effect to the proposed law. If they do not, they should not have voted down the amendment offered the other day to put wheat and flour on the free list.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, under the general leave already granted I submit for the consideration of the committee, in connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH], the following editorial from the Lawrenceburg Register:

IS THE FARMER ASLEEP?

When the farmer in such great wheat-growing States as Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, and the Dakotas realizes how the apparent protection of 10 cents per bushel upon foreign wheat and the admission of foreign-milled flour duty free affects the earnings of his farm, there is sure to be an outcry that will make itself unmistakably heard in Washington.

The truth is that under the present provision of the Underwood bill there will be no tax upon foreign-grown wheat. Foreign farmers, working themselves or employing labor at a mere pittance, would reap the greatest benefit from this legislation because, in effect, it allows foreign-grown wheat to enter the markets of the United States duty free, provided its products are made by foreign labor in a foreign mill.

The result will be an enormous increase in the number and grinding capacity of flour mills in Canada, Argentina, Australia, and other wheat-growing countries, and especially in Great Britain, whose flour mills, located upon the docks of her principal ports, draw wheat by water from all over the world. These mills can, for example, buy wheat in Buenos Aires, freight it by water to Liverpool or other British port, grind it into flour, ship the flour to New York or other American seaboard market, and sell the flour there at least 40 cents per barrel lower than a United States mill located, say, in New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore could manufacture the same grade of flour from the same wheat or from wheat grown in the United States.

The Canadian millers likewise could flood the interior and seaboard markets of the United States with flour fully as much below the bare cost price of the United States miller selling in competition.

When it is realized that the average net profit of the flour mills of the United States hardly exceeds 5 cents per barrel on their annual product, the impossibility of competing with the foreign mills under the conditions which this act provides may clearly be realized.

While the immediate result will be the destruction of the American flour-milling industry, the American flour miller driven out of the markets of the United States can no longer be a buyer of wheat; therefore the ultimate and quickly following result will be to force the American farmer to sell his wheat upon the level of prices fixed by the underpaid, underfed labor of Russia, South America, India, and other countries whose standards of living are far below that of the American farmer.

Therefore the salvation of the American wheat grower depends upon the preservation of the American milling industry, which asks no favor, but simply seeks an equal opportunity with foreign millers in our own home markets.

Every farmer is vitally interested in this question, and he should therefore lose no time in communicating his views to the Congressman from his district and to the United States Senators from his State. He should arouse his neighbors to the gravity of the situation, and through his local farmers' associations or granges utter a loud and insistent protest.

The tax on foreign wheat does not help the American farmer unless there is an equal tax on the products of foreign wheat.

As the Underwood bill is now well on its way toward passage, any action to be effective must be immediate.

Farmers, awake!

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time on that side on this paragraph is in the control of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I regret I can not yield time to the gentleman on this paragraph. The time has already been allotted and agreed upon.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it is rather difficult to understand the mental tight-rope walking by which the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee justify this paragraph. I suspect, however, that the reason for its inconsistency may be found in the hearings. An examination of the hearings relative to wheat shows that the committee had the benefit of the advice of one man. That man was Freeman Thorpe, of Hubert, Minn. I know him very well, and I presume a great many other Members of the House do. He is a very excellent gentleman, but he is not a farmer or a grain or milling expert. He is a portrait painter, and a good one. He is also postmaster of the town of Hubert. Just why these qualifications appealed to the Ways and Means Committee I am uncertain. It seems that as a result of his testimony the committee reduced wheat from 25 to 10 cents a bushel and flour to 10 per cent ad valorem with the proviso contained in the paragraph. By the same logic I presume the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee would have put wheat on the free list if Mr. Thorpe had happened to have been a sign painter. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

We are confronted with two propositions in justification of the paragraph placing a duty of 10 cents a bushel on wheat and the paragraph now pending. First, that the price of wheat in the United States is fixed by the price of wheat at Liverpool; and, second, that American flour is sold cheaper in Liverpool than it is in the United States. The first statement is not true and the second only partially so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a list of quotations submitted by John G. McHugh, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis, showing the price of wheat in Minneapolis and Liverpool on the first market days of each month from 1910 up to the present date. That table shows that on 21 days out of the 36 wheat was at a higher price in Minneapolis than it was in Liverpool, and that at times Liverpool could have exported wheat to New York and put it on the New York market cheaper than Minneapolis.

The reasons for this situation are threefold. First, the kind of hard wheat raised in the Northwest—in Minnesota, North and South Dakota—is not exported at all. In the second place, the Minneapolis and Duluth markets are cash markets, while the Liverpool market is a speculative market. The third and controlling reason is found in the difference in transportation costs. The result is that the Minneapolis market is, on the whole, the highest market in the world. The transportation feature, however, and to some extent the others, apply to most of the primary wheat markets of this country, and as a rule our wheat markets have been, in a large degree, at some seasons of the year, as regards the price within the limitation of the amount of the tariff, independent of Liverpool. What we desire to do is to retain the high level of the American market, and this can only be done by retaining a duty on both wheat and flour.

It is true that flour is sometimes sold in England cheaper than it is in the United States. This is due in part to the fact that only the cheaper grades of "straight" flour is exported and in part to the fact that the sale of flour for export does not require the maintenance of an army of salesmen. The flour is merely dumped on the dock at Liverpool. The business can be done with a bookkeeper and a bunch of telegraph blanks. Selling of flour in the United States requires an army of salesmen and a considerable office force. The difference in price here and in England is largely represented by the difference in selling cost.

Now, I want to read a short clipping from a news dispatch, dated Winnipeg, May 4, printed in the Philadelphia Ledger of May 5. It is as follows:

Banks have shut down on real estate loans, and this has caused consternation among those who have been making a living by real estate speculation and are now land poor. This has also made wholesalers and manufacturers' collections bad in the country, and the outlook for the year is none too bright. If the Wilson tariff goes through it will greatly increase trade in natural products and be a big benefit to western Canada. Many Manitoba farmers every fall have to pay a duty of 25 cents a bushel on wheat and 30 cents on barley, and make a profit by selling their grain in the United States.

With the duty reduced to 10 cents a bushel trade will expand greatly.

That is the opinion of gentlemen in Canada as to the effect of this tariff revision. I suggest that it ought to be given very careful consideration by the Ways and Means Committee and by Members on that side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, some days ago the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee introduced in the House the tariff bill (H. R. 3321) now under consideration. This, however, was not done until the Democratic Members after prolonged caucus thereon had sanctioned it in all its chief features at least. It is a well-known fact, and admitted by the Democratic leader and others who participated in that caucus, that many of the members thereof were not satisfied with many of the schedules; but as the majority rule prevailed in this caucus, the minority thereof, which was quite considerable, acquiesced therein. For some days thereafter proceedings were had thereon on the floor of the House, known as general debate. This general debate is intended to be confined to the provisions of the bill, but in many instances other subjects and matters were considered wholly apart from tariff legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I did not avail myself of the privilege of this general debate for several reasons, chief of which was that ordinarily the mere introduction of a bill is not conclusive evidence that the bill will be ultimately passed without change and amendment in some, if not many, of its details, and more especially so when the matter involved contains several hundred paragraphs and pertains to several thousand items, which this bill does. I preferred to wait until the various schedules, paragraphs, and items were considered in detail and open for amendment under what is known as the five-minute rule of the House. Proceeding under the five-minute rule, it soon became apparent that the Democratic majority, by and through its caucus action, had determined that no amendment, no matter how beneficial, no matter whether it would be for the country's good from a protective standpoint, from a free-trade standpoint, from a tariff-for-revenue standpoint, or from a competitive industrial standpoint, would be accepted at all. [Applause on the Republican side.] Day after day numerous amendments were offered, some good and some bad, from my point of view; yet in every instance and with unerring certainty, as well as with dispatch, the amendment was rejected and the monotonous words of the chairman were heard, "The noes have it, and the amendment is lost."

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill, so far as the House is concerned, will soon be an accomplished fact, and as nearly all of the items and paragraphs which pertain to the great producing and consuming classes of our country have been tentatively adopted by this House, I will now avail myself of the few minutes allotted to me to enter my protest against some of its provisions.

Mr. Chairman, in these few minutes I shall confine myself chiefly to that portion of the bill pertaining to the agriculturist, the great producer of the wealth which inures to the benefit and prosperity of all of our people. Involved in these paragraphs are as many hundreds of millions of dollars as I am permitted minutes in which to discuss them.

For several years I have stoutly maintained that the schedules of the Dingley bill were too high; that many of them went far beyond a protective basis, and were, in fact, prohibitive; that the same may be said of and concerning many of the schedules in the Payne-Aldrich tariff of 1909. I am a firm believer in the system of a reasonable and just protection, and that the schedules should be so adjusted, without discrimination, as applied to the farmer and the manufacturer, and in all cases having due regard to labor and the consumers generally; that wherever and whenever any industry in this country was able to fully compete with the products of other lands the tariff should be removed. In other words, protective duties should be imposed sufficient only to protect the designated industry against ruinous competition from the hordes of cheap foreign labor; that the adjustment and readjustment of these rates should be made after careful investigation of all the facts and circumstances surrounding and involved in such industry, both in this country and abroad; and that, in the ascertainment of these facts the highest skill of men competent to do the work, and not impelled by any partisan motive, should be employed in securing these facts. To my mind it is inconceivable that any political party, for purely partisan purposes, should contend against this principle, in which the welfare of a hundred million American citizens is deeply involved.

Applying these principles to some of the schedules of the present bill, I am forced to state that the agricultural schedule and some portions of the free list do not square therewith. For example, take the paragraph relating to wheat, with the duty of 10 cents per bushel imposed by the provisions of the bill. This duty is only ostensible, for it is provided in another portion of this bill that all the bran and screenings of wheat from every country in the world shall be admitted free. It is also provided that under certain conditions flour shall be admitted free of duty. Hence, of what avail is the duty of 10 cents per bushel on wheat if all its products which are consumed by either man or beast come in free? It is contended by some, and especially by those from the nonproducing sections, or the large centers of population, that wheat and flour should all be free, and that the farmers of the United States can compete successfully with all the world. This I deny; more especially so in regard to a certain quality of wheat which we produce in the Northwest.

In several of the Northwestern States there is annually produced approximately 300,000,000 bushels of wheat of a kind and variety that is grown in no other place in the world except Canada. This grade is known as northern hard spring wheat, and of which my State of Minnesota for the past 10 years or more has produced on an average the greatest quantity of any State in the Union. Its chief marketing place is Minneapolis, where is located the principal milling industry in the United States.

Less than two years ago a thorough investigation was made by the Tariff Board that showed conclusively that the production of this grade of wheat was accomplished in Canada, in the Province of Manitoba and westward, far cheaper than the same was produced in the United States. This fact was well known to all wheat growers and millers prior to this investigation. That the quantity of this wheat produced last year in Canada was approximately 200,000,000 bushels was also well known.

It is asserted by some that Liverpool establishes the price of wheat throughout the world to all exporting countries. I shall not attempt to deny that such is the case concerning certain grades and qualities of wheat, some of which is produced in the United States, but do assert that such is not a fact concerning this northern hard spring wheat, produced in the United States. I further affirm that at no time during the last 10 or more years has any of this particular kind of wheat grown in the United States been on an export basis. I shall not encumber the RECORD with statistics on this point prior to the year 1910, for the reason that those who are interested in the subject can ascertain the proof of my statement prior to that date by examining the statistics obtained and recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in many speeches made by Members in both branches of Congress during the time the famous, or rather infamous, so-called reciprocity treaty was under discussion. Of date May 2, of this year, Mr. John G. McHugh, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, of Minneapolis, Minn., stated and had published in the Minneapolis Journal of that date actual figures concerning the price of this northern wheat in Minneapolis, Duluth, and Liverpool, with the approximate cost of transportation, from January 3, 1910, to December 2, 1912.

The statement follows:

[From the Minneapolis Journal, May 2, 1913.]

Relative to the pending tariff bill and its probable effect upon wheat prices, if it passes as it stands, Secretary John G. McHugh, of the chamber of commerce, has issued a statement, giving the comparative prices for Minneapolis, Duluth, and Liverpool wheat, which shows that the prices ruling in Minneapolis and Duluth are not made in Liverpool.

"Such a comparison is timely," Mr. McHugh said, "as bearing upon the question of the proposed wheat and flour schedule of the new tariff law. It is frequently argued by those supporting the tax on wheat with free flour, as set forth in the bill, that this country, being an exporter of wheat and flour, prices are therefore necessarily made in this country on an export basis, and that the miller has nothing to fear from such a tariff change.

"Figures have been published showing the comparison of Winnipeg prices on one hand with Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago prices on the other, and from such figures it has appeared that the Winnipeg price is commonly much below the Duluth and Minneapolis prices, and that Winnipeg therefore was inclined to be on an export basis.

"Even a hasty examination will show that Minneapolis and Duluth are not on an export basis with Liverpool, and a careful examination will show how very far this is from being true."

The table follows:

Comparative prices of wheat.

First trading day.	Minneapolis, No. 1 northern, delivered.	Duluth, No. 1 northern, track.	Liverpool. Future.	Liverpool. England, current prices.	Liverpool. United States equivalent.	Approximate cost to take wheat in store, Duluth, and deliver in store at Liverpool.

"These figures show conclusively," says the statement, "that this country is not on an export basis and that prices of wheat as fixed in Minneapolis and Duluth are certainly not on the basis of Liverpool less the freight."

From this statement it appears that at no time during these three years was this grade of wheat, with freight added, within from 10 to 20 cents per bushel of an export basis, and in some instances the price in Liverpool was lower without the freight than the Minneapolis and Duluth price. It should be borne in mind that while this northern hard wheat is daily quoted on the market at Liverpool, yet none of it is exported thereto from the United States, but is received at Liverpool from Canada, and in fact is of slightly better grade than the same kind of wheat grown in the United States.

Can it be contended that while the Minneapolis and Duluth market is far better and higher, with transportation cheaper for the Canadian wheat, than at Liverpool, that the bulk thereof will not find a market in the United States preferable to Liverpool when there is no duty to be paid? And therefore will not the American farmer be compelled to sell his wheat at a much reduced price in order to meet this competition? And in addition, be it remembered, that the American farmer raises his wheat upon higher priced land and with greater cost of production than the Canadian farmer. It would be folly to maintain otherwise.

Again, cattle and sheep are on the free list in this bill. This statement I make even though they appear in Schedule G as follows: "Cattle, 10 per cent ad valorem; sheep, 10 per cent ad valorem." Yet in the free-list paragraphs of this proposed legislation hides and all products of cattle are placed. What benefit can avail the raiser of cattle to have the live animal dutiable and all its products free?

What I have said applies with equal or greater force to sheep, for its entire carcass, including wool, is on the free list. Corn and meal products therefrom, rye and rye flour, buckwheat and buckwheat flour, and potatoes are free listed. Oats maintain a duty of 10 cents per bushel, while oatmeal and rolled oats are free. Butter and butter substitutes are reduced from 6 to 3 cents per pound in the present bill, while cream and milk are placed on the free list.

Mr. Chairman, I might extend this list of farmers' products much greater, but one thing is apparent, that the main products of the farm, namely, bread, meat, potatoes, and butter, as far as the American farmer is concerned, are upon a free-trade basis, and competition is now very strong and will rapidly increase from our energetic and thrifty neighbors on the north.

The framers of this bill contend, first, that its chief object is the raising of revenue. Surely no revenue will be derived from placing the chief articles of food that I have mentioned on the free list; second, it is contended that where the schedules are thus made free and no revenue is derived therefrom, justification is found in the alleged statement that the cost of living will be reduced. I for one am in sympathy with this contention if it should prove true. While I deplore the fact that under this bill the farmer will be obliged to sell cheaper, but concede that his loss will be somewhat extenuated if the great mass of the consuming public would be benefited thereby, yet history shows that such will not be the case. One or more illustrations concerning the reduction in the cost of living will indicate that the price which the farmer receives very seldom, if ever, affects the ultimate consumer. Quite frequently during the past 10 years the farmers of the United States have received upward of $1 a bushel for wheat and sometimes as high as $1.20 or $1.25 per bushel. Again, during that time the farmer has received as low as 70 or 75 cents per bushel for his wheat, which is about the price now. Still, during that period the consumer has paid the same price for the loaf of bread. Two or three years ago Mr. J. R. Cahill, for the labor department of the Board of Trade of London, England, came to this country to investigate the cost of living. In his report, after a thorough investigation, covering the leading cities of the United States, he states that he found the consumers in this country pay 5 cents for a 14-ounce loaf of bread, while in London a 64-ounce loaf retails for 10 cents, all being made out of American flour. Couple this statement with the fact that those prices have been maintained in both countries even when the variance in price of wheat was from 20 to 40 cents per bushel, and it will be noted that the raw material, to wit, the whole wheat, does not govern the price to the consumer. Further, let it be observed that a bushel of wheat for which the farmer receives from 70 to 75 cents per bushel on the farm will make 60 loaves of bread, and that these 60 loaves of bread cost the consumer $3; that $2 and over on each bushel of wheat more than the farmer receives is placed in the pockets of the middleman and taken from the pockets of the consumers of our country, while in London less than one-half of that amount is so demanded and received. Surely the process of grinding wheat into flour, transporting it to the baker, and by him manufactured into loaves is not of sufficient moment to warrant in exacting a toll from the consumer almost four times greater than the farmer realizes.

Once more to illustrate: The farmer receives about 30 cents a bushel for oats on the farm. Twenty-three packages of Quaker Oats are manufactured therefrom and retailed to the consumer at 10 cents per package, or $2.30. Thus $2 is received by the manufacturer and middleman, while the farmer gets 30 cents. And the process of manufacturing is neither difficult nor expensive.

In view of these facts it is certainly not very difficult to arrive at a just conclusion concerning the cause of the high cost of food to the consumer. Can it be possible, Mr. Chairman, that the framers of this bill in their eagerness to carry out the platform pledges, to reduce the cost of living, have gone at their task blindly and without sufficient investigation? Or is it possible that they have listened with too much credulity to the whisperings of fancy and have pursued with too much eagerness a phantom, called hope, and have blindly plunged into legislation that may cause, and will cause serious detriment to the honest toiling agriculturists of our country, without benefiting the laboring classes in our factories and the consumers throughout the country? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The reduction in the cost of living, in all ways, food, raiment, and shelter, is much to be desired, but I fear that mere star gazing, with simply hope as a guide, will be futile, like the weary traveler on the desert, in search of an oasis, in which to recline and refresh himself, who thinks he beholds in the far distance the welcome spot, and eventually realizes that nothing but a mirage has lured him on.

I shall not attribute to the framers of this bill intentional sectionalism, yet a careful reading of it shows that in many instances it is quite apparent. Incongruities must of necessity appear in legislation of this character, owing to the numerous items involved, as well as the diversity of conditions, and this bill is no exception to the rule. However, it does seem that a greater and more extensive search after facts and surrounding conditions would have produced a bill less incongruous and certainly less sectional. To give a few illustrations will suffice: Rice is a food product raised chiefly, if not wholly, in a few of our Southern States, and certainly has no foreign competitor greater or equal to the Northern State wheat raiser. Yet we find rice and rice flour amply protected, while all grains produced in the Northern States and the flour therefrom are free. Again, wool, a northern production, is wholly on the free list, while the hair of the goat, which is chiefly raised in Texas and one or two other Southern States, is highly protected. Cotton bagging, for the use of the southern cotton grower, was placed on the free list. Yet we find that all other bags and bagging, which the northern farmer uses in the handling and shipping of grain, is highly protected. Thus, in both of these essential articles for the welfare of the farmer the one is favored while the other is discriminated against.

I shall not pursue this line any further. There is much in this bill that is commendable, and were it segregated and an opportunity given to pass judgment upon it my vote would be affirmative. While, on the contrary, there are some schedules which are wholly at variance with justice and fair dealing, and, to my mind, very injurious to the producers, especially in the Middle West and the Northwest, and which I can not support. I am in hopes that before this bill is passed certain changes will be made by the other branch of Congress that will remedy the evils I have pointed out, and thus enable me to support the amended measure. I am now and always have been a believer in the doctrine that laws which militate against the prosperity and the well-being of our farmers and rural dwellers are pernicious, not only to them, but to the whole body of our people, and that any law that makes country life less prosperous, and thus less enjoyable, conduces to congestion in our large cities. I also believe that the slogan "Remain on the farm" will receive a staggering blow ultimately as a result of the enactment into law of the proposed legislation. Dissatisfaction, in my judgment, will result in the minds of those from whom our greatest actual wealth and prosperity emanates, and ultimately this sturdy, bold, and honest yeomanry will be, partially at least, injured or destroyed. The tillers of the soil are our country's mainstay and pride. Encourage them as well as the toilers in our factories, and this country's greatness, even beyond all past achievements, will be assured and perpetuated. Distribute legislative benefits equally and justly between these two all-important classes and the occupations of the pessimist and the iconoclast will disappear. Strike these classes down and gloom will pervade our country as a whole.

Mr. MANN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment of my colleague does not affect any local industry of my district, so I can speak disinterestedly, but it affects the milling business all over the United States, which, as my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] stated, involves more than $800,000,000 of product annually, and that necessarily concerns all of us. The reason is this: The great consuming market for the flour mills of the country is the States east of the Alleghenies. As competitors for that market under this bill will be the Canadian manufacturers from the north and the English manufacturers from across the seas. England admits our flour free, and consequently under the provisions of this bill the English millers would have the right to have their flour admitted free into this country. I know the proposition is ridiculed that British flour can compete in our eastern markets with our western flour. I add here two statements from two of the best informed millers in the country, which set forth the conditions and have not been controverted by anybody:

First, the bill does not give the American miller an equal chance in the United States markets with the British, as evidenced by the following:

No. 2.

4½ bushels Argentine wheat ground into a barrel of "straight" flour in a Liverpool mill.		4½ bushels Argentine wheat ground into a barrel of "straight" flour in a New York mill.
4½ bushels f. o. b. ship Buenos Aires, per bushel	$0.70	4½ bushels f. o. b. ship Buenos Aires, per bushel	$0.70
Freight to Liverpool	.15	Freight to New York	.18
	.85	Duty	.10
	4½		.98
	$3.82½		4½
Freight to New York, per barrel	.15	Cost raw material barrel flour	$4.41
Cost raw material barrel flour	3.97½

Profit of American flour mills averages about 5 cents per barrel.

NOTE.—Advantage to Liverpool mill selling in New York market, 43½ cents per barrel. Freight rates used are approximate.

Advantage of Liverpool mill selling in New York or in any competitive foreign market would be much greater than indicated, because by-products—bran, etc.—ordinarily sell $5 to $6 per ton higher in Liverpool than in New York. This reduces cost of flour 22½ to 27 cents per barrel, as the higher the offals the lower the cost of flour, and vice versa.

NOTE.—On basis 4½ bushels wheat to produce a barrel of "straight" flour, a barrel of high-grade "patent" flour—say, 75 to 80 per cent—requires 5⅜ to 5⅝ bushels wheat. Some exceptionally high grades require even more. Only high-grade flours would be imported; hence disadvantage of American miller would be correspondingly greater than on "straight" grade.

The second statement:

At the moment wheat can be transported from Argentina to Liverpool, there made into flour, and returned by sea to New York and other Atlantic ports at a transportation cost not exceeding the cost of transporting wheat from the fields of North Dakota to Minneapolis, there made into flour, and carried to New York.

LONG HAUL CHEAPER.

The present rate on wheat, Buenos Aires to Liverpool, is 21 shillings per long ton, which equals 13½ cents per bushel of 60 pounds, which equals 22½ cents per hundred. The rate from Liverpool to New York on flour is not obtainable, but will not exceed 14 cents per hundred, making a total cost of transportation, Buenos Aires to Liverpool to New York, 36½ cents.

Wheat at Souris, N. Dak., has a rate to Minneapolis of 17 cents, which, plus lake and rail rate, 23 cents on flour, makes a total of 40 cents per hundred from the wheat fields of North Dakota to New York.

It should be noted also that our railroad rates are not likely to decrease, while ocean rates to-day are at a maximum. Our ocean rates from New York to Liverpool are to-day 16 cents per hundred, while in times past we have shipped as low as 8 cents.

In the limited time at my disposal I have just two suggestions: First, under the Canadian customs law of 1906 the governor in council can suspend the Canadian flour tariff by a simple and single order for use as raw material and admit our flour free at any time. Under such an arrangement Canadian flour would be admitted free into this country at a moment's notice, and thereby you place the great milling interests of this country at the hazard of the interests and control of our competitors who had last year a crop of about 200,000,000 bushels, with a capacity for vast increase, as shown last year. The flour-milling capacity of Canada is about 111,000 barrels a day, and last year produced about 14,000,000 barrels, of which about 4,000,000 were exported. We give Canada free access to our markets for its mill stuffs of bran and screenings and practically of our flour. This inevitably fixes the prices of wheat on a lower grade in this country if our miller is to meet the Canadian and English competition. But it certainly does add to the opportunities and gains of the speculators upon the grain exchanges of the country by compelling the miller to grind his raw material within this country within the margin of 10 cents per bushel as compared with competing grains and at the same time meet the market of free flour made from the cheapest grains and to the best advantage in the world. This situation often will give the speculator a 10-cent-per-bushel holdup of the miller and farmer in order to meet this unfair competition. The only way to stop it is to make an equality of conditions for both the raw material, wheat, and its products, flour and mill stuffs.

As my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] so strongly put it, this situation created by this bill will not help the consumer one single particle. It does help the profits of the middleman, who will get the flour cheapest wherever it can be made, and he will push the flour which nets him the largest profit. That is what will disturb the milling industry and the price of wheat all over the country. Remember, the average profit in the large mill is from 5 to 10 cents a barrel, and yet that amount and five times over can be saved to the flour dealer in the Eastern States under some conditions provided by this bill by purchasing flour from Liverpool made from Argentine or Black Sea wheat and laid down with the favoring freight rates which frequently exist in ocean traffic.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this proposition comes largely from the Representatives from Minnesota. I have a peculiar interest in that State, because I lived there many years, and have only the fondest recollections of it. I regret to see that the Representatives on that side of the House who come from Minnesota have no fixed convictions on this question of the tariff. As a matter of fact, I do not believe the Republican Representatives from Minnesota have ever had fixed convictions on the tariff, so far as their State is concerned.

It was only a few minutes ago that two distinguished Representatives from Minnesota wanted to put furs on the free list because their constituents used them. Now they want to put a tax on flour, that all the people of the United States consume, because their people sell it.

Now, from a local standpoint, I suppose that may be popular; but a tariff bill can never be written that way. If you want to stand for protection you have got to be willing to protect the other fellow. If you want to stand for a revision downward or a revenue tariff you have got to reduce yourself as much as you reduce the other fellow, or you can not put it through. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Is there any special difference between the production of rice and wheat except the quantity of rice is less than wheat? I claim that the duty you put on rice and the products thereof is correct, and if you would do the same thing with the wheat that the northwestern farmer raises it would be all right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman: I assume that he stands for the Payne and Dingley bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I never did—either of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am glad you do not do that. We have reduced the other cereal—wheat, a commodity in your State—in the same proportion that we have reduced rice. As a matter of fact, the reduction of rice is more drastic because it is really a competitive article, and there would not be much competition on wheat if we put it on the free list.

Now, coming right down to the point involved, you are complaining because we put this flour on the free list with a countervailing duty against all the world, but effective in the only country where there can be any competition. Look at the actual facts. Under the present law, as shown by the statistics of 1912, the duty on flour is 25 per cent ad valorem. The duty on wheat, as worked out by the Treasury Department—it may not be exactly accurate, but I presume it is approximately correct—amounts to 20 per cent ad valorem. That gives a differential between the tax on flour and the tax on wheat of an equivalent ad valorem of 5 per cent.

Now, what do we do? We put a tax of 10 per cent on wheat, and because we put that tax on wheat we put a countervailing duty against Canada, your only possible competitor. The Canadian tax to-day is 17.9 per cent, in round figures 18 per cent ad valorem. Now, the tax on wheat, as shown for 1909, is an ad valorem of 20 per cent. We cut of three-fifths of the tax on flour and leave two-fifths, which would mean in these figures of ad valorem a rate of 8 per cent, or a differential of 10 per cent, which you are complaining of when you have only got a differential now of 5 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 647? If not, the next paragraph is 648.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to paragraph 648.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph and the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

648. Barbed wire, galvanized wire not larger than No. 6 and not smaller than No. 14 wire gauge of the kind commonly used for fencing purposes, galvanized wire fencing composed of wires not larger than No. 6 nor smaller than No. 14 wire gauge, and wire commonly used for baling hay or other commodities.

Amendment by Mr. GREEN of Iowa:

Page 127, amend paragraph 648, by adding thereto the following:

"That articles enumerated in this paragraph, if imported from a country which lays an import duty on like articles imported from the United States, shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is another of the numerous paragraphs in this bill where, taken in connection with its other provisions, a duty is levied upon the raw material and the finished product is made free. Smooth wire is dutiable under the metal schedule of the bill. When it is developed and otherwise manufactured, and more American labor is put upon it, it is made free of duty by this paragraph under consideration. The only result that this paragraph can have when enforced will be to strengthen the Steel Trust in its strangle hold on the throats of the small manufacturers, who desire to compete with it, and to offer an invitation to the small manufacturer to transfer his factory to Europe. Barbed wire is put on the free list as a bid for the farmer's vote. Will this reduce the price? I think not. The material for it must be purchased from the Steel Trust, and under this bill it can control the price.

I yield the balance of my time, three minutes, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is entitled to take the floor for five minutes in his own right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to this policy of putting on the free list articles made by the great international trusts. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in opening the debate on this tariff bill said that articles made by the great trusts were put on the free list with the idea that some sort of competition might arise in foreign countries, but in my opinion no competition of that sort could arise unless it arises from themselves. Many cities in this country and in Europe are pulling and hauling against each other trying to get factories from each other, and under our protective tariff we do get factories even from Europe. In my own district we have three good-sized factories that came from Europe. If their products are placed on the free list, what is to prevent their moving back again? They can get cheaper labor in Europe. No one denies that. It seems to me they are given a sort of club over their own labor and they may be able to do as the International Harvester Co. threatened to do at Auburn the other day—move their machinery out and take it over to the other side. The owners of the factories do not care. They would just as soon have barbed wire, agricultural machinery, typewriters, and so forth, on the free list as not. They own factories on both sides of the ocean. The laboring men do care. It seems to me that it is a clear case of giving the great manufacturers, the great trusts, undue advantage over their own laboring men to allow them to manufacture on either side of the ocean, without the least restriction upon the importation of their goods into this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read the following article from the New York Tribune of this morning:

SHUTDOWN AT FALL RIVER—530,000 SPINDLES AT IRON WORKS PLANT IDLE SATURDAY.

FALL RIVER, MASS., May 5.

The Fall River Iron Works Co. posted notices to-day that the seven mills of the plant would be closed Saturday for an indefinite period. No reason for the shutdown was given.

The corporation, which is owned by the American Printing Co., operates 500,000 spindles in the manufacture of cotton cloth to supply the print works. It employs 5,000 hands, with a weekly pay roll of about $35,000.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can explain why the mills intend to close. The mills undoubtedly close because of the lack of opportunity to sell their product. I noticed in the newspapers a few days ago a list of the reduction in sales of print cloths very largely since the 4th day of March. The entire output of this grade of goods in my own city is 275,000 pieces of 45 yards each a week, and the sales of these goods have fallen off, the first week about 75 per cent, and the sales have been reduced since down to 106,000 pieces and then to 75,000 pieces and then the sales have been reduced to 60,000 pieces a week. The reduction in these sales creates the necessity for stopping the mills. I noticed in the newspaper this morning an article stating that the President and his Secretary of Commerce were going to investigate the cases where there should be a reduction in wages throughout this country to find out whether it was claimed that the reduction was made by reason of the reduction of the tariff. The statement referring to the mills of the Fall River Iron Works Co. does not refer to a reduction of wages. It is a cutting off of the entire wage list of $35,000 per week for an indefinite period, and nobody can tell how long these mills will remain closed. It is a very serious situation, affecting as it does 5,000 employees and the families dependent upon these wage earners.

It is not only a serious situation to the parties referred to, but it will have a very depressing effect upon the business men of the city of Fall River, Mass., who will keenly feel the loss in trade which the lack of $35,000 per week in the wage list will inflict upon the community, thereby affecting its prosperity.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Borden, the founder and chief owner of these mills, died last year and left a fortune estimated at about $10,000,000.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir. I do not know how much money he had accumulated.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make any comparison between the $8 and $9 a week of the men in those mills——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will explain the situation. Mr. Borden was a man a little younger than I am. I knew him as a boy, and the American Printing Co., which he purchased and enlarged, absorbed the product of the mills of the Fall River Iron Works Co. The former owners had made failures in the business. He had the brains and knew how to do business successfully. He established the mills of the Fall River Iron Works Co. and made money. There is no reason in the world why his sons, who succeed him in business, should keep their mills running if the market becomes depressed and they can not sell the product. It is certainly a very unwelcome feature in business life that such manufacturing plants are compelled to close. A good and sufficient reason why they can not sell their product is, they know they are going to have competition from abroad if the Underwood tariff bill goes into effect. I was interested in reading what the newspapers had to say this morning about the President and the Secretary of Commerce.

This is not a question of cut in wages, but it is a question of destruction of wages. I also have been very much interested in a conversation which I am told by a prominent manufacturer in my city took place between himself and the Secretary of Commerce a few days since with reference to the sale of hats. He is a gentleman who is one of the largest hat manufacturers in the country and he called upon the Secretary of Commerce and talked with him in relation to the question of the foreign trade, about which Secretary Redfield talks so fluently, and the Secretary asked this gentleman why he did not exploit his foreign trade more. The gentleman said that he exploited it as far as he could. He said, "I have some trade in England, but in many other countries I am stopped by reason of the tariff imposed against American manufactured goods." The Secretary said, "Have you ever tried to exploit your industry in Bombay?"—that is a very stock phrase of my friend, the Secretary of Commerce. He said, "I have investigated that very fully, the question of trade in Bombay, and I have ascertained that all wear turbans and fezzes, which is a religious obligation, as I am informed, and if you gave them a derby hat you could not get one of them to wear it." [Laughter and applause.] There are no people, as far as I know of, in Bombay who wear any clothing of any amount [laughter and applause on the Republican side], and therefore there is not much opportunity to exploit American trade there.

The following article was published in the newspapers of the city of New Bedford, Mass., at about the same time that my Democratic colleague, representing the sixteenth district of Massachusetts, was delivering his speech upon "free wool" in the House. Is this article an echo of his address?

ONEKO MILL TO CLOSE—TARIFF CHANGES FORCE SHUTDOWN, DECLARE OWNERS OF NEW BEDFORD PLANT.

NEW BEDFORD, May 5.

It was announced at the office of the Oneko Woolen Co., in this city, Saturday afternoon that on account of uncertain trade conditions, particularly through the tariff situation, it had been decided to close the mills indefinitely. The Oneko mill is owned by Holden-Leonard Co., of Boston and New York. This company also operates a woolen mill at Bennington, Vt., and present plans are to ship part of the machinery from the mill in this city to the Bennington plant.

The Oneko mill is operated on men's wear, in worsteds and woolens, and on women's cloakings. Its weaving equipment consist of 68 looms. It gives employment to about 250 persons when running full, but its machinery has been gradually shut down during the past few weeks with the decline in the market call for the goods which it is equipped to make, and at present only about 125 persons are employed at the mill.

James Marshall, the superintendent in charge of the mill, said Saturday that so far as he has been informed the mill is closed indefinitely. As indicating that there is no intention to restart the plant unless conditions change, Mr. Marshall referred to the fact that some of the machinery is to be shipped out of the city. The plant is to be stopped within the next two or three weeks, and there is to be a public sale of the goods on hand.

George Leonard, of Holden-Leonard Co., who control the Oneko mill, in this city, said:

"If the woolen schedule proposed by the Democrats goes through in its present form, it will be impossible for us to operate the Oneko mill, at New Bedford. The closing of that mill at the present time is due to the falling off in business because of the conservatism of buyers in the face of the reductions in the tariff. We have land and tenements at Bennington, and so we thought it advisable to close the mill at New Bedford and concentrate our manufacturing in one of our plants, it being obviously more economical to run one mill as nearly full as possible instead of running the two mills only in part. I understand that there are two other woolen mills in New England which will close down in the near future, but which have not yet announced their intentions. I do not see how it is possible for us to run in the face of the foreign competition that would result from the proposed reduction in rates. We are in hopes that the Underwood bill may be amended in the Senate. Senators LODGE and WEEKS will make a fight, and if nothing further can be secured we want the date when the new rates are to go into effect set for six months from the time of their passage. That has been the custom in the case of previous tariff legislation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments on paragraph 648? If not, the next paragraph is 650. Are there any amendments to paragraph 650?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understood yesterday that some one else had reserved the right to offer an amendment to this paragraph. I was so informed by the gentleman from Alabama, and therefore I did not prepare an amendment to it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is reserved, and amendments are in order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like 2 or 3 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will make it 13 minutes, then; 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois, and 3 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 13 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and 3 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to discuss for a moment or two this paragraph, or rather my motion to strike out the paragraph, which would leave the existing law in operation, I wish to express my appreciation of the courtesy of the gentleman from Alabama, who I must say is very generous in the matter of yielding us additional time on this side of the House when we desire to discuss a matter. Of course, the time is so short we do not get a chance to say anything, but at the same time I appreciate his courtesy.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the gentleman should also express his appreciation for the numerous amendments that he has permitted us to make to the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I might add, also, that he has permitted us to correct so many of the imperfections of this bill that I think he is entitled to the thanks of the Republican side of the House, and as a fellow Kentuckian, because the distinguished gentleman is a native Kentuckian, I feel very proud of the record which he has made here in charge of this bill. Of course, I know that the gentleman——

Mr. DYER. Is the gentleman going to approve of this legislation before he gets through with his speech?

Mr. LANGLEY. If my distinguished colleagues from Tennessee and Missouri will permit me to use the remaining minute that I have, I will state my position in regard to the paragraph. [Laughter.]

My judgment, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, with regard to coal, and also with regard to lumber, is that placing these products upon the free list will injure those industries. I concede that in the matter of lumber the cost of transportation is so great that there will not be that direct competition with Kentucky lumber that there will be with lumber interests in sections of the country in closer proximity to competing lumber countries. But, Mr. Chairman, I still believe in the philosophy of Patrick Henry—that the way to judge the future is by the past. Lumber was placed on the free list once before and as a result the price of lumber in the mountains of Kentucky went down. I recall that the price of crossties went down until the industry was practically suspended. I think the same thing will result again. Perhaps it may not be so much by reason of direct competition with foreign products as from the general industrial depression which will prevail throughout the country following the enactment of the bill which strike at so many of our important industries. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a suggestion to my very good and very distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as to his reflections upon the good people of Minnesota, where he justly states resides hosts of good friends of his and where I know is a host of admirers and of good wishers for him and his work. He stated and criticized us because we of Minnesota were inconsistent in that we asked that the tariff should be reduced on furs, which we consume, and maintained on wheat and flour, which we produce and sell. It is easy to make such a criticism and contrast, but I will ask the gentleman this: When he and his committee increased the tariff on furs, did they do it for the purposes of protection for any American industry? If so, what industry, who asked for it, and what reason is given for such increase? We know of none and have so informed this House. So far in the history of the country there never has been any tariff on raw furs at all for the purpose of protection, and that is the principal complaint we have made. For many years there have been tariffs on sealskin garments and other garments fully made up which may have been originally placed for protection, but this bill seems to continue it for purposes of revenue. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] does not seem to be aware that when the sealskin garment is brought into this country it now pays a tariff of 50 per cent on its value, and this has been the case for many years. The tariff on furs has been maintained even in the Payne-Aldrich bill, except one item, for the purposes of revenue. Now, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], in criticizing us, has increased those taxes for the purposes of revenue, it is our duty to show him his error and the injustice of it. It will be a cruel and unnecessary tax on poor people unable to bear it, and it will not yield a revenue commensurate with the expense of collection and the trouble caused by it.

If the already excessive tax of 35 per cent on partially finished shapes is now increased in this bill for the purpose of protection of some American industry, and the gentleman now desires to reflect on us for that reason, I am glad to have it placed on record right now—the purpose of the increase, who seeks it, and that the committee are willing to grant increases on items already excessive for the purpose of protecting an industry. Heretofore he has maintained that this bill is for a competitive tariff, or a tariff-for-revenue bill, or anything rather than a protective measure; but for the purpose of criticizing us he has pointed out one item where his committee has increased the duties apparently for the purpose of protection. It certainly was not for revenue, since but little can come from it, even on the figuring of the committee. It is not competitive, since it will destroy competition. So it can only be protective. And if so, this gentleman has a right to be critical. But so have we in return. I am glad to point that out to the gentleman again. We do not ask for protection on our grain products. We ask only for equal and fair competitive treatment. If you put a tariff on wheat we want a fair competitive duty placed on flour, and it is for the Democratic majority to indicate which policy should be pursued. But your definition of your own measure requires this to be done. That is all we ask.

The gentleman does not seem to be informed concerning the traffic conditions between Canada and the United States and between Great Britain and the United States. He does not seem to realize that the millers in those countries under same conditions may be able to swamp our manufacturers of flour, because the long haul by rail from the wheat fields and western mills will not permit the interior millers to compete with the cheaper transportation by water from manufacturing centers where is stocked the surplus of the cheapest grains of the world. Our millers through the North and West are asking no favors or discriminations, but are complaining about being placed under conditions adverse and unfair by artificial and ill-considered legislation where they can not compete on even terms as to supplies of raw material with Canada and Great Britain, and for that reason they strenuously object, not from Minnesota alone, but from all over the country, although our millers, perhaps, have taken the burden of the contest.

But millers and producers everywhere object to the unjust and unequal conditions of this bill which prevent competition on even terms. If you do not dare to follow the suggestions of a free-market basket, as urged by your President, then place whatever tariff on wheat which you think will satisfy the farmer. But when you do, be manly and decent and realize the conditions of those who have to use it in competition with those who have access to the cheapest raw material. We have not asked that anybody's protection for furs shall be reduced. We are entirely willing that they shall simply bear the fair share of protection which they always have borne. If more protection is needed, tell us about it frankly and not criticize us for seeking to know the reasons for the burden. It is the gentleman and his committee who have lugged in the doctrine of protection when they increased the tariff on furs, and we only seek to know why they did it and they can not seem to tell. We only ask the same rule shall be applied to both furs and flour. Make both competitive, if you will, but put them on the same fair and just basis, with a supply of material as accessible to them as to those they have to meet in our markets, and then the domestic producer shall not have any discrimination against his finished product as you have provided against us in this measure. It is this injustice against which we shall continue to protest.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the brief time given me I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to this fact, that in this country in the packing of shingles the frame in which they are packed is 20 inches in width and adjusted to the length, whether they are 16 or 18 inch shingles. But there are 25 courses of shingles in a bunch, 4 bunches for 1,000 shingles.

British Columbian shingles have but 22 courses, 20 inches in width, and when No. 1 shingles are selling for $2.50 per thousand the difference in the real value of the shingles is 30 cents a thousand.

That is what the consumers of this country must meet in our markets, and there is not one man in a thousand who purchases shingles who knows how many courses of shingles there should be in a bunch, or how many there are in a bunch made in British Columbia or in the United States.

You have placed shingles on the free list, and you have placed the consumers at a disadvantage in bringing Canadian shingles into our markets—shingles that have three twenty-fifths less contents in a bunch, or 12 per cent less than in a thousand shingles made in the United States. It is an inconsistency or it is an oversight, and if you only knew those facts I believe you gentlemen would adjust your rate of duty so as to offset the difference, so that the consumer might know.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in this country we participate in a good many bitter political contests, and oftentimes feeling is aroused, and personal animosity, temporarily. But it is the beauty of the American people that they put aside personal and political animosities in the meeting of man to man, and friendships are preserved across the aisle as sincerely and firmly as they are among Members on the same side of the aisle.

It gives me great pleasure to-day to call the attention of the House to the fact that 51 years ago one of the ablest men in public life first saw the light of day. I congratulate not only the Democratic Members of the House, not only the Democratic Party in the country, but I congratulate also the country itself, that during the 51 years which have elapsed since his birth there has grown into broadness and bigness the able gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. [General and prolonged applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] how sincerely I appreciate the kindly words that he has spoken in reference to myself, and I know of no better opportunity than this to say to both sides of this House, now that within an hour or less we are to complete the taxing features of this bill—the real contending portion of the bill that is in issue between the two great parties—that I thank you all, on both sides of the House, for the patience, the courtesy, and the kindness you have shown to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in his efforts to put the bill through the House.

I have seen many debates in this House; I have seen many hard-fought fights, and this is the place to fight. We all believe in fighting in the open. But I do not believe, although gentlemen on that side of the House have earnestly and vigorously and forcefully contended for their views, that any great measure has ever passed this House with less personal rancor and more kindly feelings than the bill we have under consideration to-day, and I can not thank you too much for your consideration. [General applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to paragraph 650? If not, the next paragraph is No. 652, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

652. Mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, unbleached or bleached: Provided, That if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall impose an export duty or other export charge of any kind whatsoever, either directly or indirectly (whether in the form of additional charge, or license fee, or otherwise), upon printing paper, mechanicaly ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, the amount of such export duty or other export charge shall be imposed as a duty upon chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government; and if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall prohibit the exportation of printing paper, mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, there shall be imposed a duty of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 cent per pound upon such chemical wood pulp when imported directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph, which proposes to put wood pulp upon the free list, is one of very peculiar construction. It proposes to put mechanically ground wood pulp and chemical wood pulp on the free list, with a retaliatory clause. There is mechanical pulp and chemical pulp. Of chemical pulp there are three kinds—sulphide pulp and soda pulp, which are the two that are used in this country; and sulphate pulp, somewhat used abroad, and perhaps it will be produced in Canada.

Here is the proposition: While Canada is not mentioned, Canada is meant. If Canada puts an export duty upon print paper or mechanical wood pulp, then we will put an extra duty upon chemical wood pulp. Now, Canada produces practically no soda chemical pulp, and not a great quantity of sulphide chemical pulp. We do export considerable quantities of mechanical pulp and print paper. But why, if Canada puts an export duty upon mechanical pulp or print paper, should we add a duty to chemical pulp? Or if Canada, under this provision, prohibits the export of print paper, why should we put a duty of one-tenth of a cent per pound on chemical paper?

There is no relationship between the two. If Canada attempts to do something against print paper, then we attempt to protect chemical pulp in the United States. If Canada legislates against mechanical wood pulp, then we attempt to add protection to soda wood pulp in the United States. These articles are not in competition with each other. Mechanical wood pulp is not used for the manufacture of the same kind of paper as soda pulp, and why anybody ever worked this out or how he ever managed to conceive this scheme is beyond me. If we wish to preserve ourselves against Canadian legislation aimed at print paper or mechanical wood pulp, then we ought to put a retaliatory duty upon those articles and not upon something else. Canada is not interested to-day to any extent in the production of soda pulp, which is used ordinarily for the manufacture of book paper or higher class paper.

This print-paper proposition and pulp proposition has been before Congress now for a number of years. Up to the present time the legislation has at least sought to preserve the markets of the United States for the free entry of the raw material into the United States and to afford some basis for preventing all the manufacturing going into Canada; but under the provisions of this bill there is nothing to prevent the manufacture of print paper and mechanical wood pulp being transferred to the other side of the Canadian border, and the pretense of levying a duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound upon some other article will not have any more effect than breathing in the air. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. Are there any further amendments to be offered to paragraph 652? If not, the next paragraph is No. 653.

Mr. MANN. That is the wool paragraph. There are a lot of amendments to that.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to limit debate on this wool proposition.

Mr. MANN. There are quite a number of gentlemen who wish to be heard over here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to cut off debate unduly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] be reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, paragraph 653, by striking out the words "wool of the sheep," in line 19.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we would like to have half an hour over here on this side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are two gentlemen on this side who desire to speak, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]. If there is anyone else, I should like to know it. That will make 40 minutes, and I would like to reserve 10 minutes for myself. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close in 50 minutes; that all amendments may be presented when the gentlemen speak, or by those who do not speak, and be pending on the desk, to be voted on when the debate is concluded, and that 30 minutes of the time may go to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE], and 10 minutes to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 50 minutes, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; that gentlemen shall have permission to offer their amendments when they speak, the amendments to be pending and voted on in their order at the conclusion of the debate. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Can a pro forma amendment be offered to the next paragraph?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; that has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph that is open for amendment is 657. Paragraph 654 has been passed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama that he will object to an amendment being offered to the next section?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I would not object to an amendment being offered to the next section which is open for consideration, which is 657, works of art.

Mr. MOORE. I have an amendment to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph that will be open for consideration, except by unanimous consent, is paragraph 657. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] desires to offer an amendment and have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report, the amendment to be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 129, line 19, after the word "camel," insert the words "Angora goat."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. Are the amendments to be offered now under the agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. They can be offered at any time.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment with the understanding that should it prevail I will ask unanimous consent to place this product on the dutiable list bearing 20 per cent ad valorem.

I listened a few moments ago to the eulogy pronounced on the majority leader of this House, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and I feel that every Member, not only on this side of the aisle but the other, concurs in its every word of praise. Such sentiments coming from a political opponent are indeed flowers that bloom over the garden wall of party politics. Let me briefly repeat the encomium given by a distinguished Member, at one time on the other side of the aisle, whose lips have long since been closed in death, my good friend, the late Representative Foster, of Vermont. In conversation with him one day I asked him what he thought of the discipline and management upon our side of the House since we had for the first time in 16 years come into power. He said: "Mr. SHARP, I think it is most admirable. You have such splendid leaders in CHAMP CLARK and OSCAR UNDERWOOD that it is difficult to see how you can be led into error. They are leaders of splendid ability and would give great credit to any political party." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have sometimes thought that, in a relative sense, possibly too much importance is given to the mere words of the party platform instead of considering the qualities of the officials who are to shape and give effect to those policies. Happily, the high character and abilities of those who have been intrusted to carry out the principles of the Democratic Party, from the Chief Executive on down through the line of his able assistants, augur well for a most successful administration of the Government's affairs.

All through my district in the past campaign my platform was based upon the public careers of these distinguished leaders of the Democracy. So if I differ with them to-day as to the wisdom of putting wool upon the free list I have no unkind criticism to level at their heads.

By virtue of the right generously given me, as to other Members on this side of the House by our caucus, I absolved myself from its binding effect in so far as this particular item is concerned. I think it is in no way violating the rules of the caucus—for the next day its entire work was practically made public—to state here that although a proposition to place a duty upon raw wool was defeated, yet there was still a very respectable minority in its support, respectable not only in the character and standing of the men who voted for it, coming, as they did, from every section of the country, but also respectable in numbers, for there were upward of 60 Members who voted against this item of free raw wool. I am consistent in offering this amendment, because upon two prior occasions in the last Congress I offered an amendment that would increase the Underwood duty of 20 per cent ad valorem to 30 per cent. I always thought it was rather mean and stingy of the conferees that they robbed me of the credit over in the Senate of fixing a duty at 30 per cent, when they put it at 29 per cent. I remember that when it came back and was voted upon every single Democrat upon this side of the House, with possibly one exception, voted for that compromise amendment, nay, went further and voted to put it over the President's veto.

So I do not think I go very far astray in saying to-day that while indorsing the purpose of this bill for a revision downward I would favor imposing a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem upon this article of raw wool. Such a reduction would still mean a cut of more than 60 per cent upon that product under the Payne bill. I sincerely hope that on the other side of the Capitol that august body will finally conclude that it is better policy and more in keeping with fairness to impose a compromise duty of 15 or 20 per cent on raw wool.

In the short time I have it is impossible to enumerate all the reasons why I am impelled to make this amendment. Under the Payne-Aldrich bill the average rate of protection given to manufacturers ranges from 65 to 70 per cent, and in some instances I believe the duty exceeds 90 per cent. This bill cuts that in two, and they are given an average of 35 per cent. Under the Payne-Aldrich bill we have an average rate of 42 to 45 per cent on wool, an important product of the farmer, representing the great agricultural interests. Instead of cutting that rate in two, this bill takes it entirely off. It has been said by the distinguished leader of the majority that it is not a bill ostensibly, at least, in the interest of the manufacturers, and yet I appeal to your common sense if in this particular item it is not manifestly in the interest of the manufacturers by leaving them a protective duty of 35 to 40 per cent and taking the duty entirely off from the raw wool which they buy.

From the earliest times agriculture has been encouraged by every government upon the face of the earth. Recognizing that the products which must furnish both food and clothing for man must come from the soil, many measures have been resorted to for the encouragement of husbandry. Indeed, there has never been a time in the world's history when, on account of the fast increasing population, there is more need for its better recognition.

To my mind the question of sheep raising in the United States is one of great importance. Its value is not only potential for supplying of food for our people, but also material for their clothing. In a broad sense, the development of that industry is an asset of great national value, both in times of peace and in war. The arguments adduced in favor of free lumber, free coal, and other minerals of the earth have no application when applied to the extension of that doctrine in the case of wool. In the former instances the question of the conservation of our natural resources is directly involved, and in my opinion—though in this I may differ with some of my colleagues—the chief benefit which we would derive in putting these products upon the free list will come more to the next generation as the result of that conservation than to the present. Naturally the direct result of such a policy is to diminish the constantly increasing consumption of these products of our own country by using those imported from other countries, and I believe the importation of coal and lumber from Canada would materially lengthen the life of these products in our own country.

But with the threatened extinction or material diminution of the native wool supply of our country, which has been the result of long-continued and patient cultivation, its rehabilitation would be a matter of many years. Admitting for the sake of argument that the tariff rates levied for its encouragement in the past have not materially increased its growth—a favorite argument of those who would remove the duty—it by no means follows that the wool industry would prosper the more if that duty were entirely removed.

Much as I would like to do so, time will not permit me to say more of the importance of this great industry, which is common to so many different parts of the country that it can hardly be called sectional. From the very character of the industry, carried on as it is by so many having relatively small flocks, there never has been and never can be a combination or trust relationship between them, and this observation applies quite as well to the food product of mutton as to the wool itself.

Recognizing the sole reason for putting raw wool upon the free list as being intended by the advocates of such a policy to be in the interest of the consumer, I must confess an honest skepticism as to whether the admitted reduction in the price of this product to the woolgrower—for unless there is a reduction in such price there is no justification for the removal of the duty—will not inure wholly to the manufacturer and the middleman. Few realize that after all the entire value of all the raw wool which goes into a suit of clothes rarely exceeds 8 per cent—and it is often less than 5 per cent—of its retail price.

Mr. Chairman, there is another reason which argues very strongly in favor of this amendment.

In scanning this bill through, I doubt whether there is a single paragraph that means so much, not only in the merely political sense, but from the economical view, especially as it applies to the revenues, as this paragraph. In the last Congress both sides of this Chamber supported almost unanimously the law to impose a tax upon the incomes of corporations. It was pointed out with a great deal of satisfaction that there would eventually be an annual revenue from that source of upward of $30,000,000 to the Government. And I am very pleased to say that that prediction is liable to be realized during the coming fiscal year. There is certainly an element of justice in placing the burden of taxation in accordance with the Democratic doctrine upon the shoulders of those most able to bear it, and presumably receiving their fair share of its benefits.

But what must we say of the wisdom of this portion of the bill, at least from a revenue standpoint, when it is admitted that at least one-half of that enormous sum so received from the corporations will be deliberately thrown away by putting raw wool upon the free list? In other words, as a result of the enactment into law of the three or four lines in this paragraph, we part with $15,000,000 in annual revenue—not for this year only, but just as long as the law shall remain on the statute books. As to this particular item, it is indeed emphatically not tariff for revenue only, but free trade for the loss of revenue only——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this paragraph is that it places wool on the free list and places the growers of wool in this country at a very great disadvantage with their foreign competitors. I have not agreed with some of my colleagues about the rates fixed in the so-called Payne amendment to the bill on wool and woolens, offered last year, which is to be offered again as an amendment to this bill, because the compensatory rates above the duty on wool, in my opinion, are lower than those in the Underwood bill, but on the entire schedule, taking the highest grades and the highest rates with the lower rates, there is not so much difference. However, in addition to the rates fixed in the Underwood bill, there is a duty on wool in the Payne bill. You wholly disregard in your bill the interests of the woolgrower. You have fairly well taken care of the manufacturer of wool.

There is no other market in the world for American-grown wool except with the woolen mills of the United States. As I stated here the other day, which is not denied, back in 1894 a gentleman from Wyoming tried to find a foreign market, and did not repeat the dose a second time, for, according to his own statement, he shipped his wool abroad at a loss. Therefore the woolgrowers in the United States are wholly dependent upon the manufacturers' success for success in their own product—wool.

To place the raw material of the woolen manufacturer upon the free list is a discrimination directly against the woolgrower, whose only market is the woolen manufacturer in this country. If wool is to be placed on the free list, I can not see the consistency of having a duty on manufactured wool to the extent that you have placed it in your bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] the other day said that the duty on wool and woolens heretofore had been always written by the manufacturer, and not alone on wool, but it has been frequently stated by gentlemen on that side of the House, hastily and thoughtlessly, that the manufacturers of this country have always written the Republican tariff laws. That is unjust to the men who have taken a prominent part in writing our tariff laws. It would be unjust to make that statement about the gentlemen from the Democratic side of the House who have written this law. In fact it is incorrect, it is untruthful.

Away back in 1865 a commission was appointed to report on a wool schedule to be adopted by the Congress of the United States, and after thorough investigation by that commission the Congress of the United States accepted the report and enacted into law the rates recommended; so when the gentleman states that the Congress of the United States when controlled by the Republican Party has always listened to and fixed rates according to the dictations of manufacturers he is hasty and unguarded in his remarks.

Some gentleman a few moments ago asked a gentleman on this side of the House whether or not he stood for the rates in the Dingley and in the Payne tariff laws. That gentleman answered "No." I would have answered right to the contrary if I had been asked the question, and my reason for it is this: That never since the sun shone on the American people have we enjoyed greater prosperity and happiness or greater accumulation of wealth for all classes of our people than under those two laws.

The woolen schedules of the various revenue acts have generally been regarded as the most technical and, therefore, for those not familiar with the subject by practical experience or study, the most difficult to understand. For this reason the discussion of its provisions should be characterized by simplicity and directness. With this purpose in view, let us first lay down these fundamental propositions:

First. The chief source of revenue for the Federal Government must, under the Constitution, be the customs duties on imports.

Second. Under the existing tariff law the imports of wool and woolens have contributed to the income of the General Government during the past 10 years $323,595,507, a sum sufficient to justify the woolen schedule as a revenue producer.

Third. The present and prospective fiscal requirements of the Government are such as forbid any change which would reduce the amount of revenue derived from this source.

Fourth. It is the settled policy of the Government that the import taxes shall be so levied that, while producing required revenue, they shall also foster and develop American industry, to the end that there may be diversified employment for its citizens, thus preventing the intenser competition that would exist if labor and enterprise had to be concentrated only in those employments that could be carried on without the existence of a protective tariff; and for the further purpose of making the country independent of foreign supply for all the principal necessities of life.

Fifth. In the application of this policy it is of the first importance that the country shall insure to itself permanent domestic supplies of the staples of food and clothing; and justice requires that agriculture, the chief employment of the people, shall share in the benefits of this beneficent policy.

Sixth. Sheep husbandry, that important branch of agriculture which provides the most essential material for clothing and also supplies a factor in the food supply that is of prime value and importance, has therefore a double claim upon the fostering care of the Government.

The need of revenue for Government expenses amply justifies the duty on wool, a commodity which, in its crude state, has brought into the Treasury of the United States in a single year the great sum of $21,128,729. The wisdom of developing an ample domestic supply of wool and mutton, and the advantage to those engaged in all other occupations through the lessening competition in their own employments, of preserving and increasing the great agricultural industry of sheep husbandry, is ample justification for making the rate of that duty sufficient to effectuate those purposes. Long experience, coupled with conclusive testimony which has been abundantly produced prior to the passage of each tariff act in the past 45 years, demonstrates that those purposes can not be made effective with rates on wool less than those now in effect, and with this necessity before us, it must now be pointed out that to secure the advantages of these duties to the American woolgrowers it is necessary that their wools be manufactured in the United States. If sold elsewhere, there can only be realized the prices prevailing in the foreign markets, less the cost of transportation thereto; and if American wool could be sold in such markets, the duty on imports would be superfluous, either for revenue or for protection.

To permit the use of the wool in this country, it is therefore necessary that conditions favorable to its domestic manufacture shall exist. And owing to the low cost of labor in the woolen mills of Europe, woolen manufacturing in America is only possible if an import duty is assessed upon the product of the manufacture of wool sufficient to equalize the difference in the cost of their manufacture here and abroad.

We have now, therefore, to inquire in what these differences of cost consist and how duties must be formulated to equalize them, while at the same time producing an adequate share of the Government's needed revenue.

The chief factors which enhance the domestic cost as compared with the foreign are:

(a) The higher cost of raw material in the United States, which necessarily results from the duty imposed upon foreign wool, which duty, it must be remembered, is one of the important producers of revenue to the Government, besides, at the same time, serving to sustain and develop sheep growing in this country.

(b) The higher rates of wages of the workers in the American mills—averaging, according to Government reports, from two to four times the wages paid abroad. These higher American wages constitute the most convincing justification of the protective system of raising revenue.

(c) The larger amounts of capital required for a given plant in America, because its buildings, as well as its equipment, have been created under the American system, whereby, through the great diversity of employment made possible by the protective tariff, competition in other trades has been reduced, so that those engaged in the improvement of real estate and the erection of buildings have had their wage rates enhanced side by side with those employed in the manufacturing industries. The higher cost of machinery, which if imported from abroad has had the import duties added, or if made here has been enhanced through the cost of higher wages its makers have enjoyed in the consequence of the tariff.

These factors of increased domestic cost which we have found to be higher cost of raw material, higher wages, more expensive plants it has been the policy of this Government—a policy the approval of which has been reaffirmed by the American people times without number—to offset by raising its revenue on imports in such manner that the revenue tax imposed upon imports shall be sufficient, when added to the foreign cost of the imported article, to make up the difference with a reasonable profit, sufficient to attract capital and lead to the development of these industries in America.

In the woolen industry this is accomplished by two kinds of duties—specific, i. e., a fixed and definite rate per pound, and ad valorem, or a percentage of the foreign price.

The first, the specific duty, is known as "compensatory," i. e., it is to compensate or equalize the cost of wool in the imported goods to a parity with the cost of wool in similar goods made in America. This compensatory duty on manufactures of wool simply makes effective the duty on the unmanufactured wool. If the compensatory duty were not imposed, the duty on wool would be useless, for raw wool would not then be imported, because it would be so much more advantageous to import the wool in a manufactured form, in which condition, in the absence of compensatory duties, it would yield neither the contemplated revenue to the Government nor any protection to the woolgrower.

Let it then be clearly understood that the compensatory duties on the products of wool are duties on the wool in those products.

It is necessary now to notice a peculiarity of the raw material, wool, which differentiates it from most other commodities. When shorn from the sheep in its natural condition, it contains a large amount of grease, dirt, and impurities which must be washed or scoured out before it is in fit condition for manufacture.

This foreign matter varies in different kinds of wool, grown in different localities, from 30 to 80 per cent of its gross weight, the average being about two parts of dirt and grease to one part by weight of clean wool. If it were the common practice to remove this dirt and grease before the wool was offered for sale, so that the wool of commerce was always clean and free from grease and impurities, the determination of a rate of duty would be very simple. But such is not the case. Custom varies in this respect very greatly. Some small part of the wool product of the world is thus scoured before it is brought to the manufacturer. Some is partly cleaned by washing the sheep in streams of running water before shearing, but vastly the larger portion is marketed in its crude, unclean condition. And for this there are excellent reasons. The woolgrower has not and can not well have the large and costly machinery necessary for the thorough and proper scouring of wool. If he did, it would be idle and useless during all but the small fraction of time required to scour his annual clip and thus prove a costly charge upon his industry.

Moreover, wool scoured long in advance of its manufacture does not work so advantageously as that which is left in its natural condition until needed; so, therefore, the user of the wool will prefer for most purposes to purchase it in its natural condition, or, as technically known, "in the grease."

In view of these facts it is necessary to provide one rate of duty upon wool in the crude or unwashed condition, another for the wool that has been partly cleaned by washing on the sheep's back, and still another for that which has been fully cleaned by scouring.

The amount of grease, dirt, and so forth, contained in different grades of wool grown in different climates, upon different soils, not only varies by infinite degrees, but wool taken in different years from the same sheep will vary greatly, according as the weather conditions prior to the shearing time have been dry or rainy. It is therefore utterly impossible to classify wools for customs purposes according to the amounts of shrinkages; and it has been necessary to determine an average ratio of clean wool in the unwashed and in the washed (partly clean) condition. This has for an indefinite period been established as 1 pound of clean wool in 2 of washed wool or in 3 of unwashed wool. This ratio has been approved by repeated investigations by committees of Congress and Government commissions, and by its adoption in every tariff act of the United States that has imposed a duty on wool since 1867.

If, then, a certain rate of duty is enacted per pound on unwashed wool the approved ratio requires twice that rate on washed wool and three times that rate on scoured wool, because 3 pounds of unwashed wool grown in great abundance and accessible to foreign manufacturers, or 2 pounds of washed wool, will yield 1 pound of scoured clean wool.

But a considerable portion of the clean wool is lost in the further processes of manufacture. This consists of foreign vegetable matter, such as burrs, seeds, and so forth, which have become entangled in the fleece, together with the portion of the fiber that can not be separated from this foreign matter, and also the fibers that are too short to remain in the mass in the operation of carding, combing, spinning, and so forth, and are lost out as waste.

Further wastes are created in the subsequent operations of converting the yarn into cloth, so that from the first stage of washing or scouring there is a progressively diminished remainder of the commodity upon which the duty would have been paid had it been admitted in its original crude form. And it must be clear that with this lessening there is a proportionate enhancement of the duty charges upon the remainder.

These compensatory duties—the duties on the wool in the manufactured and partly manufactured articles—have probably been more imperfectly understood than any other provision of the various tariff acts in which they occur, and consequently have been the subject of unlimited misrepresentation and criticism by those who are unwilling or unable to devote the necessary time and intelligence to attain a proper comprehension of their purpose and operation.

Let us first see how the ratios were determined. It was by no accidental or haphazard procedure that proportions were ascertained which have for more than 40 years withstood the united efforts of foreign interests and domestic ignorance. In 1865, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress, a commission was appointed for the consideration of a revision of the revenue laws. This commission consisted of David A. Wells, Stephen Colwell, and S. S. Hayes.

The investigations of this commission were continued throughout a period of upward of two years, and in its consideration of the subject of the tariff rates on wool and woolens this commission arranged for conferences at which were present representatives of the woolgrowing interests and of the woolen manufacturing industry from different sections of the country.

And right here let it be understood that these conferences of delegates representing the woolgrowing and manufacturing industries were held at the instance and under the direction of a commission of the United States Government. Some gentlemen seem to be laboring under the delusion that by some sort of secret and subversive conspiracy these ratios were imposed upon a credulous and unsuspecting Congress than which nothing could be farther from the truth. The commission charged with the duty of examining the revenue laws of the Government, with a view to their revision, sought to inform itself fully upon all the technical questions involved, and in connection with its consideration of the wool tariff arranged for conferences for the discussion of that branch of the subject in all its phases. The conferences proceeded with great deliberation, lasting over a period of about six months, sessions being held in Syracuse, New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. And the mature result of all this investigation and discussion was the formulation of certain fundamental ratios as proper and equitable in the application of the wool duty to the wool in manufactured products. The soundness of the conclusions then reached is evidenced by their indorsement in the report of the revenue commission, their approval by the then Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Hugh McCulloch, and their subsequent approval by the Ways and Means Committees of four Congresses, by a like number of Committees on Finance of the Senate, and by the adoption of these ratios by these four Congresses.

The authority for the statement as to the origin of the ratios is found in Revenue Commission Report, page 441, as follows:

And provided further, That the duty on wool of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed; and that the duty upon wool of all classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the amount of the duty to which it would be subjected if imported unwashed.

Also, in the Revenue Commission Report (p. 444), relating to the equivalent of the duty on 4 pounds of unwashed wool to the compensation on 1 pound of cloth, I quote as follows:

It was the concurrent testimony of experienced manufacturers that 4 pounds of Mestiza wool, of the class coming within the prices designated and paying a duty of 3 cents per pound, are required to make a pound of finished cloth. That all doubt might be removed as to the correctness of this statement, which furnishes the most essential element for calculating the amount of duties required for woolen cloths, the committee have sought to obtain memoranda of actual experiments made without reference to any discussion of tariff questions. * * *

The report then continues with detailed statements of the data derived from practical tests upon which was based the findings of the committee, and then concludes with the statement:

The fact, then admitted, and since so fully corroborated, that 4 pounds of wool, paying a duty of 3 cents per pound, are required to make a pound of cloth, formed the basis of the tariff upon woolens in the bill of 1861. (See p. 455, Revenue Commission Report.)

Is it not an insult to the intelligence of the very large number of men of the first ability who in both branches of Congress have for many years given this subject the closest study and after the most ample investigation and discussion have approved these ratios, to insinuate at this late day that these proportions of the compensatory duties were originally adopted without a comprehending knowledge of their significance; and that at intervals, 23, 30, and 42 years later, after a rehearing of all the arguments, and with the advantage of years of practical observation of the operation of the rates, they were ignorantly reenacted.

Upon each of these later occasions the reenactment followed an experience of an intervening period during which these ratios had been temporarily abandoned with such bitterly disastrous results as to lead to their prompt reenactment.

The Democrats seem to be under the impression that those who are really technically qualified by lifelong personal relations with successful practical work of a great industry to know how that industry would be affected by proposed legislation are, by the fact of such relationship, disqualified from giving the benefit of their knowledge to those who are charged with the duty of making the laws.

To the ridiculous and illogical contention that the rates have been made by those engaged in the industries I know of no simpler nor more effective answer than that made by a witness before the House committee to a question implying a similar assumption. The reply of the witness was:

You invite us to give testimony. If you give credence to our testimony as reliable, if you act on that testimony as being that of honest men given in their best judgment, and you guide yourselves by that in your conclusion on the facts—in that sense the manufacturers assist in fixing the duty.

In this connection it is to be noted that at the time when the ratios under consideration were first adopted, worsted manufacturing had just been commenced in the United States and was of such insignificant proportions that it did not constitute a factor of any influence in the discussions then conducted. The woolen manufacturers participating in these conferences were almost exclusively interested in what is now known as carded-wool manufacturing.

These ratios, to repeat, are:

Unwashed wool, single duty.

Fleece-washed wool, double duty.

Scoured wool, triple duty.

Cloths, four times single duty.

These ratios have been in effect during most of the time since then, and in the only period when they have not been, viz, under the act of 1894, the industry suffered most serious prostration. The experience of the larger part of the intervening period of 45 years and under four different revenue acts, in which these ratios were incorporated, has demonstrated the correctness of those conclusions which at that time were approved by the woolgrowers, whose industry was intended to be thereby protected by those rates; approved by the representatives of the carded-woolen industry, which then represented 99 per cent of the woolen manufactures of the country; approved by the semi-judicial revenue commission, which investigated the subject; approved by the then Secretary of the Treasury, who indorsed the report of the commission; and approved by Congress, which, in 1867, enacted these rates into law; approved again by Congress in the reenactment of the same ratios in the laws of 1890, and yet again in 1897 and 1909. Upon each of these occasions the ratios of the compensatory duties were discussed at length by the committees of Congress, and in the sessions of the House and of the Senate. Why it is inconceivable that these rates, which have been examined, discussed, and approved by four generations of legislators, are not fundamentally right; that they are still correct is abundantly shown by voluminous evidence submitted to the Ways and Means Committee of the Sixty-first Congress, as contained in the published reports of its hearings, and later the Tariff Board's report.

It is sometimes asserted that all wool does not lose two-thirds of its weight in scouring—that it does not require 4 pounds of some kinds of unwashed wool to make 1 pound of some kinds of cloth. These assertions are not denied; they never have been denied. It is equally true that the foreign wages of labor are not in all countries uniformly less than in the United States. For instance, it is well known that the wages of woolen manufacture in England average about one-half those paid in the United States; while in Germany, due to the large percentage of female labor employed, the average for the same trades is but one-third or less than one-third of those paid in the United States. If the protective duty on manufactures of wool—the consideration of which I have not yet reached and refer to here incidentally only to illustrate this point—is made only sufficient to equalize the difference between American and British wages, it would not be sufficient to protect against the lower wages of Germany. But if it is made adequate to equalize the difference between American and German wages, it will also protect as against those of Great Britain, though it may perhaps be more than absolutely necessary for the latter purpose alone. Now, it is quite impracticable to have different rates of duty upon similar products coming from different countries, these rates being based upon the fluctuating difference between the wages of the respective countries and those of the United States. It has therefore been necessary to adopt a rate sufficient to protect against the country of the cheapest labor. This principle applied to the protection of labor is the underlying one in the compensatory duties in Schedule K.

To illustrate: It does not require 3 pounds of all kinds of wool in its natural condition to make 1 pound of scoured wool, yet wools are abundantly produced in the world which in scouring require 3 and 4 pounds to make 1 pound of scoured product, and protection for these insures the full measure of duty to growers of wools of less shrinkage when levied in this ratio; and similarly it would be utterly impossible, hopelessly impracticable, to adopt ratios in the compensatory duties on the woolen schedule that would separately meet the many variations in the shrinkage of different wools or the varying quantities of different kinds of wool and substitutes that would be necessary to make the countless kinds and varieties of cloth.

This is not a new question, nor has adequate and satisfactory answer been wanting in the past. It is a phase in the tariff that has been discussed whenever tariff legislation has been under consideration by Congress. The revenue commission, to which I have already referred, considered these aspects of the subject more than a generation ago, and in its report will be found incorporated the following views. I read from page 447:

It will be observed that no provision is made in the tariff bill proposed for the admission of the class of goods under consideration at lower duties in proportion to the diminution of the foreign cost, as provided in other portions of the bill. The minimum principle has been expressly excluded from woolen cloths for the purpose of shutting out those made of shoddy, mungo, and waste. Cloths costing less than 80 cents per pound must be made to a greater or less extent of these materials. Fabrics which the consumer can not ordinarily distinguish from cloths composed of sound wool are made containing as much as 80 per cent of these substitutes for wool. These goods, if admitted at moderate duties, would take the place of our sound cloths, and the American manufacturer would be compelled to reduce the price of his cloths by fabricating them of the same worthless material or surrender the business to the foreigner. The American manufacturer will thus have but little inducement to adulterate his cloths if so disposed. It is but justice to the American manufacturer and for the benefit of the woolgrower and consumer that equally stringent duties should exist against shoddy cloths. If cheap cloths should be admitted under low duties, this country would be inundated by the wretched fabrics of Batley, 25,000 workmen in England being employed in converting shoddy and mungo into cloths of an annual value of $30,000,000 and consuming 65,000,000 pounds of these materials—more than our whole clip of wool in 1860. American wool would have no competitor so formidable if the barriers against shoddy goods existing in high specific duties should be removed.

For the reasons so clearly stated by that commission I am unalterably opposed to the admission, free of duty, into our markets of woolen rags of the lowest grades, gathered in foreign countries, which rags carry contagion, and when converted again into wool fiber, spun into yarns, and woven into cloth are an imposition upon the unsuspecting consumers, and should be excluded from our markets. It will be observed that under the Wilson-Gorman tariff law of 1894, which placed rags on the free list, the importation of rags during a single year reached the enormous quantity of 28,000,000 pounds, all of which at that time was converted into cloths and sold to our people as new woolen clothing—an imposition and a fraud upon its face.

The Dingley and Payne laws, which followed the act of 1894, imposed a duty of 10 cents per pound on rags, and under that rate of duty the importations receded from 28,000,000 pounds to an average of but 100,000 pounds per annum. I consider this item in the woolen schedule of greatest importance to our people and believe that such "riffraff," which is worked over into so-called new clothing, should be excluded from our markets; but our Democratic friends, in the Underwood bill now under consideration, have placed rags on the free list, and if their bill is enacted into law in its present form we may again look for a great volume of imported rags, and again the innocent purchasers will be defrauded.

The Tariff Board, in their recent report on Schedule K, state that properly verified information was obtained from 174 mills situated in 20 different States, representing over 46,000 looms, 1,900,000 producing spindles, and 109,000 employees, which, considering the number of looms and employees, comprises two-thirds of the productive capacity of the industry in the United States. The European work on wages and costs of production extended to England, France, Austria, and Belgium, and in all these countries rates, wages, output, or production per machine and per operative were secured for weavers, spinners, carders, and many others. In the revision of Schedule K it is my contention that the report of the Tariff Board should be most carefully studied. It most convincingly discloses the absolute necessity of adequate protection to the industry—the woolgrower as well as the manufacturer.

The board in part reports as follows in regard to wool costs:

The result of the raw-wool investigation establishes the fact that it costs more to grow wool in the United States than in any other country; that the merino wools required in such great volume by our mills are the most expensive of all wools produced; that the highest average cost of production of such wool in the world is in the State of Ohio and contiguous territory; and that the lowest average cost on similar wool is in Australia.

It is not possible to state in exact terms the actual cost of producing a pound of wool, considered by itself, for the simple reason that wool is but one of two products of the same operation. That is to say, flocks produce both fleeces and mutton—products entirely dissimilar in character and yet produced as the result of the same expenditure for forage and for labor. The board has deemed it best, therefore, for the purpose of this inquiry, to treat fleeces as the sole product, and charge up against their production the entire receipts from other sources. This method gives an accurate return so far as general results of flock maintenance are concerned—results which are comparable as between various sheep-growing regions.

In order that results from different sections and from different countries might be more comparable, the item of interest on investment—which varies from 4 to 6 per cent in Australia and from 8 to 10 per cent in our Western States—was left for consideration in connection with profits. For a similar reason the actual productive cost of harvested crops fed to flocks was used instead of the market value of same. On this account the expense charges shown are materially lower than those commonly quoted in the industry.

Figured in this manner, the board finds:

That after crediting the flock with receipts from all sources other than wool the latter product, in the case of fine merino wools of the United States, is going to market with an average charge against it of not less than 12 cents per pound, not including interest on the investment.

That the fine wools of the Ohio region are sold bearing an average charge for production of 19 cents per pound.

That in the States east of the Missouri River wool production is incidental to general farming. More stress is laid upon the output of mutton in some States than of wool. In such cases the receipts for the sale of sheep and lambs ordinarily covers the flock expense, leaving the wool for profit. The position of the fine-wool producer, however, not only of the Ohio region, but of the far West, is radically different. In the western part of the United States, where about two-thirds of the sheep of the country are to be found, the fine and fine medium wool carries an average charge of at least 11 cents per pound, interest not included.

That in South America the corresponding charge is between 4 and 5 cents per pound; that in New Zealand and on the favorably situated runs of Australia there is little or no cost charged against wool. So that, taking Australia as a whole, it appears that a charge of a very few cents per pound lies against the great clip of that region in the aggregate.

The board finds that in the western United States the capitalization per head of sheep, exclusive of the land values, is $5.30, and that the labor, forage, and necessary miscellaneous expenses in the Western States exceed $2 per head per annum, as against a cost, covering the same elements of expense, of less than $1 per head in Australia and about $1.15 per head in South America.

The only complaint or fault found by the Tariff Board in our present specific rates of duty on wool in the grease, which is 11 cents per pound on wools of the first class, is that the law discriminates against heavy shrinking wool. The report says that the importation of wool of the first class from South America and Australia comprises about a 50 per cent shrinking wool. It will therefore be observed that 11 cents per pound on wool shrinking 50 per cent is 22 cents per pound on the wool contents. For example, out of 100 pounds of wool in the grease there are 50 pounds of wool contents and 50 pounds of dirt, while in heavy shrinking wool, say, a 75 per cent shrinking wool, out of 100 pounds of wool in the grease there are 25 pounds of the clean or scoured wool and 75 pounds of dirt. Therefore 11 cents per pound on 75 per cent shrinking wool in the grease would amount to 44 cents per pound on the real wool contents of the fleece. The complaint against the existing law made by the board is that only light shrinking or 50 per cent shrinking wools are imported, but the report admits that there is an abundance of light shrinking wool in the world which freely comes to our markets.

The Tariff Board, in their report, show approximately 575,000,000 sheep in the world, 92,000,000 of which are found in Australia; 83,000,000 in Russia; 67,000,000 in Argentina; and 53,633,000 in the United States. This shows the United States to be the fourth nation of the world in the number of sheep. In the production of wool, however, the United States is third, as Russia produces some 90,000,000 pounds less than the United States. The following are the leading wool-producing nations: Australia, 718,000,000 pounds; Argentina, 414,000,000 pounds; United States, 328,000,000 pounds; and Russia, 238,000,000 pounds. The total wool production of the world is 3,000,000,000 pounds, 55 per cent of which is produced in the four nations above mentioned. In the year 1911 the consumption of wool in the United States, in round numbers, was 525,000,000 pounds and our imports 200,000,000 pounds. It will be observed we produce 62 per cent of our consumption and import the balance. The report of the Tariff Board shows that Australia exports some 700,000,000 pounds of wool, a quantity three and one-half times as great as our total importations, and a large portion of this 700,000,000 pounds is light shrinking wool. It is therefore evident that there is an abundant supply of wool that could be imported in the event of a wool shortage in this country.

However, the board discourages the application of an ad valorem duty for the reason that the woolgrowers and the woolen manufacturers are most in need of a high rate of protection or duty when prices are low and need protection the least when prices are high. An ad valorem duty advances with the advance of the price of the article and recedes with receding prices; whereas a specific duty recedes when the price of the article advances and increases when prices fall off.

To illustrate, I would say the present duty of 11 cents per pound on wool of the first class, when foreign wools are selling in the United States duty paid at 22 cents per pound, is 100 per cent ad valorem, or equal to the foreign value, 11 cents; for of the 22 cents per pound received by the foreigner for his wool when disposed of in our markets 11 cents per pound must be paid to the Government as duty upon the wool, and he takes home with him 11 cents per pound, which represents his net proceeds. If the price of wool was to advance to 33 cents per pound duty paid, then the duty, 11 cents per pound, would be but 50 per cent ad valorem. On the other hand, if an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent was placed upon the wool, when the foreign value is 11 cents per pound, the duty per pound would be but 5½ cents per pound, and should the wool advance in price and reach 30 cents per pound, foreign value, a 50 per cent ad valorem duty would amount to 15 cents per pound at the very time when the woolgrowers needed protection the least. In short, as stated before, an ad valorem duty would advance with an increase of prices and recede when prices go down, which is right the reverse of the operation of a specific duty. Therefore, an ad valorem duty on wool and woolens would be inadvisable, nonprotective, and more difficult of administration.

The board report contends that there are some rates in the present law on wool which are excessively high, which exclude certain particular foreign-made goods of certain grades from our markets, but the board points out that the manufacture of those grades of goods has been so stimulated in the United States on account of protection afforded that the keenest kind of competition has sprung up among our domestic manufacturers, and that the consumers are receiving the benefit of this competition, and the difference between the selling price of these goods in this country and abroad is much less than the duty.

The board shows that the cost of production in the United States is from 100 to 170 per cent higher than the cost of production in England, France, and Germany, where labor receives less than one-half that received by American labor in the same class of work. It is a well-known fact that in most European countries competitive labor receives not more than 25 to 30 per cent of the wages paid in the United States, while in the Orient, China, and Japan such labor is paid but from 10 to 30 cents per day.

Further, the board finds that while the cost of production in the principal European countries is less than one-half the cost of production in the United States, the consumers in this country do not pay that difference in the cost of conversion with the duty added.

It seems evident that the placing of wool on the free list will result in the destruction of sheep husbandry in the United States, and I am therefore unalterably opposed to the removal of the duties on wool, and I am unalterably opposed to the crippling of American labor by placing it on a par or a level with foreign cheap labor receiving low wages, as I have mentioned before.

The Democratic Party experimented with free wool in the Wilson-Gorman bill 20 years ago. The result was disastrous, not only to the sheep husbandry of the country but to the manufacturers as well, and as this bill proposes to place wool on the free list and greatly reduce the protection given to American labor employed in our woolen mills I am opposed to it. The so-called Wilson-Gorman law of 1894 carried an ad valorem duty on manufactured woolens of from 40 to 50 per cent, while the Underwood bill would place the duties on the same class of goods at 35 per cent ad valorem. When we consider the fact that the Wilson-Gorman law proved most disastrous to the woolen industry, what may we expect from the rates now proposed, which are from 10 to 30 per cent lower than the rates of the last Democratic experiment?

Labor has nothing to sell but the sweat of the brow; labor has no income except what it receives in exchange for manual efforts. A man with employment is a valuable asset to the Nation; a man without employment is valueless to the Nation and to himself. A law that will make work for a man's hands will make work for his teeth. I condemn this bill as one that will be destructive to American industries, American labor, and American progress and continued prosperity.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 129, line 20, after the word "animals," insert "and all articles made from such wool or hair."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered aims to place upon the free list all articles manufactured from wool. In other words, it aims to give the masses, the consumers of this country, free woolen clothing. In offering this amendment I do not offer the same in any retaliatory spirit. I do not offer it on the theory that misery loves company, nor do I offer it because I come from one of the great woolgrowing States, nor for the reason that my district is one of the largest woolgrowing districts in the Nation, nor because a great many of my constituents will be put in a hole by the adoption of a free-wool paragraph. But I offer it for the purpose of making this bill, so far as it concerns wool and woolens, a consistent and harmonious whole.

Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly cited for the Democratic Party its tariff plank assuring the Nation that no legitimate industry would be injured by its tariff legislation; but the Democratic Party, by placing wool upon the free list, has absolutely ignored and repudiated that plank. You have promised us a square deal and no favors in your tariff legislation. I now call upon you to fulfill your promises for a square deal. If wool goes upon the free list, then a square deal demands that clothing shall be placed upon the free list.

Mr. Chairman, this bill aims to visit the iniquities of Schedule K almost solely upon the wool raiser. The wool raiser has never been the beneficiary of the so-called iniquities of Schedule K, but the manufacturer has, as has been shown repeatedly in the report of the Tariff Board. This report shows that the compensatory duty for numerous classes of goods is much in excess of the amount needed for strict compensation; that the woolen manufacturer has been purchasing imported wools at 21 cents per scoured pound, instead of 33 cents, as contemplated in Schedule K. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] said the other day that there was invested in woolen manufactures $415,565,000. The census shows an investment of $518,000,000 in sheep raising in this Nation. One is as much deserving as the other, as is shown by Mr. Page's article which was quoted here the other day. On page 461 of the April number of the North American Review he states, referring to the woolgrowers:

> Their past history and their present character are as meritorious as those of any other class of Americans. If tariff reduction is to be effected without interfering with business, their business deserves as much consideration as any other.

Again, on page 460, this Democratic member of the Tariff Board, who has so frequently been quoted here by Democrats, says:

> It is therefore of practical importance, and it is also right, to ask who will benefit by the repeal of the wool duty. The ready answer is the consumer. And the answer is true, but not in the degree that is popularly supposed. In most fabrics the cost of the material they contain is a small part of the price the consumer pays for it. Thus the cloth in a typical man's suit that retails for $25 requires about 9½ pounds of raw wool of moderate shrinkage, and if it is of good quality the grower receives approximately $2.25 for it. The most ardent advocate of tariff reduction could not expect the removal of the duty to reduce this sum by more than the whole amount of the duty; that is, $1.05. Assuming that this occurred and that the reductions were passed along through the successive stages of trade to the ultimate consumer, then this personage could purchase a $25 suit for $24. But the assumption is violent in both its parts. The cloth maker who buys his wool at a lower price is not likely to give the whole benefit to the maker of clothing, nor he in turn to the retail merchant. And this last intermediary, knowing that his customers are verily creatures of custom, and that the ordinary purchaser of a $25 suit is little influenced by a reduction of 4 per cent, is perhaps least likely of all to change the price of his wares. Furthermore, the cloth maker would by no means save the whole nominal amount of the present duties if their removal enabled him to purchase abroad.

On another page this writer intimates that the actual duty is only one-half of the nominal duty of $1.05.

Mr. Chairman, the Tariff Board report shows the investment, expenditures, and receipts in my State on 229,000 head of sheep; that with wool selling at the rate of 14 cents a pound the profit on those sheep was about $50,000. If the price drops 4 cents a pound, the loss on running these sheep will be $15,000. There are over 2,000,000 sheep in my district. In your bill you have put wool and potatoes and, for all practical purposes, wheat, hay, and cattle on the free list or with a very small rate. In view of all this, Mr. Chairman, my farmer constituents are not going to be deterred by any sentimental ideas of benevolence or altruism from demanding a "square deal" from the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. If free wool and free produce of the farm is forced upon us we should in justice have free clothing. Mr. Chairman, I had something to say the other day about the Oregon system, that the Republicans kept their pledges under the Oregon system. The Democrats in my State have also kept their pledges under the Oregon system. Democratic delegates were pledged to vote for Woodrow Wilson at the Baltimore convention, and they not only so voted but after a stampede was started by the State of New York for Mr. CLARK, Oregon, by calling forth a counter demonstration, stopped that stampede, and the result of the work and loyalty of the Oregon Democratic delegates in that convention was the nomination of Woodrow Wilson. He also received the electoral vote of Oregon.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the generous treatment the Democratic Party has had from the State of Oregon, in view of the fact that that Republican State has given you two Democratic Senators and has assisted very materially in the nomination and election of Woodrow Wilson, Oregon's industries have fared badly in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the State of Oregon has a seal. The top or crest of that seal is an eagle. The old motto or slogan of the State was "Alis volat propriis"—"She flies with her own wings." Mr. Chairman, if the Democratic Party, at the dictation of President Wilson, is going to strike down the wool industry in my State and in turn refuse us free clothing, is going to put the products of the farmer on the free list, the State of Oregon, which has so favored the Democratic Party, may well ponder over those lines of Byron:

> So the struck eagle stretched upon the plain,
> No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
> Viewed his own feathers on the fatal dart,
> And winged the shaft that quivered in his heart.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

I print as a part of my remarks the following letter:

ENTERPRISE, OREG., April 24, 1913.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry about the proposed Democratic tariff bill, will state that I have heard a great deal of discussion in relation to the same. So far the only ones indorsing it are old rock-ribbed Democrats who have lifelong prejudices against anything Republican. There is about as much resentment among the ordinary Democrats as there is dissatisfaction among the Republicans over the prospect of free wool.

You will hear all kinds of expressions, and in making a general summary, I am firmly of the opinion that unless something extraordinary happens between now and the end of the present administration, President Wilson nor no other Democrat can be elected again.

Many Democrats have turned against the administration because of the advocacy of free wool, and they are outspoken in their denunciation.

Of course woolgrowing is one of the principal industries of this county, and if it is crippled or destroyed nearly every inhabitant will be affected. Every merchant, farmer, banker, lawyer, etc., is dependent to some extent upon the sheepmen. The merchant supplies his camps with merchandise, the farmer sells him hay, the banker lends him money, and nearly everybody gets some of the sheepman's money.

All have figured out that free wool will not reduce the cost of clothing to the consumer, because the amount of wool in an ordinary suit is at the most only 3 or 4 pounds.

Of course the Democrats are playing for vote of the laboring man in the eastern factories, and will not put the manufactured woolen product on the free list. They may hold that vote, but they will lose the balance of the laboring vote, especially in the West.

The only thing that will reduce the cost of clothing would be to take the tariff off the manufactured product. If they do this they will lose the eastern labor vote.

These are only a few of the things that are being discussed in this vicinity by the farmer and every other citizen. To me they indicate a growing discontent with the policies of the present administration.

Yours, truly,

CARL ROE.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend paragraph 653, on page 129, by striking out the period at the end of the word "animals," in line 21, and insert instead a colon and add thereto the following: "Provided, That whenever any of the foregoing articles are exported to the United States, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in the United States, or the price at which such goods are consigned is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to the United States at the time of its exportation to the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such article on its importation into the United States a special duty (or dumping duty) equal to the difference between the said export or actual selling price of the article for export or the price at which such goods are consigned and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption, provided that the said special duty shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem in any case.

"'Export price' or 'selling price' or 'price at which such goods are consigned' in this paragraph shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to the United States.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of this paragraph and for the enforcement thereof."

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to this portion of the bill. There is another portion of the bill which carries almost precisely the same language, and the gentleman's amendment would be germane at that point.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The present Chairman is a temporary occupant of the chair, and if it is agreeable to both parties the amendment will be retained at the Clerk's desk with the point of order pending against it and the permanent occupant of the chair can pass upon the point of order.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state, first, that I will favor the amendment to strike this paragraph from the free list and place raw wool upon the dutiable list. I favor a duty upon raw wool which will be protective, and in my judgment a protective duty at this time should not be less than 18 cents a pound on the clean content. But I have no doubt that the amendment will fail which asks for the striking of this paragraph from the free list. And as the dumping clause has been construed by an able Democrat from the State of Georgia as not applying to articles upon the free list, I therefore offer this amendment. If there is any one industry in the United States that will need the direct protection afforded by the dumping clause, as set out in section 4 of this act, upon the passage of this bill, it certainly is the wool industry of this country.

Wool has been placed upon the free list no doubt at the request of the real leader of the Democracy, our President, who has harkened to the call of Mr. Bryan, the avowed enemy of the woolgrower of this country. The argument that there will not be any great importations of wool will not down. We consume something like 500,000,000 pounds of wool yearly. We produce only in the neighborhood of 300,000,000, and necessarily our yearly importations will be in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 pounds. There have been excessive importations in the past, and removing the protective duty that is now on raw wool will certainly increase these importations enormously. The product of the American woolgrower, from something like 57,000,000 sheep, will come in direct competition with the product of the 100,000,000 sheep of Australia, the 100,000,000 sheep of South America, and the 50,000,000 of South Africa, and New Zealand and other islands. In other words, the wool product of 57,000,000 of sheep in the United States will be in direct competition with the product of the remainder of the world's herd of some 250,000,000. The cost of keeping and clipping the American sheep is $2.11 a head. In Ohio it is as high as $2.46 a head. The cost in Australia is 93 cents a head, in South America $1.15 a head. Anyone can see that the competition will be strenuous.

My Democratic friends say that they are not in favor of protection by resorting to a scheme of indirect taxation. They say they are in favor of legislation that will directly protect by providing a law that under certain conditions articles on the dutiable list will be prohibited from coming into the United States unless they pay an extra duty. Every reason that can be named for asking for such a law as this in behalf of articles upon the dutiable list certainly will apply to raw wool, which by this bill is placed on the free list. The woolgrower of this country, the American farmer, certainly will be asking soon why he is not given a square deal.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the rest of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, since I have already expressed my views upon this schedule at considerable length, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House very long this morning. I move to strike out paragraph 653, which paragraph provides that wool shall go on the free list. I am in favor of a specific duty of 18 cents per pound on the scoured wool content, in accordance with the recommendations of the Tariff Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. WILLIS. The real purpose for which I rose was to read a letter which I have received from a farmer in Ohio. I am receiving a great many letters of this kind. The farmers and laboring men of this country, the business men, the miners, and others are waking up to what is involved in this bill. The farmer understands that he has been buncoed, that his farm products and his wool are put on the free list, yet the woolen clothing he buys is protected, and this farmer friend takes his pen in hand and writes some things which I shall read before I sit down. He starts off well. He says:

Please hand this to the fellow that you think it will do the most good.

That is what I propose to undertake to-day—I shall endeavor to hand it to you. I do not know of any gentlemen that would be benefited more by the teachings of this letter than my friends across the aisle.

But before I read this letter I desire to express my admiration and sympathy for my good friend and colleague from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]. Up to the present time he has been consistent in the position which he has taken in this House relative to the tariff on wool. As he correctly stated, when the wool bill was pending two years ago he made a fight to secure a tariff on wool of 30 per cent. At that time the accepted Democratic rate on wool was an ad valorem of 20 per cent, but my colleague from Ohio consistently and properly said that that was not an equitable measure of protection, and he made a fight here in favor of his amendment; he makes a fight to-day in favor of an amendment which would do the farmers and woolgrowers of the country at least a little good, and I compliment him upon his consistency and upon his courage. But I am constrained to invite his attention to the deplorable fact that the people who were in control of the Democratic Party two years ago are not now in control.

At that time the element that was in control was the more conservative element of the Democratic Party, that actually meant it when it said that the rates should be revised downward carefully and consistently. Why, those of us who were here in August, 1911, surely can not have forgotten the amazing spectacle that was then presented in the discussion of the wool tariff. I remember that I saw every gentleman upon that side of the House cheering like mad. I saw my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who for long years has been their recognized cheer leader—and he does his work splendidly—I saw him pounding his desk top until there were great holes beaten into it [laughter] as he cheered, and as his fellow Democrats cheered the denunciation that was heaped upon the devoted head of a certain distinguished gentleman from Nebraska by the Democratic leader, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and I regret very much that he is not here in his seat at this moment.

A MEMBER. He is here.

Mr. WILLIS. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 7, 1911. There are a lot of interesting things in that edition. On page 3511 I quote a sentence or two from an article that was written by Hon. William Jennings Bryan. Therein he says:

Some of the Democrats thought Mr. Bryan did Mr. UNDERWOOD an injustice when he charged him with being tainted with protection. What do these Democrats think now, since Mr. UNDERWOOD has put himself at the head of the opposition to Speaker CLARK'S tariff-reduction program?

I am reading further from the article of Mr. Bryan:

The tariff on wool was the camel's nose. The animal is trying to enter the tent.

At that time the chairman of the committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was advocating a duty on wool of 20 per cent ad valorem. He now puts wool on the free list, according to the terms of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. That is too bad. I will have to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for one minute.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the gentleman. Then on the next page—3512—the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], after having been received with tumultuous Democratic applause, proceeded to denounce the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan, in the most caustic terms, while every Democrat on that side cheered the gentleman from Alabama to the echo. And, remember, that was before the Democratic national convention at Baltimore, when it was discovered that Mr. Bryan was the whole Democratic Party; before the convention at Baltimore, where Mr. Bryan trampled ruthlessly over the mangled political remains of the able and courteous gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and where, by insinuation, innuendo, and misrepresentation the distinguished and beloved Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK] was deprived of the nomination for the Presidency through one of the most flagrant political wrongs ever committed in the history of this or any other country. It was before all that. But the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in his speech said:

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan, did not think I was "protectionizing" the Democratic Party when I brought in the free-list bill, when I entered upon the program that the Democrats of that committee outlined. Not until I differed with him on the woolen schedule did he have one word of criticism, so far as my conduct was concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have not a sheep in my district. There are few in Alabama; there is not a woolen mill in Alabama that I know of. I had to write a woolen schedule that would protect the revenues of this Government, and because I did so and did not obey the command of the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Bryan [cries of "Good!" "Good!"], he is endeavoring to try and make the country believe that I am not an honest Democrat in favor of an honest revenue tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Alabama said he did not obey the commands of Mr. Bryan then. Is he obeying the commands of Mr. Bryan now, when he is putting wool on the free list? [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

The letter, which I read in part, is as follows:

BELLE CENTER, OHIO, May 2, 1913.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: Please hand this to the fellow you think it will do the most good.

We who are engaged in the sheep and wool business in a limited way feel we should have the same consideration as our brother farmers, the sugar growers, have had. Work for at least a 25 per cent ad valorem or give us the same chance to adjust our business as you have the sugar growers. Now, for example as to what this tariff tinkering is doing for us sheep fellows: Two months ago sheep were selling for from $6 to $6.50 per head; to-day they can be bought for from $4.50 to $5. Last year we got from 20 to 25 cents per pound for wool; this year from 14 to 16 cents per pound. Is it any wonder we are asking for a little protection or three years' time to get out of the business, as the sugar growers have?

Thanking you in advance, I remain, as ever,

J. F. CARMEAN.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, before I yield further time, I think there is a gentleman on the other side who had some time reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on this question for the reason that I possess a certain amount of personal knowledge connected with the condition of the wool-growing industry in the West. My father was engaged in this industry for over 11 years, and I am familiar with conditions that surround the industry so far as Colorado is concerned.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that every careful student of conditions affecting this industry must realize the fact that it is on the wane in this country. In the States west of the Missouri River there are to-day 2,785,000 fewer sheep than there were 9 years ago, and there are conditions affecting the further development of the industry which did not obtain 15 or 20 years ago. The homesteader is rapidly coming into the West. All the available land subject to cultivation is being taken up. The range devoted to sheep raising is being rapidly curtailed, and those who are engaged in the business are obliged each year to see their expenses increase for the maintenance of pasturage, for the employment of labor, and for the purchase of feed and fodder to supply their sheep during the winter months. I contend that if we will analyze closely the conditions affecting the industry, we must recognize the fact that it is not growing as it should have grown if the tariff has been its beneficent friend as is asserted here. In Wyoming there are 200,000 less sheep than in 1909; in Colorado 100,000 less; in New Mexico 350,000 less.

But, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that the woolgrower of the West will not materially suffer from putting wool upon the free list. The great impetus which has been given to the growing of sheep for mutton has largely eclipsed any value which may reside in the production of wool, and to-day we find all of the men and companies engaged in this business in the West enjoying prosperity and receiving large returns upon their investments. The industry in my judgment can not show to this House any justification for the imposition of a duty upon wool.

The fact is evident, Mr. Chairman, from a study of these conditions, and the further fact that the importations of wool have been rapidly increasing, that the production of wool is not keeping pace with the needs of American manufacture. Why, then, should we place a burden upon the consumer of woolen cloth and clothing in this country in order to maintain an industry which does not need any protection, which is already receiving large returns upon its investment, and the growth of which will be in no way retarded by the taking away of this duty? The only danger which threatens the industry, in my opinion, is that danger which comes from the restriction and limitation of the grazing territory.

Our friends from Ohio, of course, speak very earnestly and urgently about the effect of the tariff upon the growing of sheep in their part of the country, because the woolgrower in Ohio and in the Middle West has not, in my judgment, given his attention so thoroughly and completely to the development of a sheep which will be valuable for its food products as they have to the production of a small-bodied sheep which will produce a greater amount of wool.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I can not yield. The western grower has realized the value of producing an animal of large carcass, of sturdy frame, and strength to resist the storms that sweep over the western prairies, and to-day western sheep are commanding in the markets of Chicago and Kansas City a larger price than the sheep from the Eastern States. We are not only doing that, Mr. Chairman, but we are producing a different grade of wool from that produced several years ago, when the growth of sheep was confined entirely to the merino strain. To-day we are producing a coarse-grained wool, which is much in demand in the eastern markets for its valuable manufacturing qualities.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the committee some figures I have secured which show the tremendous growth of the sheep industry of this country in connection with the slaughtering of sheep for mutton.

Thirty years ago there passed through the Chicago stockyards 336,000 sheep, 1,344,000 cattle, and 7,050,000 hogs; in 1910 there were 5,250,000 sheep, a little over 3,000,000 cattle, and about 5,500,000 hogs that were marketed, showing conclusively the increased value of mutton production in this country. In this connection I desire to read a letter which I have received from the Department of Commerce, in which the statement is made that the value of sheep slaughtered in the United States in 1909 amounted to $59,924,931.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, April 28, 1913.

Hon. HARRY H. SELDOMRIDGE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your verbal request of the 24th instant I inclose herewith tables showing number of sheep of shearing age and the production of wool, by States, during the 10 years from 1903 to 1912, inclusive.

I am not aware of any statistics with respect to the number of sheep slaughtered except for census years, and even the figures of the Census Bureau relate only to sheep slaughtered by slaughtering and meat-packing establishments, of which its figures for the last three censuses of manufactures are as follows:

Sheep slaughtered.

	Number.	Value.
1899	9,110,172	$36,859,832
1904	10,875,339	44,359,804
1909	12,255,501	59,924,931

Very truly, yours,

A. H. BALDWIN,
Chief of Bureau.

Can anyone claim, in view of these figures, that the industry must be protected in order to compensate the farmer for his labor and for the use of his land?

There was an interesting article published in the April number of the North American Review by Mr. Thomas W. Page, a former member of the Tariff Board, appointed by ex-President Taft. Surely our Republican friends must be willing to accept the conclusions which Mr. Page arrives at from his investigation of the condition of the sheep industry in this country, as he considers the subject from a nonpartisan point of view and without any political prejudice. He shows conclusively, in my judgment, that woolgrowing can never regain its former position of importance in the West; that the advance in settlement and the development of agriculture is rapidly reducing the grazing area of our plains; that there is increasing difficulty in securing extensive tracts for pasturage, and that our sheep owners are frequently obliged to transport by rail their flocks from one range to another at great expense, when formerly they could graze their sheep for vast distances in moving from summer to winter range. He further states that the yearly cost of maintaining a sheep in the Rocky Mountain region is about $2.11 per head; that in 1910 the receipts averaged $2.56 per head, and of this amount $1.17 represented the wool value. If the sheep industry is to be developed in the West to a larger extent than heretofore, in my judgment the Government will be obliged to inaugurate a large and extensive leasing system, withdrawing large areas of land from entry for agricultural purposes.

Mr. Page describes very clearly the condition of the business in Ohio, Michigan, and Middle Western States. The figures which he gives in connection with the handling of flocks in Michigan demonstrate conclusively that the Michigan woolgrower is not realizing anything like the return from his investment that he should have enjoyed under high Republican protection for the last 15 years. Michigan flocks are largely made up of a strain of the merino grades and the merino mixed with the long-fibered delaine. Flocks in which this mixed strain appears average, for a year, $2.78 per head expense for maintenance. In 1910 a sheep of this strain brought the owner an income of $1.46 for wool and $2.92 for mutton, or $4.38 for the whole, yielding a profit of $1.60 per head. The merino flocks cost, per head, about $2.44 for maintenance and return $1.88 for wool and $1.07 for mutton, making a total of $2.95 for the whole yield per head, showing a profit of only $0.51. These figures demonstrate conclusively, to my mind, that the western and middle western sheep growers must give their attention more closely to the development of a sheep which will be of increasing value for mutton purposes and having the wool yield as a by-product.

There is also another significant fact in connection with this industry, which shows that the sheep grower is becoming more interested in the mutton product than in the wool product, and this is shown by the fact that there is an increasing demand for lambs for feeding purposes from the large flocks of the West. The farmers of the West, particularly from my State, Colorado, are realizing the increasing value of lambs fattened in the late winter and early spring months. With the large crops of alfalfa and the nearness of our feeding grounds to the great cornfields of Kansas and Nebraska, there is a great incentive to the enlargement and development of this industry. Colorado lambs have sold at prices never dreamed of on the Chicago market, and there is no reason to expect that there will be an overproduction in the supply.

When flock owners are willing to part with their lambs to the extent that has prevailed in our section of the country, it proves clearly, to my mind, that the matter of the price of wool is of very little concern and can affect the industry only in an incidental manner.

There is no reason for the statement of our Republican friends that the industry in the Middle West will be seriously affected by free wool. On the contrary, I believe that when the sheep owner in that section of the country realizes the possibilities of large returns from the mutton product, that he will more and more turn his attention to this phase of the business and his profits will be much larger than at the present time.

There is also good reason to accept the prediction that the price of wool will not materially decrease, even under the removal of the tariff duty, as the world consumption is increasing at an enormous rate and there is not a corresponding increase in production. The people are demanding better clothes, and there is an increasing demand for legislation which will require the using of pure materials in the manufacture of cloth. While the removal of this duty may not have very much effect on the price of cloth, we do expect that the clothing which we buy will be made of better cloth, and the purchaser will receive more for his money in the quality of his goods than in any material reduction in price.

Notwithstanding the high protective tariff our domestic production of raw wool in 1912 only exceeded our imports by a little over a hundred million pounds, showing that the American manufacturer has been obliged to pay the high duty in order to secure sufficient wool to supply the needs of the country.

There is an ever-decreasing production of wool per capita in this country, and the Department of Commerce figures show that there are to-day 803,000 less sheep in the country than there were in 1903.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do not see how any student of this question can fail to realize the injustice of retaining a duty on raw wool.

I append, as a portion of my remarks, the following tables, which I have received from the Department of Commerce, which show the number of sheep of shearing age in the United States on April 1 of the years 1903 and 1912; the production of wool, washed and unwashed, for the same years; and the value of the wool production for the same years:

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have taken up the time of the committee on various occasions at some length in the discussion of the question of sheep and wool, and I would not impose upon the patience of the committee further at this time if it were not for the very great importance of the wool and sheep industry not only to the people whom I represent but to the country at large.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE], who just took his seat, has suggested that, at any rate, this is a waning industry. His philosophy is, I suppose, "it is going down the hill anyway; let us give it a kick." That seems to be one of the theories on which this bill has been drafted. If you have an industry that is not doing very well, just put it out of business. On the other hand, if we have an industry that is doing well, your theory is that it is getting altogether too saucy. Just kick it around a little, and have it understand that the Democratic Party does not propose to have any industry growing too vigorously, becoming too important in this country of ours. So they catch them a-comin' and a-goin'.

Now, it is my opinion, from a considerable study of the wool business—and I never grew very much wool or raised very many sheep, but I have made a study of the industry—it is my opinion that no great nation, situated as we are, can be permanently as prosperous as it ought to be without a wool and a sheep industry.

Gentlemen believe in free wool because they say they want to make clothing cheaper. Yet they insist, on the other hand, that it is not going to reduce the returns of the sheep grower. Now, one of those propositions or the other may be true. They both can not be true. The fact is, I think, that neither one of them is true. Free wool will not materially or appreciably reduce the cost of woolen cloth or woolen goods in this country. On the other hand, free wool will very greatly injure the wool-growing industry.

That may sound paradoxical, but it is absolutely clear to one who understands the condition of the business. With the opportunity of the free importation of wool the price of wool will be reduced in this country enough that, with the exception of the neighborhood of the great markets, where large mutton sheep may be successfully grown, the industry will be very greatly depressed, and the number of sheep in the country will be largely reduced. But the reduction in the cost of wool in woolen garments would be so infinitesimal that no final or ultimate consumer, with the largest magnifying glass he can obtain for the purpose of finding the reduction of the cost of living you are promising him, will ever be able to find it. You can destroy the wool industry, and you will destroy or very greatly diminish it under free wool, without helping any American citizen in the cost of his clothing to an extent that will be appreciable.

My good friend from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] says that if we can not grow sheep of the merino strain, let us grow the mutton sheep. As a matter of fact, the gentleman ought to know—he says he understands the business—that in the range country, with unfenced pastures, we can get only so far from the merino strain until we get a sheep that is not gregarious, that will not herd successfully in large flocks in the open.

Furthermore, the sheep of merino or part merino blood is more hardy and adapts itself better to range conditions than any other sheep. If this were not true, however, it is very doubtful if in the range country a big sheep of the very coarse wool varieties could be grown more profitably than sheep of some merino blood, and for many reasons which I have not the time to state. It will, in my opinion, be a sorry day for the country when we do not have a large sheep and wool industry. I do hope, for the sake of the woolgrowers, that the present shortage and consequent high prices abroad will keep prices up even under free trade, but eventually we must suffer greatly in the industry under free wool and free mutton.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Mr. Chairman, we have been greatly edified by the speeches of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], with his stentorian voice, has probably in recent campaigns against Democratic tariff reductions fairly scared the sheep of his district to death; that is probably one of the contributing causes of the diminishing sheep herds in the State of Ohio. My friend from Wyoming does not speak quite so loud, but even more to the point. He is afraid, or at least he says he fears, that free wool is going to destroy the industry of raising sheep in the United States. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], after listening to my remarks the other day—and he is one of the most intelligent men in this assemblage or any other—actually professed to believe that I admitted the same thing, that free wool will destroy the industry of raising sheep in the United States. Of course, the whole burden of my argument was to the contrary, and I know the gentleman from Wyoming in his heart of hearts agrees with me.

Mr. MONDELL. Do not let the gentleman lay any such flattering unction to his soul.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. The trouble with the gentleman from Wyoming is that he is afraid that free wool will not hurt the sheep raisers of his State, and then where will the protective argument be? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I misapprehend what the gentleman from New York said, but I am quite sure that the gentleman from New York misapprehended what I said.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. That may be true. I consider that the argument made a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] presented the case clearly. Thirty years ago there were more sheep in the United States than there are to-day, and the protective tariff has not kept the flocks of sheep in our country from greatly diminishing in the last 30 years.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I decline to yield to the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, the protective tariff did not keep the sheep in Massachusetts; the protective tariff did not keep the sheep in New York; it did not keep the sheep in Pennsylvania; it did not keep the sheep in Ohio. There are less than 3,000,000 sheep in Ohio to-day, and 30 years ago there were over 5,000,000 sheep in Ohio. The fact is that the farms have so increased in value through higher forms of agriculture that they have driven the sheep out to the semiarid lands in the Rocky Mountains.

I believe I said the other day that sheep raising for mutton would keep the sheep herds alive in the United States. So far as growing sheep for wool is concerned, I think it is an economic crime to tax the people of the United States on their woolen clothes and blankets for the sake of keeping a fictitious protection on the remaining sheep in our country.

Gentlemen are arguing that because we put wool on the free list we ought to put woolen clothes on the free list. The Democratic Party, gentlemen, did not build up the protective system, but it is taking it down. We have reduced raw wool from 45 per cent to the free list, and we have reduced woolen clothing from an average of 94 per cent to 35 per cent, a much greater proportionate reduction than we made on raw wool.

I do not like tariffs. I believe they are a burden upon the public. I think they are an injustice to the people of our country, and I think they are a wrong to the manufacturers as well. But we can not put all of the articles carried in the tariff on the free list at once. My contention is that we have made a deeper cut in woolen goods than we have in wool, and I believe that the gentlemen who are moving, as did the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], to put woolen clothes on the free list are actuated by a spirit of pique or irritation because our party has put wool on the free list. I believe, as I said the other day, that free wool is the greatest achievement of the present tariff bill I think so not only for economic reasons, but because I believe it spells the doom of the system of protection in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a little time for the purpose of calling attention to a letter which is among the thousands of letters that I have received protesting against the features of this bill from the enacting clause to the end of it. It comes from the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' Association, and is signed by the officers of that association. They give the information that a large majority of them are lifelong Democrats. They say they have all been engaged in the shep-raising industry, but some of them say they have not for the past few years, intimating they quit about the time Prof. Wilson's free-wool bill came out in 1894. They say that under the present pasturage system, if they could have assurances of protective tariff remaining on wool and no agitation—intimating from the Democratic Party—about free wool, they could raise and support 40,000,000 sheep in the State of Texas. I do not suppose these people know anything about it. They are Democrats. They have been there in the sheep business all of their lives up to a few years ago, when they were driven out, and still I suppose their information is not worth anything to the other side of the House. They are not confined exclusively to goats, and not being so confined, those gentlemen over there would not take their opinion on the subject of wool. I shall print the letter in the RECORD as a part of my remarks without any further reference to its contents, but I want all of you gentlemen to look for it in the RECORD, and to read it, for it is worth while. It gives opinions and the facts from men who know about the business, and who are so disinterested that they have voted the Democratic ticket all of their lives.

I want to correct one or two mistakes that my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made the other day about the wool proposition which I introduced. He says that because there is a greater duty on the wool content in clothes than there is on wool in the grease, that that duty goes to the benefit of the manufacturer. I do not believe my friend from Alabama really means it. If he does, I feel sorry for him. I feel sorry for him anyway if he said it and did not mean it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman had read the RECORD he would see that I did not say that.

Mr. PAYNE. In either horn of the dilemma I feel sorry for him. He knows that the difference in duty put on wool in the grease and upon the wool in the garment is because it takes more wool to produce a pound in the garment than it does to produce a pound of the wool content in the grease, and if he will examine the Tariff Board report—if he will read something besides the title-page and look over the first page—he will find this problem is carefully worked out. The Tariff Board not only shows the amount of wool it takes for a pound of wool in the finished garment, or in a yard of cloth, or in any quantity of cloth, but it shows what becomes of the waste and what is the value of the waste; and from the facts and figures given in the report we are able to say exactly what will compensate for the duty on the wool. There is not a penny of concealed duty in this whole schedule which I presented which will go at all to the benefit of the manufacturer. The only protection the manufacturer gets in it is the ad valorem duties, that are carefully worked out with each process of manufacturing from beginning to end, and which on the lower grades are lower than those put in the bill reported by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TEXAS SHEEP & GOAT RAISERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Antonio, Tex., April 9, 1913.

Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE,
Member of the Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have read a considerable portion of the arguments made before your committee on 27th and 28th of January (hearings on Schedule K, wool and manufactures of wool) in favor of free wool, or in support of a 20 per cent ad valorem rate of import duty on wool. And while we accord to the witnesses entire sincerity in their beliefs in the opinions they expressed and assertions they made to your committee bearing on the sheep industry, relative to the needs of the industry, the cause of the increase and decrease of the sheep stock of the United States during the last past 50 years, it causes us very great regret to know that gentlemen who occupied most time discussing the subject made numerous assertions to your committee that compel us to believe that their knowledge of the business of sheep raising in the trans-Mississippi States is wholly superficial, and that their statements and assertions concerning the business are erroneous, misleading, and valueless to your committee in forming its conclusions as to the recommendations it should make to Congress concerning the wool-growing industry. Speaking to you as members of the executive committee of the Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers' Association, each of us having had from 25 to 45 years' practical personal knowledge of the business of sheep raising in Texas in no small way, and having a superficial knowledge of the business throughout the United States, and some of us not having owned a sheep in the past several years, and our committee being composed of Democrats and Republicans of lifelong political affiliation, the majority of this committee being of lifelong Democratic political affiliation, each and all having only a desire for the welfare of our country as a whole, and all concurring in the views herein expressed, we have to advise you that any serious departure by Congress from the conclusions compelled to be drawn from the report of the Tariff Board as to the rate of import duty that should be levied on wool in order to something near equal the difference between the cost of producing wool in this country and in competing countries will have a disastrous effect upon the sheep industry in Texas and of the United States as a whole.

Replying to the inquiry as to the cause of the failure of the farmers and ranchmen to maintain the 47,274,000 sheep in the country in 1893, we have to advise you that the recommendation made by President Cleveland in May, 1893, that raw material, which was considered as embracing wool, be put in the free list, and enacting the Wilson tariff law in 1894, admitting wool free of import duty, caused the business of wool growing to become so unprofitable that the sheep stock were sent to the slaughterhouses and neglected to such an extent that the Democratic Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Morton, reported the country as possessing only 36,819,000 sheep on January 1, 1897. During the free wool years, 1895 and 1896, the records show that wool sold in the producing markets for about or less than one-half the prices obtained for the same class of wool during several years last preceding the adoption of the free-wool policy. It is unnecessary to recite here the ruinously low prices for which choice flocks of sheep were sold during the free-wool years by reason of the disastrously low prices of wool, and the bankrupt condition to which a large percentage of former owners were reduced. The hereabove stated statistical facts, with the natural inferences to be drawn therefrom, supply all necessary evidence as to that feature of the case.

The 23 per cent decrease of the sheep stock during the application of the free-wool policy, as shown by the above statistical statements, which decrease occurred most largely in some of the best breeding districts, Texas, for example, decreasing her stock by more than 38 per cent, as shown by our State comptroller's reports, left the country at the close of the free-wool policy with her numbers of female sheep so depleted that it has been impossible for the farmers and ranchmen to supply the demands of the people of the United States for mutton and make more than temporary increase of the depleted numbers. While Government reports show an increase of the 36,819,000 at close of the free-wool policy in 1897 to 39,852,967 sheep of shearing age in 1900, the latter number being the census report, the census report of 1910 shows 39,644,046 sheep of shearing age. The decrease that has occurred in recent years comes of the increased slaughter of sheep for domestic consumption, and especially the increased consumption of lambs of 3 to 6 months of age.

Our country possesses all the conditions requisite to enable it to successfully sustain such number of sheep as would be necessary to supply all the clothing wool required by treble the present population. Texas alone has the capacity to successfully sustain, under the pasture system which she is now adopting, thirty to forty million sheep, and in our opinion would, in reasonable length of time, come to possess that number, if assured of an import duty on wool something near equal in amount to the difference between the cost of production in the United States and in competing countries. In addition to producing such necessary supply of clothing wool, a stock of sheep of such numbers would be of inestimable value as a necessary aid to maintaining the fertility of the soil of the farms of our country.

The striking off of the present 1½ cents per pound import duty on fresh meat, admitting mutton from Argentina, New Zealand, and Australia free, would also have a severely detrimental effect on the sheep industry, as it is from the sale of mutton, in addition to the fleece, that the farmer and ranchman is enabled to remain in the business of sheep raising, receiving only small compensation for his labor and money invested in same.

The frequent recurrence of the agitation of a free-wool policy deters tens and tens of thousands of farmers and ranchmen from engaging at growing sheep. The sheep industry is conducted on such small margin of profit that any serious decrease of the amount of import duty levied on wool that the Tariff Board's report shows should be levied to equal the difference in cost of production here, and in competing countries will affect the industry disastrously, particularly the merino flocks of the trans-Mississippi country, and especially the flocks located in the semiarid Southwest, and cause the present rate of decrease of the sheep stock to be rapidly increased, causing a still greater shortage in the necessary meat supply of our country, especially of mutton, which is the healthiest meat, and equally as nutritious as beef.

We further wish to call your attention to the exhibit on page 4071, in part No. 20, entitled "Number of sheep in Australia, 1891 to date," which shows the fact, astounding to the unacquainted, that the sheep-stock of Australia, the greatest wool-growing country of the world, decreased from 106,421,068 in 1891, to 72,040,211 in 1901, and from 72,040,211 in 1901, to 53,668,347 in 1902. While the report does not show that the disastrous decrease was caused almost wholly by death from starvation, caused by drought, nevertheless drought was the cause. The facts shown in that statement, showing the sudden decrease in the sheep stock of Australia, should be sufficient to warn Congress and the people as a whole of the danger from allowing the United States to fail to become self-supplying of her necessary quantity of clothing wool.

We earnestly solicit your influence to defeat any proposition by Congress looking to a serious departure from the convictions herein expressed.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. SCHIEMER,
President Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers' Association.
ALFRED GILES, Secretary.
B. L. CROUCH,
JAMES MCLYMONT,
GEO. RICHARDSON,
Executive Committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] can not understand that he talks in the language of protection while I talk in the language of taxes. I had the Tariff Board's report before me the other day, and referred to the provision to which he referred when the matter was under discussion. I said that his rate made the relative taxes as high as ours does, and it does, practically. Whether he has given it for protection or some other cause is a mere incident to the man who has to pay the tax.

In his bill, by reason of the increased rate he places on wool, the tax rises to about the same amount as that in ours, when the value of the raw wool is excluded. Now, it is not necessary to discuss the question of free wool or taxed wool. The Republican Party is in favor of taxed wool; the Democratic Party has declared itself in favor of free wool. The issue is clear. Some gentlemen have criticized me personally because I brought in a taxed-wool bill last year and am standing for a free-wool bill this year. As I said the other day, when I brought into the House a bill levying a tax of 20 per cent on raw wool, it was done for no reason except to get revenue. We did not have the right at that time to levy an income tax. Conditions have changed, and we have the right to-day to exercise the privilege of levying these taxes wherever we think they will bear most lightly on the consumer. The gentleman from New York has introduced a bill that taxes wool. We have introduced a bill with free wool. Our relative rates on the manufactured article are not far apart. On the average, the rates of the gentleman from New York are higher than ours, but when he adds the compensatory duty for taxed wool he about doubles our rate. I think—I am speaking from memory—that his tax on woolen clothes is something like 70 per cent; ours, 35 per cent. Now, no one can deny that the consuming public must pay that difference, and yet it does not benefit the manufacturing people. They are not interested in it. The only issue is whether it is necessary to place that great tax on the American people to preserve the sheep industry in America.

Now, the gentleman says he has letters from sheep growers that say it is necessary. Why, I could take him to my office and show him many letters that I have received from people in the sheep industry who say it is not necessary. So there you are. You can take either side and either witness you want, but I will place on the stand a witness that the world knows about and one that you can not deny. No one can deny that there is a great sheep industry in the British Isles. No one can deny that there is free wool in England. No one will deny that the competition in the English markets is and always will be greater than in American markets, because the great steamship lines carrying transportation go directly from Argentina and Australia into their ports and do not come as a rule directly into ours. So there are cheaper freight rates on wool from Australia and the Argentine going to the English markets than to the American markets. Land is many times higher in England and Scotland than it is in this country, and yet under those circumstances the sheep industry of Great Britain has not only prospered but grown and flourished. Now, I admit that there are some parts of the far West where they probably can not grow sheep for mutton, but I also point to the fact that in that portion of the far West the Tariff Board report shows that in many of those States the cost of raising these same sheep is as low as it is in Argentina and in Australia.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman name those States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will put it in the RECORD, it is not in Wyoming. I notice by the report that in Wyoming it costs nearly double what it does in your neighboring States. Now, I do not know whether that is caused——

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, that is what the report says. I pointed out here last year that it costs a great deal more in Wyoming than in Nevada or Washington. Now, whether the report was doctored or whether there are bad business methods in Wyoming I do not know, but I do know in many of these Western States the Tariff Board report shows that the actual cost of raising sheep is as low as it is in the competitive countries. The Tariff Board report shows that the State of Washington has no net charge against wool, the cost of production being met by receipts from other sources. The net charge per pound against wool shown for Nevada was 4$\frac{1}{10}$ cents and that of Wyoming 12$\frac{4}{10}$ cents. In Australia the cost was "a few cents a pound" and in South America "4 to 5 cents."

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not yield. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to be impolite, but I will have to conclude.

Now, when you eliminate that western country, where I contend and believe earnestly they can preserve these flocks for wool purposes as well as they can in the Argentine—and when you come down to the middle western country, where they have a market for their mutton, there is no question but that the industry can thrive as well as that of Great Britain. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, is there a point of order pending from the gentleman from New York against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER]?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. I desire to withdraw the point of order, inasmuch as the substance is covered in another part of the bill. We might as well vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER]. In the natural order, amendments to perfect the paragraphs are in order before amendments to strike out the paragraphs. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. GOULDEN. May we have that reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that amendment again reported, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon, I would suggest that the amendment be modified to read "paragraph" where it now reads "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment as stated.

Mr. SWITZER. I will accept the suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment, so that it will read "paragraph" at all places where the word "section" appears. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 145.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to paragraph 653? If not, the next paragraph open for amendment is paragraph No. 657.

Mr. MOORE. I think there is some mistake here, Mr. Chairman. I made a reservation on paragraph 654 the other day, but apparently it has not been recorded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desires to offer an amendment to paragraph 654, and he states he gave the number to me the other day, but I did not get it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman what the amendment is.

Mr. MOORE. I want to strike out the paragraph. That, I think, is the easiest way of getting at it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have the opportunity to offer his amendment to strike out this paragraph, and that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes, the gentleman to control 5 minutes and I to control 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] may have permission——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was opening up this paragraph by unanimous consent for the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I do not want to get into a controversy about time with other gentlemen on that side.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, there is some error about it, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] evidently did not get this paragraph on his list.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania having his opportunity.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] wants an opportunity to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it is just an opportunity to debate that he desires, there will be a chance for him on the next paragraph.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I will wait until the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] be permitted to offer an amendment to strike out paragraph 654, and that the debate thereon be limited to 10 minutes, 5 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 129, lines 22 to 26, inclusive, by striking out the paragraph, which reads:

"654. Wool wastes: All noils, top waste, card waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, bur waste, thread waste, garnetted waste, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, carbonized wool, carbonized noils, and all other wastes not specially provided for in this section."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, under the existing law most of the articles enumerated in this paragraph were made dutiable. They included wool wastes, noils, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, and carbonized wool and carbonized noils. I emphasize the words "shoddies" and "mungo." They were made dutiable under the Payne law, although they had been partially free under the Wilson tariff law. In 1896, when the Wilson tariff law was in operation, these articles came in to the extent of 7,000,000 pounds, and if they had been left dutiable under the McKinley rates they would have paid a duty of $90,000. Under the Payne law the quantity of imports was considerably reduced, so that the duties collected were only about $8,800.

I call attention to this paragraph and move to strike it out for the purpose of discussing its effect upon the users of woolen clothing. As I understand it, most of the objections to the woolen industry in the United States arise from differences of opinion between various members of the trade. The worsted industry is presumed to be the industry which develops a pure woolen garment. Woolens and woolen fabrics which come under the denomination of "woolens" are those which are made of mixed materials.

Now, when the consumer buys a garment he ought to know whether it is all wool or whether it is mixed wool and something else. Under the existing law the consumer has a measure of protection in the duties that are levied upon imports of wool and upon rags and shoddies and these waste parts of wool and substitutes for wool that were worked up in this country as woolen manufactures.

It is reported in one of the papers this morning that it has been discovered that certain articles of wool and silk have been weighted down, and that the public has received what is substantially spurious material. People naturally complain if they are deceived by a retail dealer or by a wholesale dealer, and the consumer has the right to complain against the man who does him an injustice. But as the result of some of the "tricks of the trade," as they be called, general complaint is raised against the tariff barrier which protects the consumer himself against just such spurious commodities and wastes and shoddies as these to which I refer.

The lowering of the tariff wall against shoddies, against wastes, against rags must mean that an increased quantity of shoddies and rags and wastes will be available for those who desire to make them up with other materials and sell them to the public as pure woolens.

If an amendment were permissible to this paragraph, even though I have moved to strike it out, I might offer one that would provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should list these various imports so that those wastes and those rags and those shoddies which are intended to be used for manufacturing clothing might be distinguished from those other shoddies and wools and lower grades of materials that come into the country very largely for the manufacture of carpets and other articles than clothing. But I presume the committee would not accept any amendment, even though it were offered in the very best of faith on this question.

I call attention, however, to the opening that has been given here to those who want to put spurious goods upon the market. The opportunity is here given to those of you who want the consumers to receive garments cheaper than they have been receiving them heretofore, to protect them against a poorer quality. It may come to pass that we shall have to brand the goods that are sold hereafter as imported products, in order to save the consuming public from imposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph is 657. Are there any amendments?

Mr. MOORE. I made a reservation on 655.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not that marked, nor is it on any list that has been furnished to the Chair.

Mr. MOORE. "Works of art."

The CHAIRMAN. Paragraph 657 begins with the words "works of art."

Mr MOORE. And to 659.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has actual amendments, I think there is no difficulty about it.

The CHAIRMAN. All paragraphs from 655 to 659, inclusive, begin with the words "works of art."

Mr. MOORE. If 657 was given as the one against which I made the reservation, that is a mistake. Mine were 655 and 659.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Paragraphs 657 and 659 have been reserved.

Mr. MOORE. I might transfer this to 659.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no record of any reservation on 657.

Mr. MOORE. If unanimous consent can be given for me to offer this to 655, it will settle the question very quickly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well. I will not object, but I ask to limit the time for debate to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked to offer an amendment to 655, and that debate be limited to five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out paragraph 655.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the paragraph on which discussion was closed a moment ago because of the lack of time, I wish to add this, that I was leading up to the opening of the ports to various kinds of material, not only works of art, but shoddy and rags that come in to be used in the manufacture of clothing in this country. Such material as ought to go into the manufacture of carpet and baser materials does sometimes and will now unquestionably in very many instances enter into the manufacture of clothing for the poor, who will probably be called upon to pay the same old price which they have paid heretofore for better goods.

But with regard to works of art, I desire to say that here is an instance where it may be fair to differ from the provisions of the Payne law. I do not know how many of the gentlemen upon the other side, representing "the downtrodden" of the land, are interested in the works of art such as are provided for in these several provisions of the bill. I do not want to find fault with those who put the provision into the Payne law; they doubtless meant well, but when the provision was originally made it appeared that the desire was to admit to this country works of art which were productions of the "Old Masters," such as of course we did not have in this country, that might not only ornament the walls of our art galleries, but might be an inspiration and an education to the people generally. During the first year of this free "works of art" provision about $550,000 worth of works of art were admitted, but the importations grew so rapidly that during the operation of the Payne law fully $75,000,000 worth of them came into the country. I am quite sure they did not go upon the walls of the two-story houses. I am quite sure all of them did not find their way into art galleries nor into scientific nor educational institutions, but I am quite sure that the $75,000,000 that went out of the country to buy these so-called old masters and to pay foreign artists and picture brokers was a displacement of just that amount of money that might have been spent in the United States.

And in reference to this line of argument I want to say that during the last year of the Payne law, when the free list was running fairly free to those who have wanted to avail themselves of it, more than $881,000,000 worth of foreign material came into the United States, and that by the same token $881,000,000 good American dollars went out of the United States and was spent in foreign lands. During the operation of this free-list provision of the existing law, from the time it was enacted down to the close of 1912, more than $3,000,000,000 of American money went out of this country for the purchase of goods abroad.

But if these possible loopholes exist in the present law, it must be observed that the present bill extends the free list greatly. It proposes to put certain raw materials upon the dutiable list and thus penalizes the producer in this country, while it proposes to raise more revenue by reducing the duties upon manufactured articles and works of art. And an extended free list will thus take out of this country American money that ought to have been spent here. The bill proposes to do this in larger volume than it has ever been done before. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph is 657. Is there any amendment to that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to close the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as we draw near the close of the portion of this bill relating to tariff duties, it becomes highly important that we shall consider the amount of importations that will be increased by its enactment. It is a singular feature that, as the debate on this bill has progressed, not one of the gentlemen who have had it in charge has been willing to state on this floor the extent to which it is expected American goods will be displaced by those imported from foreign countries under its provisions.

It is true there is a report presented along with the bill, and on page 35 we find some estimates given as to what they expect the additional importations will be, but this table is entirely worthless for that purpose.

When, two years ago, they introduced in the House a wool bill providing for a duty of 20 per cent on raw wool, at that time they estimated the additional importations of raw wool at $19,000,000. Just before this session, when it was expected that the rate in this bill would be 15 per cent on raw wool, they issued a handbook with the estimate contained in it that the additional importations of raw wool would amount to $27,000,000. And now in the table they have here in the report presented with this bill, which provides for raw wool, they estimate practically no increase in importations of raw wool. Mr. Chairman, this is simply absurd.

The amount of wool imported last year was about $33,000,000. Two years ago it was $47,000,000 in value, and it is only something like thirty-three millions that they estimate will be imported under this bill, now that it is put upon the free list.

The total amount of additional importations of all kinds, as near as I can gather from the table, and as estimated therefrom by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], is about $185,000,000; an amount, however, that is far too low. I think anyone would be safe in estimating it at $250,000,000 instead of the amount stated in the table. At this time I wish to congratulate my friends on the other side and the people of this country in general upon one further branch of their program. It is currently reported that the President of the United States and some one or more of the Ways and Means Committee have in mind—as they begin to see and to be aware of the terrible effect upon our industries of the staggering blow they propose to administer by the bill—have now in view some kind of a change in our currency laws in order to prevent the panic which they expect will arise as the result of its enactment. I think it is very well that the gentlemen should prepare something of this kind.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the addition of seventy millions of goods imported from abroad under the sundry list—will that tend to produce a panic? That will help, unquestionably. Will the addition of twenty-six millions under the metal schedule assist in producing a panic? Will the $6,500,000 more on the earthen and glass ware schedule help to produce a panic? Will the nineteen millions added under the chemical schedule help to produce a panic? Will the $4,000,000 more under the pulp importations help to produce a panic? Will the $10,000,000 under the silk schedule help to produce a panic? Will the $50,000,000 increase under the wool schedule help to produce a panic, the $12,000,000 under the cotton schedule, and the $11,000,000 under the agricultural products—will they all help to produce a panic, with the $6,000,000 under the sugar clause besides? These are their own figures, taken from their report. The figures are far too small, but even these taken together are enough to blight our industries, destroy credit of our merchants, and inevitably bring the panic on which they themselves are getting ready to meet and which they must meet. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk to have read resolutions unanimously passed by the Passaic (N. J.) Board of Trade on April 23, 1913, and sent to the President of the United States and the Senators and Congressmen from that State. I will state that Passaic was carried in the last election by President Wilson.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the city of Passaic, N. J., is a manufacturing city, with woolen, cotton, handkerchief, chemical, metal, and paper industries, representing an aggregate investment of $50,000,000 and giving employment to 20,000 men and women, with an annual pay roll of $10,000,000, and furnishing trade and livelihood to a total population of 60,000, most of whom are absolutely dependent upon the prosperity of the industries mentioned; and

Whereas the above-mentioned industries have forwarded to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States briefs setting forth the fact that the proposed changes in the tariff affecting these industries will inflict serious injury upon them, and through them upon their workers and the numerous tradespeople, mechanics, and other workers dependent directly and indirectly upon them for their living; and

Whereas the Board of Trade of Passaic, representing all the interests of that city, has carefully examined the briefs submitted by the various industries and found them correct in every particular, does unqualifiedly state that the prosperity of Passaic is vitally connected with a proper adjustment of those schedules of the proposed tariff bill which affect the industries of the city; and

Whereas the harm caused by insufficient tariff rates in depriving many of the city's workers of employment will be greatly aggravated by the fact that many of these workers have purchased their own homes and are gradually paying for them and are entirely dependent upon the prosperity of the local industries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this board does hereby unanimously and emphatically indorse the aforesaid briefs submitted by the industries of Passaic, copies of which are attached hereto, and urges upon its Senators and Representatives the necessity and obligation of presenting to their respective bodies with all the force and eloquence at their command the needs of the city's several industries and the interests of its workers, as set forth in the briefs submitted; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Finance Committee of the Senate, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House, as well as to each Senator and Representative of the State of New Jersey.

C. F. H. JOHNSON, President.

Attest:

R. E. LENT, Secretary.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the committee has added a new section to the present law to admit free to this country works of art. Prior to the act of 1909 works of art were admitted on a duty of 20 per cent. In the Payne law there was an exemption made which provided that works of art over 20 years of age should be admitted free. In the Wilson bill art was on the free list. The section which we have added here, section 655, is a new section, and it provides that works of art and certain sculptures may come in free. Schools, libraries, and churches will benefit greatly by this change in the law which will permit the free admission of paintings and sculpture. American art does not need protection against what is bad, and it should not ask protection from what is good. It is the duty of the Government to encourage art, not to tax it. Ours is almost the only civilized country which taxes art, which is invariably encouraged. A regard for education should prevent a tax on knowledge. At present only the old masters and works of art that are over 20 years of age are free. These works of art are the most expensive and high priced, and it is to extend the power to purchase to the persons of lesser means that all art is admitted free. It is in accord with Democratic principles to allow foreign works of art to come in free. All art should be stimulated and improved by the provisions of this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman in 1890 in the Fifty-first Congress I had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. I there advocated this same proposition which the gentleman has put in this bill, of putting works of art on the free list. The result was that a majority of the Republicans on that committee, including the honored chairman, Maj. McKinley, were in favor of the proposition, and we put it into the bill as it went to the House. It was afterwards eliminated by the Senate, and in order to get an agreement, we left it out.

Mr. PETERS. We welcome the gentleman to our point of view.

Mr. PAYNE. On the contrary, I welcome the gentleman to my point of view. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, before we pass from this section, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the American Institute of Artists has not protested against the passage of this section, and have they not frequently done so in their resolutions?

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I think the American artists as a whole are rather anxious to have foreign works of art come in to be used for educational purposes in this country. I am not aware of any American association of artists having protested.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman is correct in this, that American artists are not opposed by any means to the introduction of real works of art, but it occurs to me that the language of this section is such that it would permit in competition the things that are sold in the picture stores that could by no stretch of the imagination be considered works of art. Those things ought not to be permitted into this country because they depreciate the work of our artists and discourage them.

Mr. PETERS. Not at all. It is so worded as not to admit commercial art free. Printing from plates or blocks or engraved by mechanical process. The American artists should not be protected from what is good, and should not need protection against the bad.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. Are there further amendments to paragraph 657? If not, the next paragraph open is 659.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has stated that 659 is the next paragraph. I am quite sure I made a reservation of 658.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not; but if he desires to offer an amendment, I do not think there will be objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that paragraph 658 is not on any list which has been furnished to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman an amendment to offer to 658?

Mr. MOORE. Yes. At the time these numbers were taken there was confusion, and I suspect that the gentleman from Illinois did not get all of the numbers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I got all of the numbers which the gentleman gave, but there is no objection to the gentleman having an opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to offer an amendment, I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to do so, and that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto shall be concluded in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state, in justice to the Chair and to those at the desk, that three lists were made at the time this unanimous consent was being granted. A list was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], a list was made by a gentleman at the desk at which the chairman of the committee, Mr. UNDERWOOD, sits, and a list was made here. Those three lists were carefully compared and the bill marked and furnished to the Chair from those lists, and all paragraphs that were included in any of those lists were sent to the Chair. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to offer an amendment to paragraph 658, and that general debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 132, line 12, after the word "institution," strike out the word "including" and insert the word "excepting."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the offering of this amendment in relation to stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows answers the question which has been just raised as to whether American artists or artisans are interested in this sort of production. There are American workmen who make stained or painted window glass or stained or painted glass windows who come in direct competition with these manufacturers of "old masters" on the other side. I think any man who has been on the other side once is aware of the fact that a great many "old masters" and a great deal of "Dresden ware" and a great deal of "Parian ware" and pottery and porcelain are stuck upon Americans at very large prices. They would come in under just such a paragraph as this, and they take out good American money that has been earned in the United States by the sweat of some one's brow. It is good money that goes across the seas, and it brings back stuff that may be genuine or that may be spurious. There is so much Parian ware, so much pottery, so much porcelain, that the wonder is where it all came from and where the "old masters" existed who produced it. It is a fact also that certain stained-glass windows have been coming into the United States, and they have been brought in here upon the pretense they were for religious purposes, but in bringing them in we have deprived American workmen of the chance to make such articles. I deny that there are not artists in the United States capable of doing such art work as the United States requires. I do not deny that there are certain Titians and other antiques which command a high price; but the rich only are able to buy them. I contend that if a man has made a million dollars or a hundred million dollars in the United States, and then takes it over to the galleries of Venice or Rome or Paris or London or to private dealers in those places, it is not unfair they should pay a duty upon these "old masters" they bring into the United States. Are you ready or is the committee ready to assert that these "old masters" are all for use for educational purposes, that they all go to public libraries, that they all go into institutions where the plain people can see them and use them; or is it not a fact that the only men who bring these "old masters" into the United States are the men who are amply able to pay for them, and are not the men who earn their daily wage making stained-glass windows or painting pictures to sell in the United States? In the interest of the labor employed in making stained-glass windows in the United States I hope the amendment will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments on paragraph 658? If not, the next paragraph is 659.

The Clerk read as follows:

659. Works of art (except rugs and carpets), collections in illustration of the progress of the arts, works in bronze, marble, terra cotta, parian, pottery, or porcelain, artistic antiquities, and objects of art of ornamental character or educational value which shall have been produced more than 100 years prior to the date of importation, but the free importation of such objects shall be subject to such regulations as to proof of antiquity as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the usual motion to strike out the last word, and I wish to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], by the RECORD of this morning, appears to have asked a question. I did not understand that I had left it unanswered. I will answer the question now. The question was, whether I would vote for a tariff board to pass upon matters of this character, and so forth. I will say that if it came up in that shape I would vote against it for this reason: I believe that the Representatives should be as near to the people and as responsive to their will and as close to them as you can get them. I would vote to recall Congressmen and for the right to recall within 30 days. Now, just a word in regard to what has taken place here covering this bill.

I wish to say that the committee has given the boot and shoe industry better conditions than it had before under the Payne Act. When you take into consideration the lower duties of the 30 different articles, they are better off financially than they were with the 10 per cent duty under the Payne-Aldrich Act. And seemingly many articles in the bill have been treated as carefully and as painstakingly as the boot and shoe industry.

But for some reason important industries have been disregarded and do not appear to have been given that intelligent treatment that other articles have. Now, the cotton schedule, for reasons that I can not explain and seemingly the committee can not explain, has been most brutally treated in the opinion of the one who now has the floor. When you take the greatest industry possibly in this country, with one exception, seemingly with only a horizontal reduction, without going into the matter of the cost of labor in Europe or the cost of material or the reason why they can send upward of $60,000,000 of products into this country, and we should then reduce them 21 per cent flat, I can not understand.

Again, I hold in my hand here a dispatch from a constituent of mine, or one of his establishments, relative to another product that has been taken care of, I think, unintelligently—I will not say viciously. The gentleman who had it in charge I do not see present. It has reference to one of the ferro alloys—ferromanganeses. I will say at the outset that this dispatch is from the Crane Valve Co., and Mr. Crane was the largest contributor to the Wilson presidential campaign fund in the last election. [Applause on the Republican side.] Of course, the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee may say to this establishment the same as he says to everyone else who happens to oppose him or his bill, that they belong on the other side. I believe the President is about to send the head of this establishment, Mr. Crane, a Republican, from this country as ambassador to the Russian Government.

Possibly the President will think as to this great contributor and his interests that the proposed tariff will not affect any honest business, and maybe that hand that comes, as it did in the matter of the sugar schedule, bringing relief and free sugar to the people, may right what they claim is an injustice to a great industry that must buy its materials right. Referring to ferromanganese, the dispatch says:

We hope you will use your influence to make such changes in the new bill as will prevent a higher duty than $2.50 a ton.

For reasons that time only will explain, the committee has made that duty $9 or $10 a ton.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Are there any further amendments to the paragraph?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I simply would like the floor in order to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] a question, if he would kindly answer.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER. What is the name of the gentleman who sent the telegram? I did not catch it.

Mr. DONOVAN. It is sent by the Crane Valve Co., of Bridgeport, Conn. Mr. Crane of the concern is the gentleman who was the largest contributor to the Democratic campaign. I will give you his language exactly, although probably I am imposing upon the House. He says:

Such an advance would be disastrous to the independent steel companies and savors very strongly of a Steel Trust scheme to put the independents out of business.

That is signed by the Crane Valve Co., and Mr. Crane is the man who is going to be sent as an ambassador to Russia.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the gentleman one more question in my time?

Mr. DONOVAN. Delighted.

Mr. MILLER. Is it anticipated by the present administration that this gentleman being put out of business and his factory closed down and his employees out of work, he will have sufficient leisure so that the best compensation to give him is to send him as ambassador to Russia, where he can spend his leisure time?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would suggest that the gentleman, when he gets on his knees this evening, commune with the Divine Being. He might be able to answer him. [Loud laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that completes the reading of the section. If so, I move to close debate on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Wait a moment. Do not move to close debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought they were through.

Mr. MANN. We may have some amendments to come in section 1.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell you my purpose in rising was to ask unanimous consent to change the numbers. On account of one paragraph being stricken out of the bill, it is necessary to renumber the paragraphs in section 1. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may renumber the paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may have permission to renumber the paragraphs in section 1 of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, Mr. Chairman, although under all the parliamentary practice that is the duty of the Clerk now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama before the question is acted upon if he has accepted any amendment to this bill from the Republican side?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not; the House has not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Without objection, the pro forma amendment to paragraph 659 will be withdrawn. Are there further amendments to paragraph 659?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in as a separate paragraph after section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] offers an amendment to come in as a separate paragraph at the close of section 1, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PAYNE offers the following as a new paragraph to section 1:

"That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the Tariff Commission, which shall be composed of five members, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members first appointed under this act shall continue in office from the date of qualification for the terms of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from and after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1913, the term of each to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall designate a member of the commission to be the chairman thereof during the term for which he is appointed. Any member may, after due hearing, be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. Not more than three members of said commission shall be members of the same political party. Three members of said commission shall constitute a quorum. The chairman of said commission shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum and the other members each a salary of $7,000 per annum. The commission shall have authority to appoint a secretary and fix his compensation, and to appoint and fix the compensation of such other employees as it may find necessary to the performance of its duties.

"That the principal office of said commission shall be in the city of Washington. The commission, however, shall have full authority, as a body, by one or more of its members, or through its employees, to conduct investigations at any other place or places, either in the United States or foreign countries, as the commission may determine. All the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the members or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigations, or upon official business in any other places than in Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the commission. Should said commission require the attendance of any witness, either in Washington or any place not the home of said witness, said witness shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"That it shall be the duty of said commission to investigate the cost of production of all articles which by any act of Congress now in force or hereafter enacted are made the subject of tariff legislation, with special reference to the prices paid domestic and foreign labor and the prices paid for raw materials, whether domestic or imported, entering into manufactured articles, producers' prices and retail prices of commodities, whether domestic or imported, the condition of domestic and foreign markets affecting the American products, including detailed information with respect thereto, together with all other facts which may be necessary or convenient in fixing import duties or in aiding the President and other officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, and said commission shall also make investigation of any such subject whenever directed by either House of Congress.

"That to enable the President to secure information as to the effect of tariff rates, restrictions, exactions, or any regulations imposed at any time by any foreign country upon the importation into or sale in any such foreign country of any products of the United States, and as to any export bounty paid or export duty imposed or prohibition made by any country upon the exportation of any article to the United States which discriminates against the United States or the products thereof, and to assist the President in negotiating trade agreements with foreign nations and other administrative provisions of the customs laws, the commission shall, from time to time, make report, as the President shall direct.

"That for the purposes of this act said commission shall have power to subpœna witnesses, to take testimony, administer oaths, and to require any person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association engaged in the production, importation, or distribution of any article under investigation to produce books and papers relating to any matter pertaining to such investigation. In case of failure to comply with the requirements of this section, the commission may report to Congress such failure, specifying the names of such persons, the individual names of such firm or copartnership, and the names of the officers and directors of each such corporation or association so failing, which report shall also specify the article or articles produced, imported, or distributed by such person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association, and the tariff schedule which applies to such article.

"That in any investigation authorized by this act the commission may obtain such evidence or information as it may deem advisable, for its confidential use, and in case the evidence or information is so obtained, said commission shall not be required to divulge the names of persons furnishing such evidence or information: Provided, That no evidence or information so secured under the provisions of this section from any person, firm, copartnership, corporation, or association shall be made public in such manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival.

"That said commission shall make reports to Congress of its investigations, including an annual report and such special reports as the President or either House of Congress may direct. Said reports shall be printed as public documents. Ten thousand copies of the annual report shall be published and ready for distribution on the first Monday of December of each year.
